ON BOARD THE DIRIGIBLE NORGE, passing over France, April 10.—After a successful hop-off from the Ciampino Flying Field at 9:30 o'clock this morning, the Norge followed the Appian Way to Rome, with the Norwegian tricolor flying from the topmost point of the ship in honor of our leader, Captain Roald Amundsen.

Proceeding at an altitude of 800 meters we could see the huge crowds packed in the narrow streets of Rome, all waving a farewell to our expedition, the first of its kind to start for the North Pole.

Our ship was accompanied by a guard of honor consisting of two airplanes. They followed us until we passed over St. Peter's and the Vatican Gardens. Then, as we headed toward the sea, they turned and flew back to the Ciampino Airdrome.

When we passed over historic St. Peter's, the largest church in the world seemed to be but a small speck. As we flew over the Vatican Gardens the Pope probably watched us fade into the distance, although at our height we could not actually identify his figure.

Feel Spirit of Explorers.

We saw the cupola of St. Peter's gradually disappear in the smoke over the town. Then, with a last look upon the Holy City, which the crew left with the spirit of explorers advancing upon a vast unknown world, we headed for the blue Mediterranean. It soon appeared upon the horizon, and we reached the coast at 10:15 A. M.

Colonel Nobile, constructor and first pilot of the Norge, decided to fly to the north end of the Isle of Corsica and from there along the French coast, where we had arranged to receive weather reports upon which we would base our decision whether we would descend at Cuers, near Toulon, or continue the flight direct to Pulham.

All of our instruments are in excellent working order, tests during the flight having proved their high quality. Colonel Nobile inaugurated our wireless transmission service, sending a message to Premier Mussolini, who is on board the warship Conte di Cavour bound for the Italian possessions in Africa.

ROCHEFORT, Sunday, April 11.—The polar dirigible Norge, making fast time, flew over the Rochefort Military Aviation Centre at 12:30 o'clock this morning, and after exchanging wireless messages with the French commander, Colonel Nobili, announced his intention of proceeding direct to Pulham without stopping on French soil. The weather bulletins which the Norge had been receiving throughout the trip were satisfactory enough to decide the commander that the prospects of crossing the Channel early tomorrow morning were excellent.

The equipment and engines of the dirigible were reported to be operating perfectly.

All preparations had been made at Rochefort to accommodate the Norge and everything was in readiness for a night landing if it was deemed necessary. Two hundred men were on duty at the barracks on the field and a huge mast was ready to tie up the dirigible. Searchlights were in readiness to flood the field, while radio operators picked up several messages as the giant gasbag approached, hovered over and then passed Rochefort Center.

The lighted cabins and the motor exhausts were clearly seen from the ground.

Nobile Warned of Bad Weather.

PARIS, Sunday, April 11.—When Commandant Trolly de Prevaux of the Cuers Airdrome received word from the Norge that it was going to Rochefort and perhaps to Pulham, he wirelessed back that conditions were fair and soon afterward the airship was reported over Marseilles flying in a straight line for Rochefort. Messages between the Norge and the British Air Ministry were also picked up, indicating that Colonel Nobile planned going direct to Pulham instead of stopping in France.

A message from the Norge at 7 o'clock last night said she was running west of Marseilles and everything was running well. Then when Colonel Nobile wirelessed that he intended to proceed direct to Pulham, the French warned him that the weather had been reported bad on the south coast of England and advised routing by Rochefort. The Norge's commander replied that he would do so. A mooring mast and full landing crew were held in readiness at Rochefort.

Everything had been in readiness throughout the afternoon to receive

Calls Cancer Non-Contagious After Experiments on Himself

BERLIN, April 10 (AP).—Cancer is not contagious when brought in contact with a healthy human body, in the opinion of Dr. Hans Kurtzahn of the surgical clinic of Koenigsberg University.

Dr. Kurtzahn has astonished a convention of German surgeons now in session here by reporting that he had experimented on himself, transferring a patch of cancerous growth from a patient's pectoral gland to his own thigh. The cancer cells, he reported, soon died, being unable to live in a healthy body.

In an effort to test whether cancer could be cured through a serum, Dr. Kurtzahn also extracted blood from himself after an injection of cancer bacilli. He reported that he had found negative results in the serum made from this blood.

The experiments, which were made five months ago, left Dr. Kurtzahn perfectly healthy. The German physician's willingness to experiment upon himself in the study of cancer has been acclaimed by his colleagues as an act of rare heroism.

PRESIDENT TUAN DEPOSED IN PEKING

Coup at 2 A. M. Also Releases Ex-President Tsao Kun and Calls Wu Pei-fu to Power.

CHANGE IS BLOODLESS

Tuan's Guards, Deprived of $350,000 by Him, Submit Quietly to Kuominchun.

PEKING, April 10 (AP).—Marshal Wu Pei-fu, leader of the Chihli Party, ousted from control of the Peking Government a year and a half ago by Marshals Chang Tso-lin and Feng Yu-hsiang, once more dominates the capital of China.

A bloodless coup d'état, carried out early today by leaders of the Kuominchun (national armies), formerly followers of Marshal Feng, placed Chief Executive Tuan Chi-jui under restraint, freed his predecessor, former President Tsao Kun, and called Marshal Wu "to restore the political situation" in Peking.

Thus Wu is able to return to the capital, backed by his own Hupeh army and acknowledged as chief by the Kuominchun, the creation of his bitter enemy, Feng, whose leadership the National Army Generals no longer admit. Feng is believed to have retired to Urga, Mongolia.

The coup means a complete realignment of the forces striving for mastery in Northern China. It breaks the anti-Kuominchun alliance between Wu and Chang Tso-lin and his Manchurian-Shantung armies. While the Kuominchun hold Peking, backed by Wu's army on the south and southwest, the Manchurian-Shantung forces, presumably hostile to the new combination, threaten the city from the east and northeast. In view of the strength of the Wu-Kuominchun alliance, Chang is not expected to take the offensive soon.

The turnover is the outgrowth of negotiations carried on for the last week between the Kuominchun leaders and Marshal Wu, who, with the Hupeh army with which he has advanced from the Yangtse River in the last two months, has been awaiting the expected call at Paoting-fu, eighty miles southwest of Peking.

Tuan's Guards Easily Disarmed.

The coup was carried out quietly at 2 o'clock this morning. The bodyguard of the Chief Executive was disarmed without a struggle and submitted to being transferred to the southern part of the Imperial City, where the members were enrolled in the Kuominchun.

The defection of this force, which was Marshal Tuan's chief reliance, is explained by the fact that 500,000 taels (about $350,000) recently made available by the Diplomatic Corps to pay the guard and Peking police, is alleged to have been retained by the Chief Executive.

Secrecy surrounded the preparations. The great gates which pierce the massive walls of Peking were closed late last night, the telephone service was cut off and the residence of the Chief Executive surrounded by the Kuominchun troops.

The delegates to the extraterritoriality conference, including Silas H. Strawn, the American delegate, were turned away by Chinese pickets when they arrived this morning at the building in the Imperial City designated for HAVANA, April 10.—A false alarm spread by Spanish language newspapers opposing foreign banking interests caused a momentary panic in Havana and the island interior today and a run on all banks, especially the Royal Bank of Canada, which the reports falsely represented as having suspended payments.

The false version was readily accepted by thousands owing to the financial depression the country is experiencing and soon the doors of all the Royal Bank branches in the island were beseiged. Women and workingmen were in the majority. In a few hours there was a rush to every bank in the city, hundreds of excited men and women demanding their savings.

The scenes in the days of 1919 when sugar dropped from 23 cents to 2 cents a pound were as nothing compared to those in the Havana streets this morning.

President Arrives on Scene.

When the clamor was at its height, however, a dramatic event occurred which did much to restore the confidence of the public. President Machado, accompanied by Secretary of Justice Barraqua and Carlos Miguel de Cespedes, Secretary of Public Works, arrived at the main branch of the Bank of Canada at 11 o'clock. With great ostentation the Chief Executive deposited $100,000.

Then addressing the fearful depositors, who by this time had filled all the streets leading to the bank, he condemned severely the run on the bank, qualifying the reports that had started it as unfounded and absurd. He followed this up by announcing that he with his personal fortune would aid the bank and that if this were not enough $40,000,000 in the National Treasury was at the disposal of the Canadian institution.

The words of the President had an immediately tranquilizing effect, many depositors putting their passbooks in their pockets and going home.

A similar example was set by Secretary Cespedes at the Banco del Comercio. When he alighted from his car consternation struck the crowd. "He has come to take out his money!" was shouted, as hundreds made a rush for the doors of the bank.

The Secretary held up his hand for silence.

"You are wrong," he told the crowd. Then, taking from his pocket $200,000 in $1,000 bills, he counted them aloud and deposited them in the bank.

The effect was magical, and the people began to disperse without withdrawing their funds.

Not satisfied with having stopped the run at the Canadian Bank, President Machado summoned the members of the Havana Clearing House, of the Sugar Mill Owners and Planters' Association and the newspaper reporters to the Executive Mansion for a conference.

The members of the Clearing House, headed by Don Narciso Gelats, were the first to be received. They informed the newspaper men that they had been favorably impressed with their interview with the Chief Executive and that the bankers were not alarmed, all banks being in good shape.

Sugar Men Make Suggestions.

The representatives of the sugar mill owners and planters then conferred with the President. According to Chairman Martinez they suggested two solutions of the sugar crisis problem. One was to limit the present crop by 10 per cent. of the estimated output. The other was for the Government to buy half a million tons of sugar and withdraw it from the market. Both measures, designed to bring about an immediate rise in sugar prices, will be discussed at a Cabinet meeting on Monday.

The newspaper men were then received by the President, who stated

24 Votes Cast in Election In State's Smallest Village

GLEN COVE, L. I., April 10.—Centre Island, occupied by the Sewanhaka Corinthian Yacht Club and the smallest incorporated community in the State, had an election today.

Only 24 votes were cast. Nelson B. Burr was elected Village President, George Bullock and Franklin Remington, Village Trustees; William H. Nicholas, Treasurer; Marshall Clark, Collector.

Most of the residents and club members are wealthy New York business men. The President and Trustees will meet Tuesday at 1 P. M. at the Union League Club, Manhattan, to perfect a permanent organization. A Clerk, Street Commissioner and Village Attorney will be appointed.

L. I. TRAINS CRASH IN BROOKLYN; 50 HURT

Work Cars Back Into Passenger Local Standing at Nostrand Avenue Station.

TWO VICTIMS LIKELY TO DIE

Prosecutor Orders Foreman and Conductor of Work Train Held for Investigation.

Two men received injuries probably fatal and about fifty other persons were slightly hurt last night when a Long Island Railroad work train backed into a crowded six-car passenger train at the Nostrand Avenue Station in Brooklyn.

The crash produced great excitement. With screams of frightened women and children mingling with the groans of the injured, it was necessary to call out police reserves from seven precincts to restore order.

One of the men who was expected last night to die—Anthony Beulck of Jamaica—was pinned amid twisted steel and debris for nearly an hour, and three-quarters while firemen and policemen worked with acetylene torches, axes and hooks to get him free. A doctor gave him stimulants and a Catholic priest heard his confession and gave him the last rites of the church.

Several hours after the crash, District Attorney Dodd ordered the arrest of Bernard Krause of 10,409 Ninety-fourth Avenue, Richmond Hill, a foreman on the work train, and Walter J. Thompson of 14 Samuel Court, Jamaica, its conductor. The two motormen involved were not held.

Train on Wrong Track.

The work train consisted of four steel passenger coaches on the rear with three flat cars ahead. It had been on the westbound tracks near the Nostrand Avenue station, unloading ties for the structure, which is elevated at that point. In order to allow trains bound for the Flatbush Terminal to pass by, the train was run back to a cross-over. While Conductor Thompson threw the switch on the westbound track, Foreman Krause threw the one on the eastbound. The train ran across the centre to the eastbound track, went ahead for some distance, and stopped.

The passenger train left the Flatbush terminal at 10:12. It pulled into the Nostrand Avenue station a few minutes later. Passengers were discharged and some were taken on. Then Motorman Louis aRndell, seeing the cross-over switch light set against him up ahead, proceeded slowly to the east end of the platform and stopped.

Just then the work train started back. Motorman Cooke intended to send it back over the crossover switch, so that the passenger train could pass. Krauss said the switch was thrown to ensure this. But when the work train backed up, instead of leaving the eastbound track at the switch, it kept on straight down the track toward the standing passenger train.

Motorman Randell saw it coming and gave a blast of his whistle. Motorman Cooke, too, saw that his train was on the wrong track, but in trying to run from the centre car, from which he was operating it, he slipped and fell. Before anything could be done the rear car of the work train smashed into the front car of the passenger train.

Impact Heard for Blocks.

Motorman Cooke said that his train had been traveling at only fifteen miles an hour, but the impact with which his rear car hit the passenger train was heard for blocks around. The sudden crash broke many windows in the passenger train and knocked people to the floors.

Strangely enough, Motorman Randell, in his cab on the front vestibule, escaped serious injury. Neither was that part of the front passenger car badly damaged. But the heavy impact telescoped the rear part of the first car and the front of the second.

Bauick, seated in the front of the second car, was caught when the cars telescoped. Edward Nowak of 9,215 114th Street, Richmond Hill, who was seated nearby was thrown to the floor so heavily that his spine was fractured.

In the two front cars and in cars further back flying glass cut many persons. Others received wrenched legs, arms and wrists and many were hurt. Alarms were sent in at once to Police Headquarters in Brooklyn. All available ambulances were hurried to the scene. Beside the reserves, Police and Fire Department Rescue Squads were sent there, as well as several fire companies.

Nowak and others near him were caught for a time in the debris, but were carried out by firemen and policemen. The rescue squads went to work

Schoolgirl Shows No Signs of Acid Burns That Delayed Court Summons.

MET AT SORORITY DANCES

Wealthy Realty Dealer Divorced First Wife—Had Vainly Tried to Adopt a "Cinderella."

Edward W. Browning, 51 years old, the wealthy real estate dealer who nearly adopted Mary Louise Spas of Astoria last Fall, was married to his new Cinderella, Frances Heenan, a fifteen-year-old schoolgirl, by a Justice of the Peace in the little village of Cold Spring, in the township of Philipstown, Putnam County, across the Hudson River from West Point, yesterday afternoon.

The girl's mother and father, who are separated, were present at the wedding and gave their consent to the marriage of their daughter.

The wedding party, consisting of Browning, his girl bride, her parents, three other men and two women, appeared at the plumbing shop of Gilbert Forman, who is also the Town Clerk, shortly after 3 o'clock. In their affidavit supporting the application for a marriage license the girl gave her address as Cold Spring and it was then said that for the last few days she has been living in a fifteen-room house on a two-acre estate that Browning has leased for a year.

Court Had Called Mother.

Three days ago when Frances and her mother were summoned to the Children's Court on the complaint of Vincent J. Pizarro, Superintendent of the Society for the Prevention of Cruelty to Children, their attorney presented a certificate signed by Dr. Howard [illegible] Fifty-fourth Street stating that the girl was unable to be moved from her home at Isle Gardens, 425 West 109th Street, because of burns suffered when some one mysteriously threw acid on her face and arms. The complaint alleged that Mrs. Heenan was not a fit person to be the child's guardian. The case was adjourned for a week.

When Frances tripped into the dingy plumber's shop, littered with pieces of pipe, tools, tinware and other appurtenances of the trade, she did not appear to bear any visible evidence of the mysterious burns. She was smartly dressed in a Spring suit of blue and wore a blue hat.

Browning, garbed in a light business suit, stood by her side as she answered Forman's questions. When he came to the line on the application which called for the address of the bride Frances replied, "Cold Spring."

Forman nodded approvingly. He knew that she lived there, for a few days ago he had received the contract to renovate the plumbing and install new fixtures so that the place would be suitable for the occupancy of a millionaire and his bride.

He Was Once Divorced.

The girl said that it was her first marriage, and Browning said that he had been married before, having divorced his first wife in Paris in 1924 after it is alleged she had eloped with a dentist.

After Forman issued the license the party walked across to the office and garage of Ray W. Christian, who, in addition to being the owner and chauffeur of the village taxi service, is also a Justice of the Peace. There the marriage ceremony was performed. The party then drove to the estate leased by Browning, which, he says, they will occupy for a year.

Forman said that he understood that the Heenans, mother and daughter, had been "around Cold Spring for some days."

It was learned, however, that Mrs. Heenan arrived in Cold Spring alone by train late on Friday night and took possession of the house that had been leased from a woman who is now residing in California. Early yesterday morning, before daylight in fact, a large truck bearing the sign of a New York City trucking firm, drove up to the house and the driver and helper unloaded a collection of furniture. Later in the day Mrs. Heenan was joined by Frances.

Forman Says He Got No Tip.

Forman said that Browning merely paid the $2 license fee set by law, but did not offer him any gratuity for his services.

CANADIANS ADVOCATE CONTROL OF LIQUOR AS SUREST MEANS TOWARD TEMPERANCE; TELL SENATORS OF DOMINION'S SYSTEM

Wets to Let Dry Women Be Heard Tomorrow; Will Resume Their Testimony on Tuesday

WASHINGTON, April 10 (AP).—A week's drive against the Volstead Act before a Senate committee was wound up today by the wets with the testimony of former Canadian officials as to improved conditions in Provinces which have turned away from prohibition, and with further demands of labor leaders for legalized beer.

Although the wets still have eleven hours of actual hearing time remaining in which to complete their case, they consented to give way on Monday to the drys, who desire to put on the stand several women in attendance at the Woman's National Law Enforcement Conference, which will open here tomorrow.

The wets will resume their presentation Tuesday, and when they are through, probably the last part of the week, the drys will reply.

Mrs. Henry W. Peabody of Beverly, Mass., one of the leaders of the Law Enforcement organization, said today that their witnesses before the Senate committee would present the views of nine national affiliated women's organizations with a combined membership of twelve million persons.

The report of the commission of churchwomen of all denominations will be presented at the opening of the conference tomorrow afternoon, and tomorrow night Mrs. Helen Barrett Montgomery of Rochester will lead a national prayer service. Mrs. John D. Sherman, President of the General Federation of Women's Clubs, will then report for the Commission on Law Observance.

President Coolidge will receive the conference Tuesday. In the line of visitors will be many women nationally prominent in club and political life.

HE WED MRS. GOBEL; HELD AS BIGAMIST

Dr. S. J. Reid, Husband of "Sausage King's" Widow, Arrested at Her Country Home.

ACCUSED BY HER SON-IN-LAW

Her Brother-in-Law Furnishes the Bail—Defendant Said to Have Had 2 Wives When Wed.

Special to The New York Times.

TRENTON, N. J., April 10.—Dr. Sigwart J. Reid, who two years ago married Mrs. Adolph Gobel, widow of the Brooklyn "sausage king," was arrested this afternoon at the estate of his wife at Annandale, about fifteen miles from here, on a Federal warrant obtained in Washington recently by United States District Attorney Albert D. Smith charging him with bigamy. The warrant was issued on the complaint of Captain Claude Earle Moore, a son-in-law of Mrs. Reid. Dr. Reid, who said he was an architect and sculptor when he married the widow of the "sausage king," was released in $10,000 bail when he was arraigned this evening before United States Commissioner Richard S. Wilson here.

Charles Gobel, brother-in-law of Mrs. Reid by her first marriage, furnished the bail. Commissioner Wilson announced that he would hold a hearing on the charge on April 19. United States Marshal Woodbury B. Snowden of Trenton said that United States District Attorney Smith probably would demand the delivery then of Dr. Reid to the Washington Federal authorities to face the bigamy charge.

His Wife is Angry.

Captain Moore, it was understood, alleged in his complaint that Dr. Reid, under the name Josef Rittmyer, had a wife and several children when he married a second woman in Chicago under the name Reed. It was also alleged that Dr. Reid had not been divorced from either his first or second wife. Dr. Reid and his wife, who accompanied her husband and her brother-in-law from her country estate at Annandale when Deputy United States Marshal George G. Winner started for Trenton with his prisoner, expressed indignation over the bigamy charge. The prisoner said that he would prove his innocence.

Captain Moore and his pride of less than a year, a daughter of Mrs. Reid, were present when Dr. Reid was arrested by the Deputy Marshal in the old Gobel country residence at Annandale. They were said to have aided considerably in obtaining the evidence on which the Washington prosecutor obtained the bigamy indictment and

SEIZE $400,000 PLANT IN BIGGEST RUM RAID

Dry Agents and Police Uncover Seven Big Stills and $200,000 Alcohol in Woodside, L. I.

RADIO MESSAGE GAVE TIP

Detectives Hid in Cemetery to Get Evidence for Seizure—Manager and Aid Are Held.

As a result of an intercepted radio message, Federal agents and police of the Special Alcohol Squad, led by Chief Inspector William J. Lahey and Inspector Frank J. Hale, effected yesterday at Woodside, L. I., the biggest seizure in the history of prohibition enforcement in this district, they said. They raided the Woodbine Manufacturing Corporation, on Betts Avenue, near Queens Boulevard, arrested the manager and an employe and seized seven stills, together with alcohol and equipment valued at more than $400,000.

In addition to being equipped with complete radio sending and receiving sets, the officers said, the manufacturing plant, a four-story brick building, which was formerly occupied by the Consumers' Brewing Company, housed three stills of 5,000 gallons capacity each, two of 3,000 gallons capacity, two others of 1,200 gallons capacity, a large number of telephones believed to be, in some instances, private wires, a complete redistilling, bottling and capping outfit.

The largest still seized up to yesterday in this section of the country was that of the South River (N. J.) Chemical Corporation, which was a single still with a capacity of 4,000 gallons. "Mannie" Kessler, so-called "King of the Bootleggers," pleaded guilty in connection with the South River case.

Two Men Arrested.

The men arrested at the Woodbine plant said they were Philip Rosso of 48 Forty-eighth Street, Brooklyn, manager and chemist, and Gus Pisano of 1,113 Fifty-ninth Street, Brooklyn. They will be arraigned before a United States Commissioner in Brooklyn tomorrow.

The Woodbine Manufacturing Company is said to have held a permit for the withdrawal of large quantities of grain alcohol to manufacture ethyl acetate. That, according to charges made by the leaders of the raid, was practically no more than a ruse for obtaining alcohol which was redistilled at the plant and sold through bootleg channels.

The Inspectors and Federal agents would furnish practically no details of the interception of the radio message. They said only that it had been "picked up" three days ago and that it had been of a character to awaken suspicion. As a result, it was said, Detectives Charles Beakey, Thomas Lyons and Harry Singer of the Special Alcohol Squad were assigned to investigate the plant.

Hide in a Cemetery.

Just across the street from the plant is Calvary Cemetery. There, it was said, the three detectives spent Friday, Friday night and a part of yesterday in hiding behind tombstones and even in open graves. From these vantage points they were able to see every one and every truck arriving at or leaving the plant. They did not tell the details of what they had seen, but said merely they had discovered sufficient "evidence" of illegality to warrant the raid.

The stills were running full blast, the raiders said, and the entire plant bore evidences of great activity. The alcohol seized is estimated to be worth at least $200,000 and the equipment $200,000 more. Arrangements were begun for conveying the alcohol to the Army Base in Brooklyn and for the destruction of the stills tomorrow.

BOOTLEGGERS DRIVEN OUT

Stavert and Russell Testify to the Falling Off in the Use of Hard Liquor.

MORE LABOR MEN HEARD

Sullivan and Woll Express Alarm at Hip Flasks Among the Young People.

Special to The New York Times.

WASHINGTON, April 10.—The first week of wet and dry hearings before the Senate Committee on Judiciary came to an end today when those who are urging the modification of the Volstead law called to the stand Sir William Stavert of Quebec and Francis William Russell, President of the Moderation League of Winnipeg, who testified as to the working of the Government controlled and operated liquor stores in various Provinces of the Dominion of Canada.

There can be no question as to the success of the Canadian experiment, both of these witnesses declared, which they said had brought a decrease in crime and a corresponding increase in temperance among the people generally.

Matthew Woll, Vice President of the American Federation of Labor, and John Sullivan, President of the New York State Federation of Labor, also were called. Mr. Woll testified that intemperance in the ranks of labor is increasing and that as a result of an experience that takes him everywhere in the country, and among all classes of people, he was prepared to charge that prohibition enforcement officers have become "agents provocateurs," while bribery has become a fixed practice and is no longer considered "one of the most detestable of criminal offenses."

Says Labor Is Resentful.

"Congress, when it enacted the Volstead law, converted a federated form of government into a legislative oligarchy and builded the foundation for millions of distilleries and breweries in the homes of America," said Mr. Woll. "President Wilson," declared Mr. Woll, "was fully aware of the 'dangers and evils' involved in the Volstead law, and had declined, when the bill went to him, to associate his name with anything so un-American in form and character."

The rank and file of labor, said Mr. Woll, entertain a much deeper resentment toward the Volstead law than against the Eighteenth Amendment.

Mr. Sullivan, testifying mainly as to conditions in New York State, painted a picture that corroborated the grave comments made by Federal Attorney Emory R. Buckner when he was on the stand this week. He told about dinner parties where the favors were dolls filled with whisky instead of sawdust; of laboring men coming to union meetings drunk, something, he insisted, seldom, if ever, happened in the "old days"; of women and girls who carry flasks laden with "moonshine," and of other conditions which he declared in the days before the amendment would have dumfounded the country.

Canadians Praise Their Plan.

Called as the first of the Canadian witnesses, Mr. Russell said that the Government control system had proved a miracle in Manitoba and that crime has so greatly decreased that there are some courts without cases, while so far as the prohibition practice, "B. Y. O. L.," which means "bring your own liquor," is concerned it is ancient history in the Provinces in which the Government system works.

Furthermore, Mr. Russell declared that the use of wines and beers by the people was increasing and the drinking of hard liquors decreasing. In Quebec, he added, the story is the same as in Manitoba and it is just as true of Saskatchewan and Alberta.

"In Quebec my information is that fully 80 per cent of the hard liquor that is sold in that Province is sold to Americans," said Mr. Russell.

"In Manitoba it is true we are still trying to get rid of some of the 'speakeasies,' or 'blind pigs,' which we inherited from seven years of prohibition," he added.

Cites Improved Conditions.

Asked as to the conditions that prevailed when prohibition was in force in Manitoba and other Western Provinces, Mr. Russell replied that in those days "more than half the people were in avowed, unbinding revolt against the law," while the Province itself was converted into a network of stills.

"It was the same in Saskatchewan and in Alberta," he declared.

Once when Mr. Russell said a case of liquor is the weekly limit per person

Five British Airmen Die as 2 Planes Crash At Height of 300 Feet and Fall in Flames

Copyright, 1926, by The New York Times Company.

By Wireless to THE NEW YORK TIMES.

LONDON, April 10.—The worst accident to the British Air Force since the end of the war occurred at Henlow Aerodrome in Bedfordshire today when five airmen lost their lives following a collision at a height of 300 feet between two airplanes, which afterward fell to the ground in flames. Those killed were two officers and three aircraft men.

Flying Officer Charles Lacey, with the three men, was flying a Vickers Vimy machine above the aerodrome, dropping dummy parachutes and descending to pick up another man to make a "live drop" in a parachute when the collision occurred.

A small machine piloted by Flying Officer William Scott, who had just taken off from the aerodrome, struck the larger machine underneath. Both machines fell and flames leaped up two hundred feet from their burst petrol tanks. It took a fire brigade half an hour to subdue them.

The machines were completely destroyed and the bodies of the airmen were unrecognizable.

Brown Fortune Goes to R. Fulton Cutting, According to Woman Who Was His Friend

LONDON, April 10.—The great wealth of McEvers Bayard Brown, the seventy-six American millionaire who died Thursday aboard his yacht at Wivenhoe, Essex, which had been his home for thirty-six years, is to go to Robert Fulton Cutting, another New York millionaire, it is stated.

This information is given to The Evening Mail today by a woman who says she was a personal friend of Brown.

"He made his will fifty years ago," she said, "and never altered it. All his possessions were left to his nearest relatives—cousins—but Fulton Cutting is the only one alive. Mr. Brown was fabulously rich. Everything he touched turned to money."

Robert Fulton Cutting said last night at his home, at 16 East Eighty-ninth Street, that the disposition of the estate of the late McEvers Bayard Brown was a "private affair." He refused to discuss it further.

Mr. Brown was a first cousin of Mr. Cutting and at one time had offices with him at 32 Nassau Street. So far as could be learned, Mr. Cutting is the only surviving first cousin of the port-bound yachtsman.

LUTHER BURBANK DIES AT SANTA ROSA

World's Greatest Breeder of Plant Life Was in His 77th Year.

BEGAN AS NURSERYMAN

Famous Burbank Potato Was One of Many Products of Countless Experiments.

SANTA ROSA, Cal., Sunday, April 11 (AP).—Luther Burbank, noted horticulturist, died at his home here this morning after an illness of two weeks. The end came at 12:13 A. M.

For two weeks the distinguished scientist has been ill at his home, with intermittent rallies and relapses. Nervous exhaustion complicated by heart attack caused his condition.

With Mr. Burbank were his wife and his only near relative, Mrs. Emma Beeson of Healdsburg, a sister.

Devoted Life to Plant Culture.

Luther Burbank, wizard of horticulture, upon whom was bestowed the tribute of being the greatest breeder of plant life the world has ever known, devoted his whole life to the cultivation of the soil, with such marvelous results that his success was frequently referred to as uncanny. The man who caused two blades of grass to grow where only one grew before had been pronounced a benefactor to the human race.

Mr. Burbank had nothing for sale; he was not a nurseryman, not a florist, not a seedsman, not a dealer, and not a raiser of any kind of plants or seeds for sale. He was the originator of new kinds of useful and ornamental trees, flowers, fruits, vegetables, grasses and grains.

Began Experiments at Early Age.

Mr. Burbank was born near the little village of Lancaster, Mass., March 7, 1849, and spent his boyhood days in this rural district on a farm. At a very early age he began his experiments with products of the soil. Many of his researches into the mysteries of plant life were said to have been conducted under unfavorable auspices at first, and his theories were considered visionary and were accordingly looked upon with disapproval. His early friends made efforts to turn his labors to more practical channels, and because of his persistence in his chosen field he was regarded by many as a harmless crank, doomed to a career with only insignificant results. His studies of horticulture did not interfere with his wider education, which he obtained by attending the Lancaster Academy, where, it was related, he was unremitting in his studies.

Upon the completion of his course he settled down as a nurseryman, a business which he ran for a number of years in his native village, ever carrying forward the experiments which he had begun toward improving the quality of his plants. He rapidly acquired a fund of useful knowledge in the line of his work. He paid a visit to California soon after to investigate climatic conditions and the soil, with the idea of removing to that section of the country. He finally located at Santa Rosa, Cal., near San Francisco.

Produces the Burbank Potato.

His first notable achievement came at the age of 22, when he produced the Burbank potato, an improvement on the ordinary tuber, which gained him some reputation and profit as he continued his propagation in California with excellent results.

The Burbank potato was soon recognized by the agricultural world as desirable, and it has since spread to every part of the earth, exerting a greater influence upon the food supply of humanity, probably, than any other single food plant. His work at this time was continuous and tireless, occupying fourteen hours a day on an average. He was working hard for a competency that would enable him to abandon the commercial side of his occupation and enter fully into the field of plant training, plant education and plant evolution. In 1890 his income was sufficient to enable him no longer to consider the multiplication of the fruits and flowers that already existed, but to develop better forms. A life of money-getting would have been intolerable to a man like Luther Burbank. Three of his 100,000 achievements made him famous the world over. The Burbank potato was said to have added $20,000,000 to the annual productive wealth of the United States, a very small moiety of which, it is said, reached the pockets of the propagator.

Another of his results is the stoneless plum, which science was convinced could not be produced and went to the trouble of informing Mr. Burbank of this, while the spineless cactus will provide meat and drink to the desert traveler and cause the wastes land to blossom as a flower. He created a new fruit, the plumcot—a combination of the plum and the apricot, and in adding to its flavor he turned the blackberry white. The vine of the blackberry has been stripped of its bristling thorns. He "put soul into a flower" when he gave fragrance to the calla; the transformation of the golden California poppy into a rose-color was the work of eight years.

Every one of Mr. Burbank's achievements had been given wide publicity because of the universal interest in the development and its success; but his failures, the work of hopes and years shattered in a second in some untoward way, were never told, while they brought with them an especial lesson. Appealed to by canners for a perfect canning pea, one maturing all its pods at the same time, Burbank filled the order after three years of breeding.

Plants Under Observation 35 Years.

Some of his plants, now famous, were under observation in his gardens for twenty-five years before being sent out to the world. His breeding ranged from flowers through a long list of fruits and vegetables up to the largest of forest trees. As his achievements multiplied some means of making them available to the world had to be considered. Mr. Burbank had not a commercial mind, and had little inclination for publicity, so the Luther Burbank Society, chartered by the State of California, and endowed by wealthy patrons, was formed to disseminate the knowledge worked out by the experimenter. His extensive gardens at Santa Rosa became in later years the most famous of the kind in the world, and are today the shrine of plant enthusiasts of every clime. Mr. Burbank was married to his secretary, Miss Elizabeth Waters, in San Francisco, on Dec. 21, 1916.

DENIES EGYPT REJECTS ROCKEFELLER OFFER

Cairo Government Organ Says Negotiations Over Terms Are Still Under Way.

CAIRO, April 10.—The Government inspired organ, La Liberte, states tonight that, contrary to published statements, in well-informed quarters it is believed that negotiations regarding the Rockefeller gift have not been broken off.

"The modifications which the Egyptian Government wished to introduce into the contract were not proposed in such a way as to be construed as a refusal of the offer," the paper says. "It is true Mr. Breasted appeared pessimistic and did not think Mr. Rockefeller would accept the modifications, but in that event it would not be a case of the Egyptian Government simply declining the gift.

"The question is a most delicate one. There are at stake inestimable treasures of a glorious past, and it is the Government's duty to take all measures to safeguard them. It is therefore only right that it should wish to secure for Egypt an equal number of members as Europe on the proposed council."

arranged with United States Marshal Snowden to identify Dr. Reid to the Deputy Marshal when the arrest was made.

Report of Another Warrant.

Adolph Gobel, eldest son of the "sausage king," also was reported as present when Deputy Winner started for Trenton with Dr. Reid. It was said that he and his sister and her husband, Captain Moore, who until recently was stationed at an army post in the West, had gone from the Moore home, at 129 Montague Street, Brooklyn, in the forenoon to cooperate with the Federal officials in the execution of the warrant.

It also was reported that another warrant based on the same bigamy charge was placed in the hands of Deputy United States Marshal Carmine G. Anzalone in Brooklyn several days ago, but when he went to the imposing home occupied by the "sausage king" at 279 Highland Boulevard, in the Highland Boulevard section of Brooklyn, up to the time of his death, he learned that Dr. Reid and his wife had left the day before. Dr. Reid had occasionally occupied the Highland Boulevard home with Mrs. Reid since their marriage. It also was learned that when he was unable to locate Dr. Reid the Deputy Marshal enlisted the aid of Detective John F. Rotchford of the Liberty Avenue Station in serving the bigamy warrant.

Opposed the Marriage.

The arrest of Dr. Reid on Captain Moore's complaint was the culmination of differences which arose between Mrs. Reid and two of her four children by her first marriage. Mrs. Moore and her brother Adolph, who is 21 years old and who recently, it was reported, was dismissed from employment in the sausage manufacturing plant in Brooklyn, were against the marriage to Dr. Reid, and soon after the return of Mrs. Moore from her honeymoon to California, Adolph and his sister were excluded from the mother's home at Highland Boulevard and in Annandale.

In the will left by Gobel, in which he disposed of his $2,000,000 estate, he stipulated that his son, Adolph, was to be made president of the Gobel sausage manufacturing corporation. Within the last year, however, Dr. Reid, it was said tonight, was elected president. Mrs. Moore then joined her brother, Adolph, in an attack on the settlement of the estate, but their two younger sisters, who are attending a boarding school up the Hudson, took their mother's side, and, on occasional visits to the homes in Brooklyn and in Annandale, evidenced approval of their mother's second marriage.

When Helen, the older of these two girls, was informed of Dr. Reid's arrest last night by a reporter for THE NEW YORK TIMES at the Highland Boulevard address, she said: "Oh, this will prove a terrible blow to mother. I had not known of it until now. I am so sorry. Dr. Reid has been so kind to mother, my sister and I. I don't know why my brother, Adolph, and my sister, Mrs. Moore, have permitted this disgrace to be brought on my mother."

Within the last year, when young Gobel was married, invitations were not extended to his mother and stepfather, Mrs. Moore, who was in charge of the wedding arrangements at the St. George Hotel in Brooklyn, admitted that she had withheld the invitations.

Mrs. Reid had learned of the arrangements for her son's marriage, however, and while the wedding party was in progress in the hotel she held a wedding party in her Highland Boulevard home, inviting hundreds of her friends and expressing pride in the large wedding cake which adorned the centre of the table at which the guests sat. Three of the guests were fatally injured in an automobile accident after leaving the Highland Boulevard home at 3 o'clock the following morning.

Mrs. Reid was reported to have met her second husband soon after the "sausage king's" death, when she employed him as architect and sculptor for a mausoleum she later erected to her husband's memory on her estate at Annandale. It was said that Reid previously had admitted being manager of the Parkway Studios at 1,351 North Clark Street, Chicago. It was said here tonight that District Attorney Smith in Washington has the address of Dr. Reid's second wife as 139 North State Street, Chicago.

BYRD ARCTIC EXPEDITION, ABOARD S. S. CHANTIER, April 10.—With New York well behind but with the memory of farewells still lingering in our minds, the officers and men of our expedition have turned their efforts toward making everything ship-shape.

The job was one for all hands. Not only did the crew and flying men turn to for the job, but so did the movie men, the meteorologist and doctors as well. The result was that very shortly all the stores were stowed and secured and sea events began to take on regular routine.

When the Chantier was anchored off Fort Hamilton last Monday while we were correcting our compasses, a motor boat containing a very attractive girl in black came alongside and asked for one of the officers. She was carrying a small package of clothes in her hand. It seems that she was a newspaper woman and wanted to stow away so that she could write up the expedition. She seemed quite disappointed when she was told this was no boat for women.

Crew Loyal and Devoted.

The outstanding fact so far is the extreme loyalty and devotion to duty of every man aboard. There have been several incidents to bring this forcibly to attention. Not the least of these is the sacrificial attitude of Supercargo Touchette. He was lowering a heavy case into the forehold, using only a small hand line to do so. The weight proved more than he expected, but, rather than let it drop and risk the chance of its falling on and breaking an airplane wing, which would have spoiled the chances of the expedition's success, he held on and succeeded in stopping the case a few feet above the wing, though in the effort his fingers were cut to the bones by the slipping cord.

As an ex-captain of infantry, who is with us as an ordinary seaman, said, such loyalty could not be bought.

All hands are still laughing at an ex-marine who was sent to me with the suggestion that my mail be gotten ready. This because the next mail buoy was being approached. He went to other officers with the same suggestion. Eventually, of course, he discovered the hoax and joined in the laugh at his own expense. The big point, however, is that he was eager to do anything no matter how small for the benefit of his shipmates.

The unaccustomed ones are learning rapidly. The ship officers have entered into the spirit of venture and are doing all they can to instruct the greenhorns. It will be only a few days before they will be as good as the oldest sea dogs along.

Fine Weather in Prospect.

We seem to have run out of a fog which has enveloped us for the past few hours and, with the glass holding steady, look forward to fine and pleasant weather. This will afford opportunity for all to enjoy a much-needed rest.

The ship's pets and mascots, Felix, the cat, and Ingloo or Frosty, the dog, have been a source of constant amusement to all. Felix demonstrated his nine lives by jumping down a sixty-foot hatch and alighting unharmed. Ingloo has investigated the phonograph and toy goat in the most laughable manner. These two pets, it is safe to assume, will be claimed on our return by every member of the party.

Those of you who sit as I write and hear as I hear music being broadcast from New York will understand when I say the radio is one of our greatest comforts. In our saloon we hear the familiar voices of our favorite announcers. It is hard to realise that we are hundreds of miles from New York and bound for the frozen North. It makes us feel more closely tied to our friends who wished us godspeed on our journey.

AMATEUR GETS BYRD RADIO.

The first news of the Byrd Arctic Expedition since it left here last Monday on the Chantier came to THE NEW YORK TIMES yesterday in a message picked up by Louis Bose Jr. 18 years old, a member of the American Radio Relay League, who maintains an amateur radio station in an apartment at 1,239 Franklin Avenue, the Bronx.

Young Mr. Bose said that he had heard the operator on the Chantier testing an experimental set on a 40-meter wave length several times in the past week and that shortly before dawn Friday he decided to call him. The Chantier replied, and, after a little chat in Continental code, sent Commander Byrd's story of the inception of the expedition. Due to a misunderstanding on the part of a telephone operator, the radio did not reach THE TIMES office till yesterday.

Although Mr. Bose's station is almost entirely home made, it is one of the most efficient in New York, having been heard, as postcards covering the wall of the room testify, in every State in the Union and in every continent except Asia.

So well do the signals from 2CJJ—the call letters assigned to him by the Department of Commerce—carry that Mr. Bose was able to keep in touch with the Rice expedition while it was several hundred miles up the Amazon River in South America. On another occasion he communicated with the Norwegian whaling ship Sir James Clark Ross when it was off Cape Horn.

Mr. Bose said that he had arranged with the operator on the Chantier to exchange messages regularly every morning at 9 o'clock.

Ralph Venegas, owner of an amateur station at East Hampton, L. I., it was learned, has a similar arrangement for every evening at 7:30. He said that he had handled messages from Commander Byrd to John D. Rockefeller Jr., Edsel Ford and Vincent Astor, financial backers of the Byrd expedition, and also to Mrs. Byrd.

Mr. Venegas is chief operator at the East Hampton station of the Independent Wireless Telegraph Company, but due to interference on commercial wave lengths, he said, the latter station had been unable to maintain reliable communication with the Chantier.

NORGE SETS OUT ON ARCTIC VOYAGE

the Norge at Cuers, a small field 100 miles waiting in front of the huge hangars which once housed the ill-fated French airship Dixmude. Commander Mascerini, the Italian Attaché here, was prepared to go at a moment's notice by airplane to Cuers.

At the St. Cyr Flying Field, on the outskirts of Versailles, a landing crew is also being held in readiness in case the Norge should elect to stop there.

TOULON, April 10.—The Norge passed slightly south of here at 5:30 P. M., flying in a westerly direction. Previously the airship had wirelessed the Cuers Aviation Centre that it would not halt there but would continue in the direction of Rochefort on the Bay of Biscay and perhaps, if conditions were favorable, would continue on to Pulham in England.

However, the Commandant at Cuers ordered a crew to remain on duty all night on a chance that the dirigible might find it necessary to put back.

Although Cannes had a good view of the Norge, the inhabitants of Toulon were disappointed. Thousands of men, women and children craned their necks in public squares and other points of vantage in the hope of getting a glimpse of the airship, but only a few persons, who happened to be cruising in Toulon harbor, saw it as it passed many miles away. Thousands along the Riviera had a good view of the airship as it flew at a comparatively low altitude along the Mediterranean coast in the afternoon.

CHERBOURG, April 10.—The French Naval Station here is in readiness to lend any needed assistance to the Norge, which is expected to pass here on the way to Pulham, England.

Throughout the night the wireless station will remain tuned in on the 900-meter wave length being used by the apparatus on board the dirigible.

Vice Admiral Marguerye has ordered six airplanes to be in readiness for any possible use in connection with the Norge's flight.

Start Is Made in Perfect Weather.

ROME, April 10.—The dirigible Norge, to be used by the Amundsen-Ellsworth-Nobile expedition on its flight across the North Pole from Spitzbergen to Alaska, started at 9:20 o'clock this morning for Pulham, England, on the first stage of the long journey to the Arctic.

The airship circled slowly over Rome at a very low altitude under the direction of Colonel Umberto Nobile, the pilot and co-leader of the expedition, and then, in the cloudless morning sky made for the coast, which it will follow as far as Marseilles, afterward striking inland, headed toward England.

It was a perfect day for the beginning of the flight. The sun burned down out of a blue sky and only a slight cool wind, which had shifted frm due south to northwest overnight, drifted the ship slightly from its course.

Nothing could have been in greater contrast to the ice-bound little island far up in the Arctic Circle which is the immediate objective of those on board. Leaving here, they wore only linen overalls over ordinary light suits, but as they go further and further north they will don heavy underwear and fur-lined flying suits, for the cabin of the dirigible is at the same temperature as the wind outside.

Throngs Halt City's Traffic.

Throughout the morning traffic was tied up in the streets of Rome, as every one stopped to gaze upward at the gray cigar-shaped ship while it circled over the city, and to wave their last farewell as she dipped once or twice in salute to her birthplace. It is doubtful if she will ever return, for even if she weathers the Arctic, she is no longer Italian property.

An impressive good-bye was said to the Norge at the Ciampino Flying Ground, along the ancient Appian Way, which, centuries ago, witnessed the passage of the proud Roman legions of Constantine, the first Christian Roman Emperor, the same legions which took sixty days of forced marches to cover the same ground which the Norge proposes to travel in but twenty-four hours.

High State officials motored out to do honor to those men of Italy who make up part of the crew, mostly mechanicians, and to wish the best of luck to every one aboard from the giant, Lieutenant Riiser-Larsen, the second pilot and second in command, to the smallest Italian mechanic who wiped his oily hands on a piece of cotton waste before shaking hands.

Norwegians Cheer Compatriots.

Every Norwegian in Rome, mostly officials of the legation and the consulate, and the families of the Norwegian members of the Norge's crew had gathered at Ciampino, and the air was full of fond farewell messages shouted in Norwegian as the big ship was hauled out of her hangar and her motors were tuned up for a final test.

As the motors turned over reassuringly with a rhythmical purr, hands reached up to the cabin door to grip those of Colonel Nobile, who, with his tiny terrier pup Titina, the expedition's mascot, yelping at his feet, stood in the doorway with a megaphone in his hand.

Other members of the crew leaned from the windows and beamed upon their friends below or shouted cheering words to their anxious wives and children.

The Norwegians seemed glad at leaving this warm climate and returning to their ice-clad hills. The Roman climate and food have not pleased them any too much, being too alien to men used to crisp air and heavy meals.

Final Command to "Let Go."

It was 9:20 o'clock when Colonel Nobile, standing at the door of the cabin, shouted through his megaphone:

"Let go forward! Stand clear of the propellers!"

Soldiers immediately loosed the bow of the ship, which, now held by only a few men grasping the landing ropes in the stern, slowly turned its nose toward the sky.

When the ship was pointing upward at any angle of about 45 degrees, the soldiers, in obedience to another word of command, let go the stern landing ropes and the airship, its engines roaring as the propellers bit into the morning breeze, shot up into the air.

The Norge turned in a wide circle, while the crew waved their arms in response to farewells shouted by a small group in front of the hangar, and then headed due north for the city. In a few moments she was over Rome and then, with a last adieu, sped off toward the sea.

Sudden Decision to Depart.

The departure this morning was more or less unexpected. The leaders of the expedition remained in session with the meteorologists till 1 A. M. examining weather reports coming in from all points along the route to England. At the end of the meeting it was stated that the chances of departure today were "very slender."

When the crew gathered at Ciampino at 8 o'clock this morning, however, conditions had much improved. Strong winds were reported only over Southern France and even there no storms threatened. Tests carried out on the spot indicated that the wind in Rome averaged twenty miles. It was therefore decided to start immediately.

After Colonel Nobile and Lieutenant Riiser-Larsen had again inspected the ship to make quite sure that everything was in its proper place and nothing was forgotten, the crew was ordered aboard. They all went to the places which they will occupy during the whole voyage and then the cargo of ballast was shifted in such a way as to insure the airship's riding on an even keel.

The dirigible is most sensitive to any change in the distribution of weight and nobody is allowed to move about during the voyage unless absolutely necessary, and even then only by the captain's orders.

When everything was shipshape a hundred soldiers grasped the airship's landing ropes and drew it rapidly to the centre of the flying ground.

Intensive Emotion at Departure.

Every one realised that it was only a few minutes before the departure of the Norge and her gallant crew on as desperate an adventure as ever was attempted. It was a moment of intense emotion.

Wishes of good luck couched in jocular terms to hide the anxiety by which they were prompted were shouted on all sides.

Ladies presented flowers to the leaders of the expedition. Fathers leaned out of the narrow windows of the cabin to kiss children held up to them by anxious wives. Hands were clasped in friendship. Handkerchiefs were waved and cheers rang out.

A few seconds later all noise was drowned by the roar of the engines, and five minutes later the Norge was but a small speck on the horizon. Then, while newspaper men bolted for the nearest telephones to announce the departure to the world, the small crowd of onlookers silently made its way back to the city.

The Norge was to fly along the Italian and French coasts all day, arriving near Marseilles this evening, when, if the weather seems favorable, she will keep on to Pulham, England, landing there early tomorrow morning.

Major George Herbert Scott, commander of the R-34 transatlantic flight, will act as advisory pilot over England. Lieutenant Mercier, the French dirigible pilot, will aid Colonel Nobile in his journey over France.

The Norge probably will stay a few days in England while her short wave-length wireless receiver is tested and word is awaited from Leningrad that the hangar being constructed there by the Russians is ready.

The Norwegians are very anxious to reach Spitzbergen as soon as possible so that the flight across the Pole may be undertaken at the earliest in order to avoid the dreaded Arctic fogs. They will push on just as rapidly as safety permits.

They must halt at Leningrad, however, because the trip from Oslo, where they will stay one day at a mooring-mast, to Spitsbergen is too long to be undertaken in a single flight at this season of the year. The winds arise suddenly off Norway. They expect to reach Leningrad on or soon after April 15.

Pulham Expects Arrival This Morning.

PULHAM, England, April 10.—The Norge is expected to reach Pulham early tomorrow morning.

Since the news was received here this morning that the Norge had left Rome at 9:20 o'clock, bulletins have informed Air Ministry officials here of her steady progress northward across France in the direction of Rochefort without any stop at Toulon, as had been regarded as a possibility.

The Norge, it is learned, wirelessed late this afternoon her intention to continue straight to Pulham. This means, at her nominal cruising speed of fifty miles an hour, she will arrive here about the time the village church bells will be calling worshipers to morning services.

Scots Will Guide on English Coast.

Every possible assistance has been given to the explorers by the British Air Ministry, which not only sent special weather reports daily but also gave permission for Major Scott, one of the leading British airship officers, to make the journey from Rome to Pulham. Major Scott flew the R-34 to America.

It is declared here to be probable that Major Scott will take charge of the Norge on its approach to England and that he will certainly act in the capacity of pilot of the airport to direct the operations at Pulham.

Landing at the Pulham mooring mast would be a comparatively simple operation, but since the Norge's present fitting does not permit her to be secured in this way, she will have to be betrihed in one of the sheds, a much more difficult feat.

"The present intention is for the Norge to remain at Pulham for about six days, or longer if the weather should be unfavorable. Her next hop will be across the North Sea to Oslo, from where the journey will be continued either to Spitsbergen, where a special mooring mast has been erected, or over a longer route to Leningrad.

While at Pulham the Norge will take on fuel and replenish her hydrogen gas.

The airship staff from Cardington are here to facilitate these operations and to render to the Norge and her twenty-one men every assistance.

Amundsen Gets Flag From Coolidge.

OSLO, Norway, April 10 (AP).—Captain Roald Amundsen and Lincoln Ellsworth today received a large American flag from President Coolidge with his best wishes for the success of their Polar aerial expedition on the dirigible Norge.

The President's gift and his message were delivered at a luncheon tendered by the American Minister, Laurits S. Swenson. The explorers responded to the Minister's speech by thanking President Coolidge cordially for his interest in the expedition.

Other guests at the luncheon were Herman Gade, Norwegian Minister to Brazil and a close friend of Captain Amundsen; Ivar Lykke, President of the Storting; Karl Wefring, Minister of Defense, and Speaker Jahren of the Storting.

Lincoln Ellsworth, in receiving the American flag, said he was prouder than ever in his life to be an American because he was entrusted by the President to carry the Stars and Stripes to the Pole, to be left there alongside the flags of Norway and Italy.

Captain Amundsen requested Minister Swenson to convey the deepest and most respectful thanks of the expedition to the President.

Amundsen and Ellsworth will leave April 12 for King's Bay, whither the Government is sending the Coast Guard ship Heimdal to act as patrol ship. All is ready for the Norge's reception. She will be moored outside the city limits and is expected to reach here April 20.

LINE OF FLIGHT OF THE NORGE.

The solid black line shows the approximate route of the present journey of Amundsen's dirigible from Rome to Pulham, England. The dotted line indicates the proposed flight northward to Spitzbergen.

WILKINS FLIES OFF TO RELIEVE SMITH

Leaves Fairbanks to Seek Sled Party in Distress on Brooks Range Slope.

FAIRBANKS, Alaska, April 10 (AP).—For a second trip to Point Barrow, Captain George Hubert Wilkins and Lieutenant Carl B. Eielson hopped off here at 9:30 this morning in the plane called the Alaskan.

On a previous flight in the Alaskan, leaving here March 31, and returning Tuesday last, Eielson, aviator, and Wilkins, Arctic expedition leader, flew beyond Barrow, 155 miles north over the ice, penetrating further in that region than any human being is known to have gone before.

One object of the flight started today is to succor Alexander Malcolm Smith, reported in distress on the tundra sloping from the Brooks Range to the Arctic.

In the 4,100-pound cargo lifted by the Alaskan, most of it gasoline, were 300 pounds of dried salmon and tallow to feed the dogs with which Smith and a party were trying to carry supplies overland to Barrow from the Alaska railroad when they encountered starvation.

Some other provisions for Smith and his companions, including Earl Reneman, photographer of the Wilkins expedition, were carried. The load was 800 pounds more than that lifted March 31 and taken to Barrow.

Difficulty in finding Smith's camp was anticipated. Wilkins said his plan was to descend close to the earth in making this search. When Smith is seen the provisions are to be dropped from the plane.

Smith's position is almost on a line between here and Barrow.

The common clue to the desolate country of the Arctic slope of Brooks Range is the river's course, even for men plodding over the surface of the earth. The Alaskan is the first plane that ever visited Barrow, and when clear sight of the river was lost on the return trip the machine had to circle 120 miles northeast of here before reaching Fairbanks.

River channels are hard to discern at this season, because the cut banks are covered with snow.

The sun was bright and the air warm as the Alaskan left here.

We want a man who understands newspaper technique, has a "nose for news," writes good leads and snappy heads, has a thorough sense of responsibility and is not afraid to work hard.

He may now be on the staff of a metropolitan newspaper or a small town daily.

He is the type of man whose career lies before him, not behind him.

JEWELS DROPPED IN DASH

Hold-Up Men Get $1,000 Payroll From Plumbing Contractor—Up-State Robber Suspects Seized Here.

Patrolman James Nolan of the West 135th Street Station became suspicious shortly before dawn yesterday when he saw a shadow reflected by a light in the rear of the jewelry store of E. Gonzales at 429 Lenox Avenue. He started to investigate, when two negroes leaped through a rear hall window and ran up the stairs to the roof, dropping a bundle containing $2,000 worth of silverware.

Nolan fired two shots, capturing the men after they had crossed the roof to the adjoining building and descended to the second floor. One prisoner, Titus Thompson, 34 years old, of 9 West 129th Street, was found to have been shot in the right leg by the patrolman when the negroes were taken to Harlem Hospital. The second, Louis Genengo, 29 years old, of 34 West 135th Street, who had put up the most desperate fight to escape, was treated there for several cuts on the head, received from the patrolman's nightstick. Both were locked up later in the West 135th Street Station on burglary charges.

Gets $1,000 Payroll.

Samuel Salzman, member of the plumbing contracting firm of Baer & Salzman, 1,985 Webster Avenue, the Bronx, was driving through East 175th Street near Morris Avenue yesterday forenoon with a $1,000 payroll when he was held up by three youths in a sedan, who escaped with the money.

Salzman said the robber at the wheel of the sedan forced his car against the curb and one hold-up man jumped out and threatened him with a pistol before taking the money. The thieves disappeared before policemen arrived from the Bathgate Avenue Station.

Jacob Blau, manager of the store of the Certified Grocery Corporation at 377 Myrtle Avenue, Brooklyn, was alone in the forenoon when two robbers with pistols entered and took $142 from the cash register. They drove off in a taxicab, advising Blau "not to worry, as the money belongs to your boss."

Seize Up-State Robber Suspects.

Detectives Daly, Cordes and Walsh aided Deputy Sheriffs Stein and Phillips of Rockland County, N. Y., to capture two men who were alleged to have participated in the theft of a $1,355 payroll in the hold-up of the paymaster of the Fibre Conduit Company in Orangeburg, Rockland County.

The prisoners were Joseph Steptner, 26 years old, of 308 East Seventy-first Street, and Peter Loomis, 27 years old, of 325 Third Avenue. Before taking them to Rockland County the deputies said that the robbers had threatened the employes of the company with pistols as they took the payroll. One was captured and is now serving a long term in Sing Sing. William Enocht is awaiting trial for alleged participation in the hold-up. The arrest of Enocht and the convicted man led to the apprehension of Steptner and Loomis, they said.

Arrested in Drug Raid.

Albert Lalonde, 20 years old, who said his home was at 84 Catherine Street West, Montreal, and that he was the son of a prominent furrier, was arrested yesterday on a charge of having opium in his possession in an apartment at 738 Seventh Avenue. Detectives Reilly and Sanders of the Narcotic Squad said he admitted that in recent weeks he had robbed three apartments in the vicinity of Broadway and 125th Street.

Lalende's admission was said by the detectives to have followed the discovery of about $600 in gold trinkets in the apartment, in addition to a quantity of opium and two complete opium-smoking outfits. He also declared, according to the detectives, that he committed the burglaries to defray the expenses of an operation for his wife, who was found ill in the apartment. No reports of the burglaries had been received, the police said, but Lalonde agreed to endeavor to point out the places he had robbed.

The police said they had received reports that Lalonde was admitting opium addicts to his apartment.

SHOT DEAD IN HIS SHOP.

Victim Believed to Have Been Slain In Row Over a Card Game.

With a bullet hole in his forehead and cards and money strewn on a near-by table, Frank Aldo, 32 years old, of 341 East Seventy-third Street, was found dead last night in the rear room of a shop he conducted at 440 East Seventy-fifth Street. He was believed to have been the victim of a fight that developed over a card game.

While Aldo's shop ostensibly was a radio repair establishment, detectives said he used it as a gambling place. It was thought that some person who had lost a large sum of money there might have done the shooting. The body was found about 5 o'clock when Charles Williams, proprietor of the Café Corona, 324 East Eighty-first Street, came to visit Aldo. Unable to get any response to knocks at the front door, he called Patrolman Rinachel, who broke in the door and found the body in the rear room.

SEES JEWISH FUND SUCCESS

Chairman Brown Says Contributions Will Total $25,000,000.

Chairman David A. Brown of the United Jewish Campaign, which is seeking to raise $15,000,000 for relief and reconstruction work among the Jews of Eastern Europe, made a report yesterday to the 1,200 members of the national committee in which he predicted that the original objective would be left far behind and that the amount contributed would be close to $25,000,000. Drives are in progress in hundreds of cities and towns throughout the country to raise the quotas accepted by the various communities. A million dollars has already been raised in Chicago and a campaign will start in New York City next week to raise $6,000,000.

The local drive will open with a dinner at the Hotel Biltmore next Sunday evening. Louis Marshall and Felix M. Warburg are Honorary Chairmen of the organization and William Fox is Chairman. The women's organization will hold its opening dinner the same evening, also at the Biltmore.

SHRINERS TO PRODUCE A REVUE AT TEMPLE

Colonel DeLamater, Potentate, Announces Committee—To Run Six Nights.

Colonel Walter A. De Lamater, Potentate of Mecca Temple, Nobles of the Mystic Shrine, announced yesterday that plans had been made to produce a revue next month in which many of the Shriners, their wives and daughters would participate. The revue is called Harem Scarems, and it will be produced by the Harry Miller company at the temple the night of May 17 and continue for six nights.

All the uniformed units of the Shrine, including the Divan and Honor Legion, will take part in the revue. The rehearsals, under the direction of Harry Miller, will start April 18.

The following committee, under the direction of the Potentate, is in charge of the production: Louis N. Donnatin, recorder; Robert D. Williams, Arthur H. Diamant and Harry C. Arthur, past potentates; Justice Peter F. Schmuck, orator; Edgar B. Sharp, chief rabban; Arthur T. Lee, assistant rabban; Charles W. Folks, Oriental guide; Stuart H. Walker, captain of the guard; William T. Graff, captain of the Arab patrol; George F. Briegel, conductor of Mecca's band; Robert G. O. Lawson and James W. Mailler.

Colonel DeLamater said that the recent ladies' night at the temple was one of the most successful in years. Loney Haskell was master of ceremonies. On the entertainment program were three acts from Ringling Brothers' Circus, four Denishawn dancers, the Musical Johnsons, Miss Suzanne Zimmermann, soprano; ballet and specialty dancers from the George E. Cole Studio, Miss Mildred Post, Lew Clayton's jazz band and the Mecca Temple Band.

DANCE TO AID SERVICE MEN

Stage Folk to Help Raise Funds to Entertain the Sick.

Miss Ruth Draper will take part in the entertainment program for the supper dance which the Stage Women's War Relief has arranged for tonight at the Cafe de Paris. Funds are being raised to provide entertainment for ex-service men in hospitals. Others taking part will include Lawrence Tibbett of the Metropolitan, Miss Helen Ford, Miss Queenie Smith, Miss Carroll McComas, Charles Purcell and Jack Donahue.

The Junior Committee, of which Miss Nancy Watson is Chairman, includes the Misses Genevieve Fox, Eugenie Woodruff, Ruth Kingsbury, Sophie Gay, Victoria Frelinghuysen, Nancy Glave, Antoinette Clemens and Noel Chatillon. Arrangements have been made under the direction of Miss Rachel Crothers, Chairman of the Stage Women's War Relief.

Funeral of Berlin Singer Takes Place Amid Storm.

Copyright, 1926, by The New York Times Company.
By Wireless to THE NEW YORK TIMES.

GENEVA, April 10.—Amid a violent snowstorm, the body of Mme. Jurjewskaia, the Berlin opera singer, was buried yesterday at Andermatt in the presence of her husband, Colonel von Bremer, and a small crowd.

The body, when recovered from its tomb of ice below Devil's Bridge, was in perfect condition except her beautiful hair, which had disappeared. The singer's suicide was due to despair, caused by Bolshevist cruelties to her family.

GOV. SMITH IS MADE COLUMBIA ALUMNUS

Unanimously Elected a Member of University Association at a Dinner.

1,000 GIVE COLLEGE CHEER

Hailed as the State's Greatest Executive Since De Witt Clinton's Time.

Governor Alfred E. Smith became a "college man" last night. By unanimous vote, after proposal by Brig. Gen. William Barclay Parsons, Chairman of the university trustees, the Governor was elected to honorary membership in the Columbia University Alumni Association at a dinner in the Hotel Plaza.

The dinner was in observance of the hundredth anniversary of the founding of the alumni association by De Witt Clinton, who, like Governor Smith, served the State thrice as Governor. Chester W. Cuthill, President of the association, was toastmaster, and the speakers were the Governor and Dr. Nicholas Murray Butler, President of Columbia.

Mr. Cuthill in introducing Governor Smith paid tribute to Tammany Hall. "Tammany," he said, "is embodied in the person of our chief guest today, the distinguished Governor of the State, a man who has captured the imagination of the entire country—the greatest Governor the State has had since De Witt Clinton."

The alumni, numbering about 1,000, cheered Governor Smith roundly, spelling out his name at the end of the college cheer. In opening his remarks the Governor referred to Dr. Butler, prominent in the national councils of Republicanism, and to the others there as "fellow members of Tammany Hall." The Governor traced the points of parallel in his career and in that of De Witt Clinton. He found that they had faced pretty much the same political problems and held the same offices. He compared the cost of government in Governor Clinton's day and in his own and pointed out that Governor Clinton had once obtained $1,500 of State money to support the State owned salt springs in the Onondaga Valley. He added that when he urged State money for State water power, he was accused of "Socialism."

The Governor said that transportation was the chief problem of the State. He said that if any one charged the Erie Canal with being a failure and as failing to keep pace with modern needs, he was "called a friend of the New York Central Railroad." He reiterated his suggestion that the barge canal from Oswego to Albany be diverted into a deep ocean waterway to give the State a Lakes-to-Atlantic channel to meet the Canadian plans.

"The only thing I noticed about De Witt Clinton," said the Governor, returning to his comparison of careers, "is that he was once defeated for the Presidency. I beat him there—I got my decision in two weeks."

Dr. Butler, an outspoken "wet" champion, made a passing reference to prohibition. He was speaking of the 300th anniversary of the purchase of Manhattan Island. He said that there was a tradition that it had been bought for a bottle of liquor, "and I venture to point out that it might some day be sold profitably at the same price."

He urged a return to the political philosophies of Alexander Hamilton and Thomas Jefferson, and defended the city against those who speak ill of it.

FRAUD ON PATIENTS CHARGED TO DOCTOR

Witnesses Accuse Dr. Landis of "House of Health" Before State Medical Board.

MISUSE OF X-RAY ALLEGED

Photograph of One Said to Have Been Used for Another—Convicted Twice Before.

The State Board of Medical Examiners held the first of its hearings in the Academy of Medicine, 17 West Forty-third Street, yesterday afternoon to investigate charges of fraud on patients against Dr. Leonard Lincoln Landis, head of the "House of Health," 140 East Twenty-second Street, with a view to revoking his license to practice medicine if the charges are proved.

Sol Ullman, Deputy Attorney General, who presented the evidence against Dr. Landis, read a petition by Augustus S. Downing of Albany, Assistant Commissioner of Education, asking for the revocation of Dr. Landis's license. The petition charged that Dr. Landis was guilty of improper practices at the House of Health by employing laymen as well as licensed physicians to treat patients, by making improper diagnoses, and by using X-ray photographs of certain patients in the treatment of entirely different patients.

Cite Former Convictions.

It also cited two convictions of Dr. Landis—in 1915 for conducting a public nuisance in a medical museum and in January, 1926, for failure to report a case of tuberculosis to the Department of Health. Dr. Landis had pleaded guilty and was fined $100 in each case.

Frederick Hemley of House, Grossman & Vorhaus, counsel for Dr. Landis, made light of the convictions, pointing out that the first had occurred eleven years ago and arguing that the failure to report the case of tuberculosis had been a mere oversight. He said that Dr. Landis had been practicing medicine for thirty-four years and had a large institution. He emphasized that there was no charge of malpractice against him and no moral turpitude involved.

The first witness to testify against Dr. Landis was Mrs. Yohanna Zidenck, a widow, of 438 East Seventy-seventh Street, who said she had visited the House of Health seven or eight times in the Summer of 1923, and had paid $70 for an X-ray examination and subsequent electric treatment. She said that Dr. Landis had shown her an X-ray film, told her it was hers and pointed out on the film where it showed her stomach had fallen an inch and a half.

After her back was burned by the electric treatment, she said, she stopped going to the House of Health and consulted a physician, who told her she merely had indigestion and stopped her pain with medicine.

Admits She Had an Operation.

Cross-examination by Mr. Hemley showed that the witness underwent an operation at Bellevue Hospital in September, 1924, for appendicitis and an abdominal abscess. She also admitted that she had visited the House of Health more times than she had first testified, going there every second day for six weeks. She insisted that nothing had been given to her to swallow before the X-ray was taken, although it is customary to give the patient barium before taking an X-ray of the internal organs.

Mrs. Zidenck identified an X-ray photograph submitted in evidence as one given to her by Dr. Landis at hers, although the prosecution contends that it was that of some other patient.

The second witness was James Allen, a letter carrier, of 676 Madison Street, Brooklyn, who said that he paid $50 to the House of Health for an X-ray photograph and treatments in the Summer of 1923. When he went back to get the X-ray film, he said, Dr. Landis and three others were unable to find it, but told him to come back the next day, when they gave him what they said was his X-ray. They told him, he testified, that it showed one hip was lower than the other, and that he would have to pay $30 a month for six or seven months for treatment.

Under cross-examination Allen admitted that Dr. Landis told him that he could not guarantee a cure and that he would have to "take a chance" on the treatments.

The Board of Examiners gave Deputy Attorney General Ullman permission to amend the petition by adding a charge that last August Dr. Landis informed Allen Brousseau of 487 West Twenty-fourth Street that he was suffering from pulmonary tuberculosis after making an X-ray examination, whereas in fact Brousseau was not suffering from that disease.

Dr. Stephen Pilcer, Chairman; Dr. Harold Rypins, Secretary; Dr. William H. Park and Dr. Henry B. Minton comprised the board. The hearing was adjourned until 2 P. M. on May 1.

PUPILS SING IN PLAYLET.

Give "Isle of Happy Music" to Aid Seymour School's Fund.

The children of the Seymour School of Musical Re-education gave a second performance of "The Isle of Happy Music" at Aeolian Hall yesterday morning. This request repetition was in aid of the school's scholarship fund and belonged to the series commemorative of the tenth anniversary of the school's foundation by Harriet A. Seymour. Marshall Bartholomew, associate director, was in charge of the program.

"The Isle of Happy Music" is a musical playlet embodying the work of the school. The prologue, "Adrift on the Musical Styx," was an example of the "distressing old-fashioned music lesson." In the second part, the children discovered the "Isle of Happy Music," where they rejoiced in free rhythm, musical games and make-up songs.

Then came a "Visit From a Strolling Minstrel" in the person of Mr. Bartholomew, who sang mountain songs of North Carolina. The final part gave a festival in the Palace of Happy Music, experiences with melody, harmony and original compositions being illustrated by the children's orchestra.

OUR HOTEL MEN ARE DINED

American Delegate Tells London of Banquets in Dry Land.

LONDON, April 10 (AP).—The American Hotel Association party was feted at an official reception and banquet tonight at the Hotel Savoy. The diners included more than 100 hotel men from the Continent, who came to join the Americans in their tour of England preparatory to a trip through various European countries.

Responding to the addresses of welcome Thomas D. Green, President of the American Hotel Association, gave an idea of what banquet tables were like in the United States since the advent of prohibition, and cited some of the effects of prohibition from the viewpoint of the American hotel man.

The guests included Baron Dewar, Baron Riddell, Baron Lambourne, Sir Arbuthnot Lane, Sir Francis and Lady Towle and Sir Alan and Lady Burgoyne.

Premier Baldwin sent cordial greetings.

To Search for Missing Freighter.

The Trans-Marine Corporation of Port Newark, which requested the Navy Department last week to instruct Government ships to keep a lookout for the corporation's missing freighter, Suduffco, overdue at the Panama Canal since March 22, ordered its ships, Suboatco and Sucarsco to search for the freighter. The former will go to the Gulf of Mexico and the latter will steam along the west coast. The missing freighter carried a crew of twenty-nine. She was in command of Captain Turner.

at once to extricate Baulck. He was conscious and kept his courage while attempting with waning strength to help. He spoke occasionally to express a fear about what his wife would say when she learned about his injuries.

Police Help Passengers Out.

While the rescue squads cut through the warped and twisted steel and debris with acetyline torches, other policemen and firemen helped the injured passengers to the platform. They were treated there and in neighboring stores by ambulances surgeons.

Baulck was pinned in the wreckage from 10:16 P. M. until a few minutes after midnight. Then he was taken to St. Mary's Hospital, where Nowak had preceded him. Not long after arriving there it was necessary to amputate both of Baulck's legs. He has four children. It was feared that both Baulck and Nowak would die.

The accident brought large crowds from blocks around. They congregated on the streets below and reserves had a hard time keeping order. It was long after midnight before quiet was restored.

Police Commissioner McLaughlin, Chief Inspector William J. Lahey, Inspectors Thomas Ryan and Thomas McDonald were on the scene and aided District Attorney Dodd in his investigation.

Patrolman Frank Donnally, James O'Brien and Ernest Peters of the Police Rescue Squad were burned on the hands while using torches in getting Baulck out. They were treated by an ambulance surgeon and remained on duty. Six policeman hurrying from the Flatbush Station in a touring car were cut and bruised when their car struck another at New York Avenue and Lincoln Place.

Due to the confusion, a full list of the persons injured was not available several hours after the crash. Among those who received emergency treatment were:

CORBIN, GEORGE, 9,149 Samuel Court, Jamaica.
NELSON, A. M., 8,8781 Seventy-eighth Street, Woodhaven.
LACK, ROBERT, 187-02 Lenox Avenue, Springfield, L. I.
GORDON, JOHN, 138 Willoughby Street, Brooklyn.
MARTIN, RALPH, 187-11 Atlantic Avenue, Richmond Hill.
HELL, F. J., 130 Avenue D, New York City.
RICHARD, LOUIS, 221-50 Twenty-second Avenue, Queens Village.
CARROLL, DOROTHY, 9,515 124th Street, Richmond Hill.
DUNN, MISS THERESA, 70 Schenck Avenue, Brooklyn.
GANNON, CATHERINE, 5 Clinton Place, Jamaica.

The crash caused a general disruption in traffic on the line. Eastbound service was tied up completely for several hours.

CHARGE LANE WILSON WITH MADERO DEATH

Mexican Government Prepares Claim Against Washington for Millions.

CHARGES CALLED UNTRUE

Former Secretary of Our Embassy Was on Ground and Calls Statements Baseless.

Copyright, 1926, by The New York Times Company.
Special Cable to THE NEW YORK TIMES.

MEXICO CITY, April 10.—The Attorney General is preparing to press a claim against the United States for several million dollars, based on the contention of the Madero family that Henry Lane Wilson while United States Ambassador to Mexico was directly responsible for the assassination of President Madero.

The Attorney General has directed members of the Madero family to appear, so that he may prepare the case, in which it will be charged that Ambassador Wilson advised Victoriano Huerta to get rid of Madero.

Statements have also been made to the official that conferences were held at the American Embassy here at which Ambassador Wilson had advised officials of the Huerta administration to perform certain acts in return for which he promised prompt recognition of the Huerta Government by the United States.

Henry F. Tennant of Buffalo, who was Secretary of the American Embassy in Mexico City during the incumbency of Henry Lane Wilson as American Ambassador, denied without qualification last night the charges set forth in a cable from Mexico City yesterday that Ambassador Wilson had been implicated in the conspiracy that led to the downfall of the Madero Government and the subsequent assassination of Madero, in 1913.

"During all that eventful period," said Mr. Tennant, "I was closely associated with Ambassador Wilson as his Secretary of Embassy and in that capacity I enjoyed his complete personal and official confidence. I have read the cable dispatch alleging that Mexico is about to rest a claim for millions of dollars of damages against the United States upon the alleged testimony of certain Mexicans who aver that Ambassador Wilson suggested renunciation of their allegiance to Madero.

"I am anxious," continued Mr. Tennant, "to declare in as emphatic and unqualified language as possible that such a story is without a shred of foundation in fact and is simply a ridiculous canard manufactured out of whole cloth. Nothing of the kind could have occurred without my knowing something about it, and I am prepared to take my oath that nothing of the kind did occur.

"Naturally, I have had no opportunity to see or communicate with Henry Lane Wilson since this charge was made public, but I am confident his denial will be no less prompt and emphatic than my own. I have just wired him tonight at his home in Indianapolis placing my services at his disposal in any move he may wish to make to repel this audacious canard."

Mr. Tennant until recently had been for years in the diplomatic service of the United States and had filled many important posts in addition to that in Mexico City. He is now affiliated with the Guaranty Trust Company and returned a few days ago from Salvador.

CHILDREN'S HEALTH SHOW.

Four Schools Demonstrate Work at Dr. Payne's Conference.

Classes in four schools gave a demonstration of health education yesterday at the conference held under the direction of Dr. E. George Payne of the New York University School of Education in the University Place Presbyterian Church. The children came from Public School 157, at 327 St. Nicholas Avenue; Public School 108, 253 Lafayette Street; the Bayonne (N. J.) Junior High School, and the Eighteenth Avenue school in Newark.

Representatives of community agencies engaged in social and educational work were present. As demonstrating the work pupils are doing to teach and acquire health habits, the children went through the form of holding their Health Club meetings. Their various committees reported progress, and some of the class members related their own experiences in health education.

Dr. Louis C. Schroeder of New York University, attending physician at the New York Nursery and Child's Hospital, Principal Edward Sweeny and Dr. Ira S. Wile spoke.

TERHUNE'S QUEST FOR A COLLIE FAILS

Made Special Trip to Get One in Scotland to Find Their Breed Is Inferior to Ours.

TELLS OF LIQUOR SHORTAGE

Big Export Trade Is Putting Green Product on Market, Says Author, Home on Aquitania.

Albert Payson Terhune, writer of stories about dogs, who went to Scotland, home of the collie, a month ago in search of fine dogs with which he hoped to improve the breed of his kennels, returned yesterday on the Cunard liner Aquitania, confessing he was "a licked man."

"I come back like a dog with his tail between his legs," said Mr. Terhune. "I'm licked. I couldn't find a collie in Scotland, though it is the home of the collies, that could measure up to the best that is in the United States."

"Most of the collies which their owners pointed to with pride as the finest breed would take second prizes in a small-town American dog show. They are too thin and lank. They haven't the hair which our dogs have. It all surprised me."

Mr. Terhune told how he entered Scotland from England. He said at Cheviot he climbed a hill and read a sign reading: "Scotland," and he knew he was there. In his talk Mr. Terhune met his old Scotchman who was herding a flock of sheep and eyeing his collies with great pride. The shepherd, explaining his great love for the dogs, said:

"They have the brain of a man and the ways of a woman."

So highly do the farmers of Scotland prize their collies that they take the dogs with them to church on Sundays, the author said.

Discussing his observations about Scotch beverages, he said that even the people were complaining of having to drink green liquor because of the export trade.

Anice Terhune, wife of the writer, herself a musical composer, said she found a number of tunes and airs in Scotland which she intended incorporating into songs she was composing.

Bradford Merrill, general manager of the Hearst publications, who had been in Italy, Austria and France, crossed with his wife on the Aquitania and told of an interview he had with Premier Mussolini. Mr. Merrill, speaking German, was interpreter.

"Mussolini is a remarkable man," said Mr. Merrill. "He isn't I think half the greatest force at the head of a government in the world today. His face and his eyes light up when he talks and there is a driving power about the man which is real and vital. I told him of the magnificent fleet of Italian steamships now coming from Italy to America. He replied: 'We will build more and finer ones.'

"He is like that in everything he says, and the prosperity in Italy and the enthusiasm is a good echo of that sort of personality he possesses."

Others on the Aquitania included Mr. and Mrs. Maxim Ghott, missionary educators, who met and were married in India; Dr. Esther Mangel, Vice President of the Women's Zionist Association of Poland, and Dr. B. M. Menendelsin of 36 West Fifty-ninth Street. The Aquitania brought 602 first class, 188 second and 153 third class passengers.

WRECK VICTIMS' FUNERALS.

Dead Engineer and Fireman to Be Buried in Jersey City Tomorrow.

Funeral services for the engineer and fireman killed in the wreck of the New York-Atlantic City train of the Pennsylvania Railroad on Thursday will be held in Jersey City tomorrow morning. John O'Connor, the engineer, who lived at 29 Henry Street, will be buried from St. Joseph's Church at Baldwin and Pavonia Avenues. A solemn requiem mass for Anthony Raynka, the fireman, who lived at 37 Monitz Street, will be held at St. Anthony's Church. Both burials will be in Holy Name Cemetery.

The bodies of the Rev. Alexander H. Nikolin, his wife, Anna, and their fourteen-year-old son Alexander Jr., slain at Wilkes-Barre, Pa., were brought to Jersey City yesterday and taken to the Greek Orthodox Church of St. Peter and Paul. It is expected that the burial will take place tomorrow. Nikolin killed his wife and son and shot himself.

MRS. WHITTEMORE WINS HER FREEDOM

Slayer's Wife Gives Information to Police Against Two of His Gang, the Kraemers.

WILL BE FREED TOMORROW

Assistant Prosecutor Says No Evidence Links Her to Any of Husband's Robberies.

Mrs. Margaret Whittemore, wife of Richard Reese Whittemore, the bandit leader, will be released tomorrow in return for information she gave Yesterday against Jacob and Leon Kraemer of her husband's gang, according to Ferdinand Pecora, Chief Assistant District Attorney. She has been in the Jefferson Market Prison for three weeks and has been indicted for first degree robbery in the $170,000 Goudvis diamond holdup at Fifth Avenue and Forty-eighth Street on last Jan. 11.

Mr. Pecora made the following statement after he and Harold W. Hastings, Assistant District Attorney, had questioned Mrs. Whittemore for two hours Friday afternoon and several hours yesterday:

"Mr. Hastings and I have concluded questioning Mrs. Whittemore. We feel quite satisfied with the statement she made this afternoon. She is being returned to Jefferson Market Prison and will be brought here again Monday morning, at which time some disposition will be made of the indictment against her. Nothing in her own statement or from any other source that has come to our attention connects her with the crime for which she is indicted. She will be discharged on Monday on her own recognizance.

To Appear When Wanted.

"Mrs. Whittemore has signed for us a stipulation that she will appear whenever we want her as a witness.

"We regard her statement to us this afternoon as very helpful, particularly as it applies to Leon and Jacob Kraemer. Mrs. Florence Carter has been in the room with Mrs. Whittemore, and Mrs. Whittemore now admits that she (Mrs. Whittemore) was in this city since shortly before last Christmas."

Mrs. Florence Carter (a fictitious name) is the red-headed sweetheart of Anthony Paladino, a member of the gang. On Friday Mrs. Whittemore denied a statement by Mrs. Carter that Mr. and Mrs. Whittemore spent a week in December with her and Paladino at their apartment in Brooklyn and had Christmas dinner with them. According to Mrs. Whittemore's first statement, she had not been in New York for three years until a few days before the gang was rounded up last month.

Mrs. Whittemore was confronted with Mrs. Carter yesterday in the District Attorney's office. Mrs. Carter attempted to embrace her, but Mrs. Whittemore repulsed her, saying she did not know the woman. Then Harry Schulman, Mrs. Whittemore's attorney, urged her to tell the truth. Mrs. Whittemore sat chewing gum and reflecting awhile, then called to Mrs. Carter and talked with her. After that she admitted Mrs. Carter's story was true.

Knew Husband Was Criminal.

Although Mrs. Whittemore did not admit any connection with the robberies of her husband's gang, she acknowledged that when she married Whittemore in 1921 she knew he was wanted by the police, and that she knew later that he was a criminal. She protected him in her statement, however, insisting that she had no information that linked him with any crime. As to the baggage checks she had when arrested for a trunk which contained two pistols, she said she never knew what was in the trunk, never had a key to it and never had access to it.

Mr. Schulman said:

"Mrs. Whittemore deeply regrets the references that have been made to her in the papers saying that she has been known by the designation of 'Tiger Girl.' That term has never been applied to her and there never was any reason for referring to her in any such fashion. She deplores the fact that it was applied to her and asks the newspapers in justice and fairness to publish this statement in her behalf. Furthermore, Mrs. Whittemore desires to state she has always been conscious of the fact that she has never been involved in any criminal act or wrong-doing."

JEWELERS PRAISE POLICE.

Say Round-Up of Whittemore Gang Deserves Appreciation.

Victor A. Lambert, Secretary of the Retail Jewelers' Association, made public yesterday a letter he had sent to Police Commissioner McLaughlin on behalf of the association commending the police for the roundup of the Whittemore gang. The letter said:

"The annual meeting of the Retail Jewelers' Association of Greater New York and Vicinity was held at the Canadian Club in the Belmont Hotel on Wednesday evening, April 7. Among the matters discussed was the capture of the Whittemore gang, whose members have made the jewelers of the city the particular object of their banditry.

"Many expressions of satisfaction for this fine piece of work on the part of the Police Department were made, and by a unanimous vote of the members present a resolution was adopted that a letter be sent to you, expressing the commendation of this organization for the splendid work done by Inspector John D. Coughlin and Detectives Sullivan, Cronin, Horan and Daly, who were responsible for the rounding up of the Whittemore gang.

"In sending you this expression of commendation, we believe that when the members of your department perform such a splendid task a word of appreciation should be forthcoming, and as the jewelers have suffered so much from hold-ups we now feel somewhat relieved to know that the leaders of the gang have been apprehended. We are also confident that their capture and punishment will have a very salutary effect on other bandits who were associated with them in their crimes or who are operating in similar gangs."

Gets Order in Will Contest.

Mrs. Anne Jackson of 276 Riverside Drive, who recently won her contest of the will of her husband, Daniel H. Jackson, wealthy realty operator, was appointed administratrix of the estate by Surrogate Foley yesterday. The order provides that the Grace National Bank shall hold $650,000 worth of securities, comprising virtually the entire capital stock of the E. R. A. Realty Company, Inc., and the Darry Realty Corporation, which were owned by the decedent. The value of the estate is said to be $1,343,112.

NEW JERSEY ALUMNAE HOLD LUNCHEON HERE

Miss Cooper Tells of Year's Progress—Frelinghuysen Is Toastmaster.

Graduates of the New Jersey College for Women met at a luncheon yesterday at the Hotel Astor to hear Miss Esther Cooper, President of the Alumnae Association, tell of the organization's progress during the past year. Ex-Senator Joseph S. Frelinghuysen was host and toastmaster.

Miss Cooper outlined the "four important steps" taken by the association since last commencement. The first was an enlargement of the Association Council to include a member from each class in addition to the five executives now composing it. Others were the establishment of an alumnae home on property donated by James Neilson, the extension of membership of the Board of Managers of the college to include members of the Alumnae Association and the starting of a weekly Alumnae Bulletin.

Miss Cooper spoke of the "Penny Fund." Each graduate is requested to save a cent a day, contributing the resulting $3.65 at the year's end to a fund for the endowment of the Alumnae Home.

Frank Bergen, general counsel for the Public Service Corporation of New Jersey, regretted the modern attitude toward study and said that sports were allowed to interfere with studies.

Edward Katzenbach, Attorney General of New Jersey, said that the New Jersey College for Women benefited from its association with Rutgers, the old Queens College of Colonial days.

SWISS BANK THIEF GIVES UP

Returns From Rome With Funds on Advice of Priest.

Copyright, 1926, by The New York Times Company.

By Wireless to THE NEW YORK TIMES.

GENEVA, April 10.—A young clerk named Elster, employed in the Cantonal Bank at Brigue, Switzerland, stole $6,000 several weeks ago and fled to Rome.

Elster, who is a Catholic, went to mass on Easter Sunday and then confessed his crime to an elderly priest, who exhorted him to return home to his wife and restore the stolen money to the bank. The clerk decided to take the priest's advice and telegraphed to the police at Brigue that he was returning and intended to surrender voluntarily to avoid a delay for the execution of an extradition warrant.

When the train arrived at Brigue, Elster walked up to two policemen who were waiting for him and he was arrested. As he had spent only a little of the stolen money and had surrendered of his own accord, his sentence probably will be light.

150,487 ATTENDED THE CIRCUS LAST WEEK

World's Attendance Record, the Officials Believe, Set at the New Garden.

What the management of the Ringling Brothers and Barnum & Bailey Circus believes to be a world record covering both circus and theatrical attendance for a single week was established at the New Madison Square Garden with last night's performance.

At twelve performances, beginning last Monday afternoon and terminating with the Saturday night show, a grand total of 150,487 persons witnessed the circus. The biggest six consecutive days' attendance at the old garden totaled a trifle under 80,000.

"Our advance sale for the coming week is good, but it is not likely to approach the record just made," a circus official said last night. "Credit for the high mark is largely due to the juvenile patronage made possible by the school holidays. Probably half of last week's matinee audiences were children."

A number of attractions have been added to the program at the New Madison Square Garden since the opening performances. Among them is "Jupiter, the balloon horse," who ascends to the girders and then makes his descent through a shower of rockets and roman candles.

ADVERTISING FRAUD TRAPS EX-CONVICT

E.A. Noblett, whose Record Goes Back to 1893, Held in $30,000 After Detection of Swindle.

$10 RECEIPT IS EVIDENCE

Arranged to Sublet Apartment After Accepting $550 in Rent From a Previous Applicant.

Edwin Arden Noblett, ex-convict who posed as "Dr. Dick Pearson" and had assumed more than twenty other aliases in the last twenty years, was remanded to the Tombs under $30,000 bail when he was arraigned yesterday before Judge Francis X. Mancuso of General Sessions on a grand larceny indictment. He had been charged in a Grand Jury investigation with swindling persons through the subletting of his apartment in the Dorchester, at 121 Riverside Drive, in which, investigation by Assistant District Attorney Richard C. Murphy developed, he himself was not welcome.

Chief Assistant District Attorney Ferdinand Pecora, in requesting Judge Mancuso to hold Noblett in high bail, announced that it was his purpose in the coming week to appear before the Grand Jury and request that a superseding indictment be returned in the case, charging Noblett with being a second offender. Noblett's police record shows that he was sentenced to eight years in Sing Sing by Recorder Goff in 1899, and again was sentenced to a five-year term in that prison in 1912 by Judge Mulqueen in General Sessions.

EDWIN ARDEN NOBLETT.
Ex-Convict Held in $30,000 for Advertising Fraud.

Record Goes Back to 1893.

Noblett, who is about 60 years old and whose police record runs back to August, 1893, was trapped by representatives of THE NEW YORK TIMES on April 7 last when he accepted and gave a receipt for $10 as a deposit on the rental of his apartment for three months, although he previously had accepted $550 from Stephen Bourne of 126 East Sixty-seventh Street as advance payment for the rental of the same apartment from March 20 to June 1 of this year. This was a little more than two months of the same period in which he had agreed to sublet the apartment to William W. Miller and Mrs. Margaret Nash, employes of THE TIMES, who posed as man and wife when they visited Noblett in the apartment in response to an advertisement by Noblett offering to sublet his apartment. The World had joined with THE TIMES in an investigation of Noblett's criminal activities in replying to "opportunity" advertisements which appeared in both newspapers.

The ex-convict used the number of his apartment telephone in the advertisements offering to sublet his apartment, but in his replies to the advertisements in the "opportunities" columns, written in multigraph form, in the last few weeks, he used such aliases as "Dr. D[illegible] Pearson," "Ted Noble," "E. Harri[illegible]," "E. T. Shawman," "E. Hague, "George King," "M. Hollis," "J. Hunter, "E. St. Clair" and "Janet Moore."

Before Assistant District Attorney Murphy presented the evidence against Noblett to the Grand Jury, the prosecutor said that investigation by the police and postal authorities of Noblett's activities had led to the ex-convict's being termed a "master swindler." The prosecutor added that there were indications that in the eight years that Noblett had lived at the Riverside apartment, during which time he had on three occasions been arrested by the police or Federal authorities, many persons had been swindled by Noblett through various ingenious schemes and it was expected that news of his indictment would result in additional complaints being sent to Chief Assistant District Attorney Pecora.

Bench Warrant Issued.

The grand larceny indictment was returned against Noblett on Friday, and a bench warrant for him was placed in the hands of Detective Bernard Flood of District Attorney Banton's office. Flood found Noblett and his young wife and their 7-year-old daughter at breakfast yesterday morning when he took the ex-convict into custody at the Riverside Drive address.

"What, again?" exclaimed Noblett, the detective said, when the warrant was read to him and the man prepared to accompany the detective to Police Headquarters, where he was fingerprinted and a new photograph taken for the Rogues' Gallery.

Detective Flood then took Noblett before Judge Mancuso in the Criminal Courts Building, and when Chief Assistant District Attorney Pecora said a superseding indictment would be sought, which, on conviction, would carrying a maximum penalty of twenty years in Sing Sing as an old offender, the Court said that if $30,000 bail "is not high enough, I will make it $50,000."

Mr. Bourne had complained that after he gave Noblett the $550 he was unable to get possession of the apartment or the return of his money. He said that when Noblett had not surrendered the apartment on March 20, offering excuses that his wife was ill or he wanted to have the apartment redecorated, Noblett ignored the demand that the $550 be returned.

Noblett after this placed an advertisement to sublet the apartment in THE NEW YORK TIMES. He used a fictitious name when he turned the advertisement over to Mrs. Nash in the office of THE TIMES in the financial district. Mr. Miller's suspicions were aroused when he saw the advertisement, although Noblett had changed the telephone number he had used in previous advertisements which had been rejected by THE TIMES.

Trap Is Laid for Noblett.

Inquiry uncovered that the telephone was for the apartment which Noblett had used so frequently in his various schemes. Then Mr. Miller arranged to trap the man. He dressed himself in a light suit, stuffed railroad time tables and other data in his pockets when he called on Noblett with Mrs. Nash and said they had just returned from Florida and desired to sublet the apartment. Noblett said he would surrender the apartment furnished from April 14 to June 14 at $225 a month. This was after more than an hour's wait in the apartment, during which Mr. Miller and Mrs. Nash said, the telephone, concealed in a closet, rang almost continuously with persons calling up for information about the apartment in response to Noblett's advertisement.

Noblett was wary, however, observing the actions of his visitors from another room for most of the time they were there, after explaining that he and his family had been at breakfast when they called, although it was almost noon. He sought to obtain an advance of two months' rent from Mr. Miller, but eventually accepted the $10 and gave the receipt, written by him on a typewriter in the room, when Mr. Miller agreed to return at 5:30 P. M. Neither Mr. Miller nor Mrs. Nash returned, however. Instead they prepared to lay the evidence they had gathered against Noblett, including the receipt, before Assistant District Attorney Murphy. This, the prosecutor said, clinched the swindling charge against Noblett initiated by Mr. Bourne's complaint.

Noblett's Criminal Record.

Noblett's criminal record at Police Headquarters reveals that he was discharged on a grand larceny charge by Magistrate Grady on Aug. 7, 1893; Judge Cowing of General Sessions dismissed a grand larceny indictment against him in December of the same year; received the eight-year sentence from Recorder Goff six years later; was discharged on a grand larceny charge by Magistrate Krotel in June, 1899; the following year was arrested in Philadelphia on another grand larceny charge, of which the records reveal no disposition; on May 16, 1911, was discharged by Magistrate Cornell on a grand larceny charge; four days later again was discharged on a similar charge; three months later was arrested for violating the Postal law, but the Federal indictment was dismissed when it was found that Noblett had served the eight-year term in Sing Sing for the same offense.

On Oct. 1 of the next year, however, Noblett received his second sentence to Sing Sing on a similar charge, and five years later he again was taken into custody on a grand larceny charge, but there is no record of the disposal of this case. He was arrested by a detective of the Pennsylvania Railroad police, after he had been acquitted by a jury in the Kings County Supreme Court on a charge of swindling a dentist was veteran Justice Strong described the verdict as "a miscarriage of justice."

Noblett, in 1922, was acquitted in the Federal court on an indictment alleging that he attempted to steal a Liberty bond, and as he walked out of court was taken into custody again by the Federal authorities on a charge that he used the mails to defraud, but there is no record of the disposal of this case. His twelfth arrest recorded in the police archives took place in February, 1923. It also was based on a grand larceny charge.

Chief Assistant District Attorney Pecora, after Noblett's arraignment before Judge Mancuso yesterday, declared that THE NEW YORK TIMES and The World "had rendered a distinct public service" in aiding the District Attorney's office in obtaining evidence against the ex-convict.

CENSURES COOLIDGE FOR MEXICANS' VISIT

Archbishop Curley Says Inference Will Be That Country Approves Church Persecution.

RECEIVED AS DIPLOMATS

Washington Points Out That President Received Casaurano and Telles as Pure Formality.

Special to The New York Times.

BALTIMORE, April 10.—Archbishop Michael J. Curley in an article on the Catholic situation in Mexico published today in the current issue of The Baltimore Catholic Review, official organ of the Baltimore diocese, inferentially criticizes President Coolidge for entertaining at the White House Manuel Telles, the Mexican Ambassador, and Puig Casaurano, Mexican Minister of Instructions.

After denouncing the present hostility of the Mexican Government toward religious orders and the expulsion of Catholic nuns and priests, Archbishop Curley writes:

"Now, then, there is Puig, Minister of Education. Lenin and Trotsky have nothing on our Puig. God must be banished. The lights of Heaven must be put out. Mexican children must be raised atheists as far as Red Government is concerned. Freedom in educational matters is dead. The wretched Government cannot educate the children.

"Calles and his band of Reds blame the Catholic Church for Mexican illiteracy, when in their patent insincerity they know that the Church never got a chance to do her work. American journals, Red and otherwise, sing the song of Calles and his robber band for pay. They know nothing about Mexico or its Constitution of 1917, and they care less.

"Puig was arrested for libel at San Benito, Texas, by Sheriff Robertson. He was allowed out on $500 bail, and off he started for the capital city of the U. S. A."

"Telles, who is the spokesman of the Mexican Bolshevists, took him in hand, and the next thing we find is that Puig and Telles are entertained in the White House. There was a distinguished company present and the affair was given prominence in the social column of The Washington Post.

"Now, we have no interest whatever in White House entertainments. But in this particular case we have an interest. The social recognition of the Red Minister, the persecutor of Catholic sisters, the destroyer of Christian education, the enemy of all real liberty, has been made much of by the Reds and Calles back home, and now we are told that our President and our Secretary of State approve the whole hellish attitude of Puig Casauranc.

"I am not saying that this is true; I am sure it is not. But I repeat that the interpretation put upon the luncheon given to Puig is precisely one of approval by our Government of the bitter anti-Catholicism of the gunmen now ruling and ruining Mexico."

Welcome Was Diplomatic Courtesy.

Special to The New York Times.

WASHINGTON, April 10.—The welcome extended to Puig Casauranc, Mexican Minister of Education, by President Coolidge when the former was on a recent visit to this country was declared in official circles today to have been merely in the nature of the customary courtesy extended to a Cabinet member of a foreign nation, and did not in any way imply American approval of the religious persecution in Mexico, against which this Government has made informal representations through Ambassador Sheffield at Mexico City.

This explanation followed the publication today of a statement made by Archbishop Curley of Baltimore, who declared that "Red journals" in Mexico had exploited the news of the reception of the Mexican Minister of Education by President Coolidge as proof of America's approval of Mexico's religious policy.

Instructions were sent to Ambassador Sheffield, soon after Mr. Casauranc's reception by President Coolidge, instructing him to make informal representations to the Mexican Government against the deportation of the foreign clergy and to do whatever he could to ameliorate the situation.

Replying to the statement of Archbishop Curley, J. M. Bejarano, a Mexican journalist attending the Pan-American Congress now in Washington, and declaring himself to be a representative of the Minister of Education, addressed the following letter to The Washington Post:

Hotel Powhatan,
Washington, April 10, 1926.

To the Editor The Washington Post,
Washington, D. C.

My dear Sir:

As a member of the Mexican delegation to the first Pan-American Congress of Journalists, and as a representative of the Hon. José Manuel Puig Casaurnao, Secretary of Public Education in the Mexican Government, I ask you please to permit me to refer to the article you publish today containing a statement by Archbishop Michael J. Curley of Baltimore.

The statement of Archbishop Curley, which serves admirably to portray him and his associates, requires no rectification. It does not surprise me as it certainly will not surprise those familiar with the actuation in Mexico of individuals who by their intolerance have provoked the situation of which they now complain.

The American people, with their adamant characteristics of straightforwardness and fairplay, will fully understand, after reading the article which has prompted this letter, why Mexico has had to resort to the measures it has been forced to employ.

Yours faithfully,
JOSE MIGUEL BEJARANO,
Member of Department of Education.

SAYS HUERTA FLED, FEARING ASSASSINS

Dr. Ferrer, a Refugee, Asserts Ex-President of Mexico Was Warned of Calles Agents.

TELLS OF INSANITY REPORTS

Declares Rumors Are Circulated to Pave Way for the Sudden Disappearance Here of Huerta.

Adolfo de la Huerta, Provisional President of Mexico in 1920, who has been living in retirement here on the upper west side, has received word of the presence in New York City of three secret agents of the Calles Government who have come here to assassinate him, it was said yesterday by Dr. Adolfo Ferrer, of 126 West Eighty-eighth Street, a Mexican refugee who is at present Professor of Spanish at Fordham University. Dr. Ferrer said de la Huerta was so convinced of the genuineness of his danger that, within the last few days, he had left his former residence and had sought refuge elsewhere.

Following the seizure of his banana plantation in the State of Tabasco after the de la Huerta rebellion against Calles, Dr. Ferrer came to New York. He said yesterday that de la Huerta had been living here for more than a year, but that his whereabouts were known only to his most trusted friends.

"About twelve days ago," Dr. Ferrer said, "there appeared in several Mexico City newspapers an item announcing certain orders which stated that de la Huerta had become crazy and that he was suffering from acute constipation, which was prohibiting a quality transfusion. Another story of the matter said that he spent nearly all day sitting alone on a bench in Central Park, and everyone else, away from his friends.

"As soon as this news reached New York City I spoke with Señor de la Huerta about it, at first in a jesting way. He also, treated the matter imaginatively. He said to me, for example, 'Perhaps they would like to have me crazy, but the fact is that my mind was never better able to understand how Mexico is suffering from the reign of terror which has resulted from the present Administration.'

"Frank reports, however, were received by Señor de la Huerta from absolutely trustworthy sources which lead him to regard the matter much more seriously. He was advised that the rumors of his alleged insanity were being circulated to prepare the public mind for his sudden disappearance. It was made clear to him that those who were trying to get him wanted to use the opportunity that he had suddenly gone insane to make out of the way more easily and unnoticed some of his friends, as well as himself. Something into the Mexican Embassy, or taking poison some railroad journey.

"On top of all of this, Señor de la Huerta received a letter from a friend in a city in the United States that the assassins in New York were trying to get him, and that he should take every precaution to protect his life. Accordingly, Señor de la Huerta decided to give up his residence here and to seek the safety of some other place.

"The case of de la Huerta is simply an illustration of what is going on all over Mexico. Whenever a Mexican is courageous enough to express an opinion criticising or antagonizing the present Government, he is either attacked from ambush and killed or his property confiscated for some fictitious reason. I have sworn statements from people who have recently come to the United States from Mexico which tell of scores of such cases of terrorism and secret assassination."

CAMP CLOTHING

our prices are the same reasonable ones to all

GIVING discounts to camp directors is one way of securing camp outfitting business, but as this is usually a secret commission, given, and accepted, without the parent's knowledge, we consider it a highly unethical practice. We see no reason why the parent should be coerced into buying at this or any other store, simply because a camp director receives a gratuity for sending him there.

We outfit thousands of girls and boys for camp every year, and our large business is done on the superior cut and quality of the clothes themselves. In appearance, comfort, durability, they cannot be surpassed. Always honestly and openly priced.

PRESS ASSOCIATIONS OUTLINE THEIR AIMS

Speakers Tell Pan-American Journalists They Serve Truth and Fraternity.

RADIO A HELPFUL AGENCY

President Coolidge and Chiefs of Brazil and Peru Send Messages to Meeting.

Special to The New York Times.

WASHINGTON, April 10. — Three press associations of this country outlined their problems and aspirations before the Pan-American Congress of Journalists today, when spokesmen pledged themselves to truth in news and to the promotion of international understanding.

At a luncheon in the Mayflower Hotel at the conclusion of the session the press associations were congratulated by three American Presidents. Arthur Bernardes, President of Brazil, in a special cable to the gathering read by Karl A. Bickel, President of the United Press, expressed his approval of the purposes of the congress.

"My best wishes," he continued, "that the press of our continents should be an element working constantly for moral elevation and at the same time sufficiently vigorous in its struggle in the great cause of truth, justice, and international fraternity."

President A. B. Leguia of Peru cabled to urge the associations on "to the service of American confraternity by exalting ties that unite their countries or by lessening the differences that separate."

President Coolidge sent a communication declaring:

"The dissemination of news is more than a commercial proposition. Done with conscientious adherence to high standards, it is of real value in the development of national life and in the maintenance of friendly relations between nations. The more the news services between the United States and Latin America are extended, the better will be an understanding of one another."

The Future Use of Radio.

The part that the radio will play in the future gathering of news was stressed by two speakers at the morning session.

"We all know that radio communication has gone beyond the field of experiment," said M. Koenigsberg, President of the International News Service.

"We know that radio and the automatic typewriter together can make the transmission of news so cheap that the newspapers of North America, through their press associations, will be able to afford to gather the news of South America, and the newspapers of South America will be able to gather the news of North America, in as great detail as they wish. Dr. Ernesto Montenegro of El Mercurio, Santiago, Chile, protested the same development.

"All points to the possibility," he said, "that in the no distant future the unexplained irregularities of radio service will be eliminated, as it is greatly reduced, and the radio will be one of the regular services of news for newspaper consumption; but it is most likely that the radio companies will not be another competitor, but a prosperous partner in the enterprise."

The United States delegates report with interest Mr. Koenigsberg's description of how detailed news of the United States already is sent daily to South America. From seats distant to the Windy temperatures at Helena, Mont., the news is duly reported.

World-wide Sweep of the News.

Frank B. Noyes, President of The Associated Press, continued the discussion of the angles to which the press goes to obtain accurate news, showing how the spotlight of publicity swept from the collapse of a Costa Rican railroad bridge one day to the finding of ancient records on the Atlantic steppes the next. The Associated Press has now upon 97,000,000 for the collection and distribution of news, he said.

F. R. Perez, Vice President of the United States Press Association, emphasized a theme dwelt on by all when he denounced propaganda and pleaded for "the unvarnished truth."

"The day of the established or salaried news agency is passing," he said.

"The international news gatherer may serve his country," Mr. Perez added, "not even his own. His ideal be the patriotism of truth."

A resolution asking the congress to favor the elimination of unnecessary cable news was presented by José Campubri, publisher of the Spanish paper La Prensa of New York, and was referred to the Committee on Resolutions. Mr. Campubri said that the resolution had the backing of twenty women's organizations in Peru and one in Cuba.

BISHOP DEDICATES STEEL

Methodists Have Ceremony on Site of New Broadway Temple.

Bishop Francis J. McConnell of Pittsburgh delivered yesterday the steel which will form the framework of the new Methodist Broadway Tabernacle Temple at 56th to 56th Streets, Washington Heights, being erected by the Rev. Dr. Christian F. Reisner and the congregation of Christian Methodist Church, of which he is pastor.

Dr. Reisner and the officers of the Broadway Temple Corporation took more than 200 members of the New York Methodist Episcopal Conference, which is in session in Manhattan, to the site of the temple to-day. A temporary platform had been erected, and Bishop McConnell and others spoke from it. There were brief addresses by Dr. Reisner, Ellis L. Phillips, President of the Long Island Lighting Company, who is head of the church corporation, and R. L. V. Pittie, an officer in St. Andrew's Methodist Church.

MILK MEN IN ACCORD WITH HARRISON CURB

Health Commissioner Confers With Dealers to Forestall Renewal of Extortion.

COOPERATION IS PROMISED

Harris Says He Has Heard of More Pledges of Immunity Being Made and Cautions Dealers.

Health Commissioner Louis I. Harris held three conferences on the milk situation with milk and cream dealers yesterday. To forestall efforts already being made to pave the way for the extortion of money from milk dealers, Health Commissioner Harris announced that his door would be open at any time to dealers solicited to pay allegedly "influential" men for permission to adulterate milk.

Dr. Harris announced that as a result of the conferences there was a general agreement as to the desirability of having new regulations concerning the distribution of skimmed milk in this city. Because skimmed milk was used to adulterate loose milk, Dr. Harris decided to abolish the entry of skimmed milk except in those few commercial enterprises where the skimmed milk was not sold for consumption as whole milk.

Milk Men to Cooperate.

Forty members of the Milk Conference Board, the principal distributer of milk in this city, met Dr. Harris and decided to name a committee to cooperate with him. Hugh W. Taylor, director of the Bureau of Food and Drugs; James E. Thompson, chief of the Milk Inspection Department, and Assistant Corporation Counsel James D. O'Sullivan are preparing regulations to cover the skimmed milk industry.

Thirty independent milk dealers who handle approximately one-third of the city's supply also conferred with Commissioner Harris. He admonished them against irregular practices in adulterating milk which were revealed by the recent investigation. The dealers gave him assurances of cooperation with the Health Department.

Dr. Harris told the milk dealers he understood that some unprincipled men were planning to take the place of Harry Dansiger, arrested on an extortion charge. He said he understood that these men had been promising the milk dealers favors and immunities from the Health Department, and he warned the dealers not to be misled.

Offers Aid to Dealers.

Any dealer with a legitimate complaint, said Dr. Harris, who had a story of unfairness of milk inspectors or officials, need not hire a lawyer to represent them. "Official doors will be open and complaints will be sympathetically received, investigated and decided on their merits," added Dr. Harris.

The last conference was one of sour cream dealers, and these Dr. Harris warned against the use of adulterants in their product.

Dansiger, the Middle Village milk dealer, out on $10,000 bail on a charge of extorting money from milk dealers, called at the office of District Attorney Richard Newcombe in Queens yesterday. Mr. Newcombe did not discuss Dansiger's visit. He was questioned by Assistant District Attorney Peter Daly.

Presentation of the case of former employes of the Health Department to the Grand Jury is being delayed for a few days because further corroborative evidence of an important nature is expected.

Assemblyman Louis A. Cuvillier announced yesterday that he had prepared a bill making it a felony for any person to adulterate, cut or monopolize the control, distribution or price of milk in New York State and would introduce the measure in the Legislature tomorrow night.

RE-SOUNDS WARNING ON RUSSIAN LOANS

Government States Policy, Following Disapproval of Harriman Project in Germany.

KERENSKY DEBT A BARRIER

Administration Against Extending Aid, Even Through Another Nation, While Soviet Refuses Payment.

Special to The New York Times.

WASHINGTON, April 10.—American bankers interested in the possibility of making loans to Russia have been informed by the State Department that the Administration would not look favorably either upon lending money directly to Russia or to other foreign countries for promoting their trade with the Soviet republic.

This announcement was made at the State Department today following the publication in The New York Times of a dispatch from Berlin stating that Secretary Kellogg had made known his disapproval of a project contemplated by W. Averill Harriman for financing German exports to Russia, whereupon the American banker had abandoned his plan.

It was said at the State Department today that, while the department has never disapproved of or discouraged trade or commerce between the United States and Russia, it would not be to the interest of the United States to lend money to a foreign country to trade with Russia, as this would amount indirectly to lending money to Russia.

The State Department does not see how it could benefit the United States to make loans to foreign countries for trading with Russia. It was stated further that as the Russian debts to the United States have not been funded, the Administration does not feel disposed to extend credits to Russia any more than to any other debtor nation which has not met its obligations. This has been the policy of the Administration dating back more than a year.

This was interpreted to mean that the department will insist on the Soviet Government funding the Kerensky debt to the United States before it will approve of long loans to Russia. The Kerensky debt with accrued interest amounts to approximately $200,000,000.

In this connection there were unconfirmed reports here tonight that American bankers are considering the advisability of promisory advances of money to Russia if that country would fund the Kerensky obligation. Officials insisted, however, that there was no indication on the part of the Soviet Government, either in its public statements or in its acts, that it was ready to recognize the debt.

In the knowledge of the State Department a good many small loans have been made to Germany which have been used for the purpose of developing German trade with Russia, although the department does not know what sum these various loans would aggregate. The department, however, has been powerless to exercise any control over these transactions, which have, for the most part, been made through indirect channels.

Special to The New York Times.

WHITE PLAINS, N. Y., April 10.—Work has been started on the remodeling and enlarging of the Maplemoor golf course in Saxon Woods Park by employes of the Westchester County Park Commission, under plans prepared by Tom Winton, consulting architect, who designed the Park Commission's course at Mohansic Park, which was opened last year.

Maplemoor, located between the Mamaroneck River and Hutchinson River parkways, is being enlarged from the original nine holes to eighteen holes, and because of the extensive work being done will not be opened this season.

Ultimately there will be three public courses for Westchester residents under the supervision of the Park Commission, the Mohansic course, the Maplemoor and a course that is being laid out along the Sprain Brook Parkway north of Yonkers into the town of Greenburgh.

is not mere news---it is CORRECT APPAREL

The Coat Illustrated

From Paris—A new idea in cleverly worked ermine on tuxedo collar and front facings appears on this luxurious Juina Superior coat.

Not mere news! For in our shop the prediction of a mode is the production of a fashion. Here appear the very gowns, coats, suits and accessories that are THE FASHION. From Paris, from London—from the world's Fashion centers we bring you the latest modes---establishing Stewart & Co. as an authority on "Correct Apparel."

And These are the Chosen Fashions for Tomorrow—

ERMINE TRIMMED COATS

The Smartest of Them All!

55.00 to 149.50

White ermine—Beige ermine—Cocoa ermine—this softly flattering fur lends royal distinction to the newer and more important coat modes. Displayed, tomorrow, by Stewart & Co. on Molyneux's dolman replica coat—Renee's side-bloused cape-coat—straightline coats of tucked simplicity—these and many other expressions of the "vogue for ermine."

PICTURESQUE TAFFETA GOWNS

Lanvin calls them "Cossette," "Musette," "Don Juan"

55.00 and 59.50

Lanvin's creations that took Paris by storm are here for you now at Stewart & Co. in the most perfect reproductions—showing the "gigot" sleeves that make the snug bodice look more tiny! Your first thought when you see them—and your last—is "exquisite!" Of taffeta—for afternoons.

THE LARGE HAT

Made In Our Studio, 20.00

Just as Paris individualizes the hat mode by making hats to your order, so we offer you this service. The large horse-hair hat, ribbon trimmed, is only one of many modes. Others—

OLD FROCK CAN BE BRIGHTENED UP FOR SPRING

Judicious Use of New Neckwear Lightens Its Somber Tones

Now that the first warm days have arrived, the dresses which you have cheerfully worn all winter do seem drab and shabby in the spring sunshine. But don't just shrug your shoulders and bear it. Make a tour of inspection of Macy's neckwear department and you will discover dozens of delightful ways to "springify" your dark frocks.

There are as many varieties of neckwear as there are spring flowers; the tailored piquet or linen with mannish collar and prim self-covered buttons, the sheer and daintily pin-tucked organdie, the softly flattering jabot-vestee, and the gorgeous creation of rich silk and embroidery.

As for collar and cuff sets, their name is legion and their charms are little less in Macy's Neckwear Department on the street floor. The frilly lace sets seem to be having the greatest vogue at present, but the simple organdie or linen sets will never lose popularity with the tailored girl.

Tell Season By Baseball

According to the Farmers' Almanac, spring arrived on the 21st of March, but everybody knows that spring is not confined to a date.

By St. Patrick's Day, the man who sells baseballs in Macy's Sporting Goods Department reported that he had already sold about 200 baseballs. Spring beat the old Farmers' Almanac this time.

Players of the national pastime are perfectly aware of the standard price of baseballs. Macy's Sporting Goods Department on the fifth floor sells standard brands at a considerable saving. There are also many less expensive baseballs that will stand hard knocks for a surprisingly large number of games.

What Is a Picnic Without Sandwiches?

There is a shop in New York that has developed the making of delicious sandwiches into a fine art. Every kind imaginable, from the aristocratic caviar tidbit to the plebeian ham sandwich, may be had at this picnicker's paradise, Macy's Delicatessen Shop on the Fifth Floor.

The Book Column

New Books That People "in the Know" Are Now Reading.

"The Letters of Sir Walter Raleigh," edited by Lady Raleigh. Most delightful reading in these personal letters of a cosmopolite and Oxford professor. Two volumes.

"The Mind of the President," by C. Bascom Slemp. A philosophical, epigrammatic, and informative presentation of Mr. Coolidge's views on important public questions.

"When We Were Rather Older," by Fairfax Downey, a blithe, spontaneous parody of that acknowledged classic, "When We Were Very Young."

"Nize Baby," by Milt Gross. A screaming comedy in four floors, filled with the adroit malapropisms for which Mr. Gross is famous.

These books are obtainable at Macy's Book Department on the street floor.

An Attractive Sweater Makes One Suit Do the Duty of Two

When Jacket of Tailored Costume Is Taken Off, a Smart Two-Piece Sports Garment Is Revealed

When Paris decreed "sweaters with tailored suits," it solved a problem that has puzzled women for ages. For when has woman not worn the tailored spring suit? And when has she not worried over the problem it presented—how to look smart during the times it was necessary to leave off the jacket?

This year's sweaters solve the problem admirably. There are three models carried in Macy's Sweater Department on the third floor seemingly designed for this very purpose. When the jacket of the suit is worn, the little silk collars or vestees on these sweaters lend just the needed air of tailored swank. When the jacket is removed, the costume becomes the smartest of two-piece sports outfits, a well tailored skirt, with matching or harmonizing sweater top.

TRIPOLI ALL AGLOW TO GREET MUSSOLINI

Colorful Welcome Planned for the Dictator and Great Enthusiasm Prevails.

POLICE GUARDS REDOUBLED

Premier Is Considered Safer in Africa Than in Rome, but No Chances Are Being Taken.

Copyright, 1926, by The New York Times Company.
By Wireless to THE NEW YORK TIMES.

TRIPOLI, April 10.—As Premier Mussolini prepared to embark at Spensia, determined to make his spectacular tour of his African colonies, despite his attempted assassination, the Colonial Government of Tripoli completed final arrangements for the strictest measures to safeguard the Premier's life while he is in Africa. Although it is not believed he will be in any great danger here—possibly he is safer in Africa than in Italy, as one official smilingly remarked—the Governor's office intends to take no chances of letting an irresponsible or political enemy get an opportunity for a pot shot at the eminent visitor.

Additional precaution was ordered following the receipt of news of the attempt at Rome. It is admitted there is always a possibility of a fanatic slipping into the coast towns; therefore the local authorities plan close police protection for Il Duce.

The Premier will be given a strong guard and many plainclothes men will be scattered among the crowds in this most picturesque Arabian seaport.

The news of the attempt on Premier Mussolini's life caused a sensation in the European colony here. The entire Italian section of the capital turned out to stage a big public demonstration of joy over the Premier's escape. A prominent official spoke, expressing thankfulness that Il Duce's life was spared. The celebration reached its height when a large street parade of all the Fascisti in Tripoli marched down the ancient capital's only principal street, the Via Zizia, at night. Crowds of Arabs in their ancient, flowing robes of Biblical days, packed the street from end to end, furnishing a strange Eastern background for the vigorous, modern Western political parade.

Thanksgiving Salute Fired.

At noon today, as the steamship Solunto, bringing a party of six American correspondents and twenty-five Italian newspaper men, swung into the harbor, the citadel fired a salute of twenty-one guns to celebrate the Premier's escape. Similar salutes were fired by military posts throughout Italian Africa.

Meanwhile preparations to receive the Premier are being rushed, a large open air façade being constructed at the end of the Via Zizia, alongside the Governor's palace, where an elaborate reception is planned for Sunday night. The structure also stands almost in the shadow of a white minaret and a stone's throw from an ancient Arab market. Here and there up and down the Via Zizia one sees posters in store windows announcing Premier Mussolini's imminent arrival. The European colony is all keyed up over his visit.

But in the narrow, colorful corridors in the Arab quarter, where native life goes on as it has in all Arab countries for thousands of years, the Premier's visit has hardly stirred a ripple. The few who know seem not to care whether the great Fascist leader is coming or not. Some are mildly curious, but most of them are largely indifferent and take comparatively little interest in political matters.

The present Arab population in Tripoli is fairly quiet and gives little trouble. The Italians are wise enough to let well enough alone, not wishing to stir up a hornets' nest similar to those harassing several other European powers with Moslem dominions.

Calls Tripoli a Political Oasis.

"In the middle of the flaming, smoldering coast of North Africa, Tripoli stands forth as the only little oasis of today political tranquility," the Vice Governor, Ugo Niccoli, formerly Count Volpi's chief administrator during the Italian conquest of the district, said during an hour's conversation.

The conversation took place on the top floor of the Governor's palace. A contingent of Arab buglers in colorful native uniforms had just blown taps in the square below as the Italian flag was lowered at sunset. Scarcely half an hour before the Mohammedan priests had appeared on the balconies of several minarets, which rise above the housetops in the vicinity of the Governor's palace to call the faithful to final evening prayers on the Moslem Lent, which ends today.

From a window in the Vice Governor's office two slim white towers, each illuminated with a ring of electric lights, were still visible against the background of the flaming African sunset, and the Mediterranean with scarcely a ripple stretched away to the north and west.

"With the exception of Tripoli all North Africa today is in flames," said the Vice Governor. "In Morocco the Spaniards and the French are engaged in open warfare. In Algeria the tribes are deeply stirred. Egypt is quieter on the surface, but dangerous undercurrents give the British good reason for anxiety."

Continuing, Senator Nicoli reviewed the story of Italy's swift and determined conquest of her African dominions, contrasting her methods and the fundamental political differences of the situation in the territory controlled by Italy and the regions governed by other European powers.

He said that, with the exception of infrequent isolated cases on the southern frontier, outlaw bands in Tripoli have been subdued for two years. The balance of Italian Africa was also relatively peaceful, the only actual fighting being in parts of the eastern province of Cirenaica, where the Italians maintain a small field force which is occasionally drawn into guerilla skirmishes. All organized opposition, however, has been crushed.

"Italy's success in Africa can be ascribed to two factors," continued the Vice Governor. "First, Italian Africa is peopled with an untutored and comparatively passive group of Arabs, the majority of whom are too ignorant to bother about political matters and too indifferent to take any initiative unless stirred up by their leaders.

"If their passions are fanned from above, this mass of humanity can, of course, become dangerous, but if it is let alone the rank and file follow the course of least resistance.

"This circumstance enabled us to apply the dominant feature of our policy, which has been to make revolt impotent by cutting of its head. We combed the country for leaders, had them arrested and tried them before a military tribunal, which sentenced thirty to death and imprisoned a number of others.

Tells How Fascism Rules.

"We got our hands on every important chief except one, who escaped. A number of lesser leaders fled from the district, leaving the Arab masses chieftainless and impotent. We also obliged all conquered tribes to surrender their weapons, the total rifles seized amounting to more than 40,000.

"Meanwhile, we preserve a strict but just discipline throughout the territory. We let the Arabs know they have got to respect us, but that we intend to look out for their interests."

Signor Nicoli said that Italian military policy during the operations in Africa had been to utilize the troops of friendly natives almost entirely, maintaining the smallest number of Italians as a nucleus of an army. For this reason the conquest cost very little loss of Italian life, and he estimated the total number of Italians killed in Africa since the World War at about 200.

Although Spanish and French operations in Morocco held the centre of the picture, the Vice Governor declared there had been stiff warfare in Italian Africa until two years ago, when at the height of the operations Italy had an army of 30,000 in the field.

He said Italy still maintains a regular fighting force in the Province of Cirenaica, which adjoins Tripolitania to the east. Judging from Signor Nicoli's remarks, this contingent still has some work to do. He declared, however, that the subjugation of the tribes is advancing rapidly.

Signor Nicoli also said that during the last two years of peace the Italians had pushed the frontier of cultivation in Tripoli nearly thirty miles to the south. He said they had extended another cultivated area, seventy kilometers to the west on a coastal strip six miles deep and forty kilometers wide.

He believed a large part of the province was convertible to farming purposes by use of the so-called dry farming methods.

Mussolini Keeps at Work on Warship.

ABOARD THE DREADNOUGHT CONTE DI CAVOUR, En Route to Tripoli, April 10 (by Wireless to The Associated Press).—Premier Mussolini during his voyage to Tripoli is maintaining the same pace which characterizes his activities in Rome.

He rises at an early hour and inspects the various departments of the flagship, from the Admiral's bridge to the engine room. Afterward he witnesses fencing matches between the most skilled swordsmen aboard the vessel, and then takes on the winner himself. In these matches the Premier exhibits considerable ability. Then the sailors stage a tug-o'-war.

The exercises over, the Premier's secretaries, who have gone through piles of dispatches, submit to him the more important questions relating to domestic and foreign policies. These he disposes of with concise instructions.

In the evening he presides over an assembly of the crew, during which prayer is offered, and at the conclusion of which the flag is lowered to the strains of the Royal March.

FASCISM WILL STAY, SAYS MUSSOLINI

Tells Spanish Editor Regime Has a Long Series of Years Before It.

Special Cable to THE NEW YORK TIMES.

LONDON, April 10.—A review of Fascist faith and future policy is contained in a special interview given by Premier Mussolini to Dr. Andre Revesz, foreign editor of the Madrid newspaper A. B. C., which is printed in the Sunday Times.

"What is the practical result of Fascism, and are the people content?" asked Señor Revesz.

"Look around you," was Mussolini's answer, "and you will see nothing but overflowing activity, unceasing labor and prosperous industry. There are no unemployed and people earn sufficient to live decently. In our country reign peace, discipline and security. What more do the people want? No one wants liberty with a capital L, the fetich of a bygone century."

"But if the masses are in favor of Fascism and of the Government, why fear the attacks of the Oppositon press?" Mussolini was asked.

"The restriction of freedom of the press is not enforced to protect the Government but to defend our credit abroad," he replied.

Asked how long Fascism would last, Mussolini replied:

"Without venturing to fix a date and without attempting to prophesy what may happen in the remote future, I can affirm that Fascism has before it a long series of years, during which it will be able to develop its vast program of material reconstruction and moral regeneration for Italy."

"Do you believe that other countries will imitate Fascism?" was the next question.

"I have already declared more than once that Fascism is an essentially Italian product," answered Mussolini. "That will not, however, alter the fact that the decadence of the democratic and parliamentary system is productive in almost all countries of movements analogous to Fascism which may be capable of imposing a check on the subversive whims of the Left parties, either by assuming power or by exercising their vigilant activity of control outside of actual government."

"Where will Italy send the surplus of her population?" Dr. Revez asked.

"After almost the total closure of North American territory against our emigrants they will go in ever increasing numbers toward Latin America, especially to those countries that enjoy a temperate Atlantic climate," was the reply. "The extent and fertility of these territories, their urgent need of greater exploration and profound affinities of race and language between the Italians and these South American peoples permit of our indulging in the highest hopes regarding the results of this fruitful international collaboration."

Mussolini in conclusion denied that there was a treaty of secret alliance between Rome and Moscow.

"That is pure folly—it is rubbish," he said. "The truth is that between Italy and Russia there are normal relations—cordial if you like to call them so. The economics of the two countries are complementary, which is favorable to commercial development, which has much progressed since the signing of the treaty.

"The totally different nature of the two political systems should not necessarily prevent the existence of peaceful relations. Italy has always respected the interior order of Soviet Russia, acting on the principle that every people is at liberty to choose its own for of government without reference to the approbation of other countries."

SHORTAGE CLOSES BANK.

Former Mayor of Ludlow, Ky., Cashier, Admits Blame.

LUDLOW, Ky., April 10 (AP).—The Farmers and Mechanics Bank of this city was closed today, because of a shortage of between $30,000 and $40,000 in the funds of the bank, according to a formal announcement made by the Board of Directors.

A. E. Trickett, City Solicitor of Covington, Ky., and Vice President of the bank, said T. W. Balsly, cashier of the bank and former Mayor of Ludlow, confessed to him that he was short in his accounts.

The bank is a State institution, chartered under Kentucky laws. It is capitalized at $30,000 and has deposits of $330,000.

MACREADY RESIGNS FROM AIR SERVICE

Announcement Is Made When He Is 37,000 Feet Above Earth With a Dead Engine.

MAKES REMARKABLE GLIDE

Lieutenant Had Been an Outstanding Army Flier and Holds Many World Records.

Special to The New York Times.

DAYTON, Ohio, April 10.—Lieutenant John A. Macready today wound up his career as a pilot in the Air Service and tonight he is a private citizen.

Announcement of his resignation from the service was made while he was 37,000 feet above the earth with a dead engine in a wind blowing 150 miles an hour.

Although he failed to break the French altitude record of 39,580 feet, Macready achieved new fame on this last flight today, when he made the longest glide in the history of aviation, ending in a perfect landing.

When he last looked at his barographs they indicated an altitude of 37,000 feet. When he looked again one of them was in the bottom of the cockpit, a frozen instrument, the other so frosted the dial was obscured. The temperature was 63 degrees below zero centrigrade. Macready then looked at his clock. It had frozen and stopped at 11:10 A. M.

The Lieutenant then discovered that the gasoline supply had failed and his engine was dead. He was above the city of Springfield and pointed the ship down, gliding all the way in great spirals twenty miles or more in circumference.

He is hopeful that official calibration may give him the altitude record, but does not really expect it.

Macready submitted his resignation subsequent to orders transferring him to France Field, Panama. He has joined the sales forces of the Delco Light Company, a subsidiary of the General Motors Corporation, and is expected to report for duty next week, although he is entitled to a leave of absence from the field.

Macready said he regretted leaving the Air Service, but the opportunity afforded him was such that he could do nothing but accept. He has spent nine years in the service, six at McCook Field, where he became the outstanding pilot, having held several world records. It was he who startled the world by flying to 40,200 feet. Soon after that he and Lieutenant Oakley G. Kelly flew for thirty-seven hours and then made the non-stop flight from New York to San Diego, Cal., of twenty-six hours.

Macready has little to say of his resignation, and he leaves the service with the good-will of superiors and men in the engineering division. Officers and men at McCook Field asserted that in his resignation the Air Service and aviation in general had received a hard blow. Macready contributed much to the improvement of airplanes and flying suits for pilots in his experimental work.

COURT WARNS AGAINST CAVEWOMAN METHODS

Puts Wife Who Beat Husband in Front of Crowd on Six Months' Probation.

Mrs. Anna McRae, 31 years old, of 28 East 130th Street, was found guilty in Night Court last night of beating her husband, who is twice her age, at Third Avenue and 127th Street, and causing a crowd to collect. In making his decision Magistrate Brodsky said:

"Many cases of wife-beating have come before me, but this is the first time that a husband-beater has ever been brought up in my court. These are the days of modern women but not the days of cave-women."

Patrolman Lloyd said he found the McRaes engaged in a heated argument with more than 1,000 persons gathered around them.

McRae said in Night Court that he had done no fighting himself and put the burden of the battle on his wife. She told Magistrate Brodksy that she slapped her husband because he had been late for dinner several times recently and because he had not given her enough money to pay the bills for the week. McRae had several marks on his face.

Magistrate Brodksy put Mrs. McRae on probation for six months with a warning not to beat her husband again.

Oxfords are best for tired feet

THERE is nothing like a pair of comfortable, natural Cantilever oxfords to ease tired, aching feet. These helpful shoes are shaped like the natural foot and follow every foot curve with the smoothness that only a natural fitting shoe can give you.

When you lace a Cantilever oxford, the flexible all-leather arch of the shoe is pulled up snugly to the under curve of the foot. A weak foot welcomes this restful support which does not restrict the action of the foot. Foot muscles are allowed to exercise and build up the springy strength they need to hold the twenty-six bones of the foot in arched formation.

The heel of the Cantilever Shoe is helpful, too. It is slightly higher on the inner side so as to induce the wearer to toe straight ahead. This swings the weight of the body away from the inner and weaker side of the foot, distributing it evenly and permitting the foot to act like a cantilever spring.

Why not try a pair of Cantilever oxfords this spring? They will help your feet from the first day you wear them and will eventually permit your feet to become self-supporting if they are weak now. For dress wear you will like a pair of comfortable Cantilever pumps, too. The stores listed below are showing many new Cantilever models now.

Widths, AAAA to E. Oxfords, $10.00 and $10.50; Pumps, $10.50 to $13.00. High Shoes, $11.75.
Men's Shoes, $11.00 and $12.00. For children and growing girls, $4.50 to $8.50.

FAVORS ALIEN BILL TO ADMIT VETERANS

Senate Committee Would Allow Them to Enter as Non-Quota Immigrants.

5,000 WOULD BE AFFECTED

Entry of Wives, Without Restoring Rights of Citizenship, Is Also Favored.

Special to The New York Times.

WASHINGTON, April 10.—The immigration bars would be let down for one year for American veterans of the World War if Congress should adopt an amendment to the Immigration act of 1924 which the Senate Committee on Immigration recommended today. It approved legislation also to admit as non-quota immigrants American-born women married to foreigners, but without restoring them to American citizenship.

Under the terms of the proposal, which soon will be laid before the Senate, honorably discharged veterans living abroad and their children under 18 years old would be permitted to come into the United States as non-quota immigrants. The bill also would allow automatic naturalization upon the application of such veterans here or abroad within two years.

According to Senator Reid, Republican, of Pennsylvania, who took part in the framing of the amendment, and a veteran himself, there are about 5,000 veterans in Europe who would be affected. It is estimated that approximately half of this number would return.

Senator Wadsworth, who had a bill pending to lighten the provisions of the law, told the committee of the difficulties that are being experienced under existing restrictions. He explained the difficulties under which a man may send for his wife and children after he has become a citizen. This process takes five years.

"If he arrived here in 1923, we will say, or before July 1, 1924," said Senator Wadsworth, "he would have to wait in the first instance until 1928 or 1929, probably until 1930, before he could become a citizen and hope to see his wife and children."

Senator Wadsworth stressed the importance of having these veterans contented in the United States, without grievance against the nation or its laws.

The committee has before it seventeen bills amending the immigration laws, but rejected with one exception everything except the proposed amendment as to admission of the veterans and their families.

John T. Taylor, representing the National Legislative Committee of the American Legion, testified that up to Jan. 1, 1926, the Veterans' Bureau had received 2,900,000 applications for adjusted compensation and of this number there were 15,421 from foreign countries.

Nearly 5,000 of these originated, he said, in countries whose citizens are allowed entry on a non-quota basis, like Canada and Mexico, and at least 2,500 more came from countries whose citizens have no difficulty on the quota basis in entering, like the British Isles, France, Germany and Belgium. This left 7,900 applications from citizens whose applications to return might be delayed. They were distributed through Italy, Russia, Poland and Greece.

INDIAN OFFICE HEAD DENIES ALL CHARGES

Burke Faces House Committee—Hudson Says Frear Should Not Sit With Colleagues.

WASHINGTON, April 10 (AP).—Commissioner Burke of the Indian Bureau made a sweeping defense of his administration today before the House Indian Committee, whose members are considering a demand by one of their number that Representative Frear, Republican, of Wisconsin, be asked to resign from the committee as an outgrowth of his recent utterances regarding Indian affairs.

Mr. Burke denied in detail the charges made by Mr. Frear, declaring that many of them had been based on misinformation and propaganda supplied by interested parties.

The demand for Mr. Frear's retirement from the committee has been made by Representative Hudson, Republican, of Michigan, but was not discussed at today's meeting. In a recent letter, he said, Mr. Frear virtually charged that Burke was controlling the committee. If the Wisconsin member holds that opinion of the committee, Mr. Hudson has told his colleagues, he should resign his membership.

Mr. Burke said he had made a thorough investigation and could deny flatly that "ball and chain" methods had been used in punishing Paul Moore, an Indian on a Wisconsin reservation, or that male and female prisoners were confined together in the same quarters in Indian jails.

He also denied Frear's accusations concerning royalties on oil lands. The specific charge by the Wisconsin member was that the Indian Bureau was seeking to throw open to oil land exploiters more than 20,000,000 acres of Indian land.

GENEVA, April 10.—The conference of the International Students' Organization before concluding its session here sent to the Committee on Intellectual Cooperation several resolutions which had been adopted regarding cooperation between student bodies.

These deal with the question of traveling facilities for students, exchanges, international fellowships, equalization of examinations and graduation certificates of various kinds, and establishment of student homes, as well as with financial measures related to these various subjects.

The division of work and responsibilities between these two organizations and a basis of cooperation with the Institute of Intellectual Cooperation are discussed at length.

BANDS PLAY FOR ARMY, FIGHTING TIGRIS FLOOD

Bagdad Population Sees Water Gaining and Houses and People Swept Away.

BAGDAD, Iraq, April 10 (AP).—The new Arab army is working feverishly to the strains of the military bands in throwing up dams to stay the flood, which threatens the entire city. Ten thousand men, women and children, who fear the destruction of their homes, watch them anxiously.

Five thousand men are engaged in this task, but the prospect tonight is gloomy indeed. The breach in the river bank near the Royal Palace, caused by the unprecedented floods of the Tigris, has gradually widened and torrents are now pouring in. The railway station is five feet under water. Already many houses have collapsed and residents of certain sections have been borne off in the raging waters.

The banks of the river present a pitiable sight as houses, trees and bodies swirl down the stream. The chief sufferers have been children, who because of their weakness, were unable to escape the torrent turned suddenly loose. Scores of mothers are among the stricken population bewailing the lost bodies of their loved ones.

The loss of life cannot be estimated and the material damage will be exceedingly heavy.

PREFERS OUR CONSTITUTION

London Editor Holds Britain Has Lost to Us Its Role of Exemplar.

Copyright, 1926, by The New York Times Company.
Special Cable to THE NEW YORK TIMES.

LONDON, April 10.—The American Constitution, which is sometimes condemned in this country on the ground that it makes the President almost a dictator, is given the blessing today of J. L. Garvin, editor of The Observer, for very much the same reason. In a review of Mussolini's career Mr. Garvin states:

"The Constitution of the United States is totally different from ours, and other countries look more to it for lessons. It provides for strength of the executive and stability of government and institutions. The German Presidency is rather more like the American than the French. Many thoughtful Frenchmen are more than ever convinced by the miserable experiences of the past few months that their executive should be Americanized.

"It seems improbable that parliamentarism in the old, loose sense will ever come back. It must be remembered that in these things the British Constitution, formerly copied everywhere, is no longer an example that any other European country thinks of following or can afford to imitate.

"We now have three parties; we have broken our old, great system of a majority government checked by a powerful opposition. We have fundamentally defective electoral laws, throwing office first into the hands of one minority and then into those of another.

"Henceforth we who invented constitutional freedom had better think of mending our own system. We are only ridiculous when we preach to others."

BLEASE DEFENDS BROOKHART'S TITLE

Invokes State Rights in Warning Democrats Not to Unseat the Iowa Senator.

TIE VOTE MAY BE POLLED

South Carolina Senator Renews His Attack on the Wilson Administration in War.

Special to The New York Times.

WASHINGTON, April 10.—Senator Cole Blease of South Carolina, who spoke today in favor of allowing Senator Smith Brookhart, Republican, of Iowa, to retain his Senate seat, renewed attacks on the Wilson Administration by declaring that American boys who were killed during the World War were "murdered."

Most of today's consideration of the election contest, in which Daniel F. Steck, Democrat, is contesting Senator Brookhart's seat, occurred in the cloak rooms, the Senate devoting the greater part of its attention to bills on the calendar. Varying predictions as to the result continued. The report persisted that there would be a tie vote of 47 to 47, with two Senators—Brookhart and Cummins—not voting. Another version gave Steck 47, Brookhart 40 and doubtful 7.

Senator Blease discussed the question from the point of view of State rights, declaring that those who said the South fought to prevent freedom for the negro uttered "a malicious slander." He said the committee which recommended unseating Mr. Brookhart had gone behind the election laws of Iowa, and he warned his Democratic colleagues who supported the committee that they were setting a precedent which might work to their disadvantage.

Mr. Blease's reference to the World War came in telling of his fight in South Carolina against the Dick law preparing for the war.

"It became a law and is a law today," said Mr. Blease, "and if it had not been for that law I do not think the Administration which has just passed out would be charged with as many murders in the sight of God as it is charged with by the fresh-made graves in this country and in France."

Senator Jones, Democrat, of New Mexico, arose. Senator Blease refused to yield, but Senator Jones exclaimed:

"I want to utter my protest against the use of such language by the Senator. I refer to the remark in which he referred to the soldiers who made the supreme sacrifice in the late war as having been murdered by this Government of ours."

"Well, we have a just difference of opinion on that; that is all," Senator Blease replied.

Discussing States' rights, Senator Blease said:

"Did you hear anything about States' rights when they were destroying everything we had? No. When did you hear it? You never heard from these great Governors of some States who now want to be candidate for President on the Democratic ticket—not a word—but when you took their liquor away from them, then you began to hear them exclaim about States' rights."

SAILS TO GET DATA FOR NEW MUSEUM

Calvin W. Rice Will Make Survey Abroad for the Peaceful Arts Institution.

Calvin W. Rice, Secretary of the American Society of Mechanical Engineers, sailed yesterday on the Paris for a tour of European museums in the interest of the Museum of the Peaceful Arts of the City of New York. He will be away for two months.

The Museum of the Peaceful Arts, made possible through the terms of the will of the late Henry W. Towne, lock manufacturer, which will eventually place about $2,500,000 at the disposal of the museum, will illustrate every phase of human endeavor from the earliest times to the present.

Mr. Rice will study foreign methods closely. He will examine systems of grouping exhibits, determine how the admittance of the public is regulated and survey museum sites and general administrative plans. Upon his return he will prepare a report which will be used in the conduct of the Museum of the Peaceful Arts when it comes into being.

Mr. Rice, who holds membership in many foreign scientific associations, has been Secretary of the American Society of Mechanical Engineers for more than twenty years, during which the association has grown from about 2,500 members with a budget of $50,000 to 15,000 members and a budget of $600,000. He is the second expert to go abroad for the projected museum, Elmer L. Sperry having sailed last week. Others are to go soon.

NEW DATA ON JESUS IN SLAVONIC VERSION

Dr. Vasher Burch Prefers It to Greek Translation of Works of Josephus.

ASKS A THOROUGH STUDY

Text Tells of "the Wonder Worker Jesus," Who Had "Risen From the Dead."

Copyright, 1926, by The New York Times Company.
By Wireless to THE NEW YORK TIMES.

LONDON, April 10.—An appeal for a thorough study of striking additional evidence of the historicity of Jesus, which he says is afforded by a Slavonic version of Josephus, is made by Dr. Vasher Burch, a noted authority on the study of Christian origins, in an article in the Diocese of Liverpool Review.

The most important works of Josephus, who was born in 37 A. D., were "Jewish Antiquities" and "History of the Jewish War." The latter work was originally composed in Aramaic.

At a later date a Greek version was issued by the author, which is in the form in which it is familiar to modern scholars. It is thought that the Greek version may have been altered in various ways from the original Aramaic.

The great interest attaching to the Slavonic version is that it exhibits the text substantially different in many respects from the ordinary Greek text.

"This version," says Dr. Burch, "is one in which are preserved long statements concerning Jesus Christ. Conversion and conservatism have influenced the few references which as yet have been examined of the witness of Christ has been examined and the fuller text of His writings rejected."

An entirely fresh account of Jesus is apparently given in the Slavonic text of "The Jewish War." Dr. Burch thus summarized it:

"Josephus tells us that he knows all about the trial of Jesus before Pilate; that in the time of the Emperor Claudius and Procurators Cuspius Fadus and Tiberius Alexander many were the 'slaves' of the wonder worker Jesus; that these preached that their 'Rabbi' who had died was risen from the dead, and, as well, they taught the new law, which is in opposition to old Jewish law; that these very early messengers of Jesus were teaching others who and what He was and is by help of a primitive 'documentary' mode which He had inspired and all His messengers had used."

BERENGER PRAISES FRENCH ALLIANCES

Ambassador Says the Societies Have Done Much to Promote International Good-Will.

SPEAKS AT ANNUAL MEETING

Declares Barriers Still in Way of Complete Amity Soon Will Be Down —Optimistic of Debt Accord.

Henry Berenger, French Ambassador to the United States, was presiding officer and chief speaker yesterday at the twenty-fourth annual meeting and luncheon of the Federation of French Alliances in this Country and Canada, held at the Hotel Plaza. Two hundred and fifty delegates from all sections of the country attended.

M. Berenger, in his address at the luncheon following a business meeting during the forenoon, paid a tribute to the work of the French Alliances in interpreting to America the ideals and thought of France, as well as in bringing about a better understanding of American traditions and life among the French people. Both countries, he declared, had a community of basic interests and ideals which had their roots in the early history of America, from the time of the French explorers and the Revolutionary days.

Despite these common interests, he continued, there were some difficulties still encountered in the effort to bring about a complete understanding, chief among these being the relatively small number of French residents here as compared with those of other European nations.

Sees Barriers Going Down.

But these barriers, he declared, were fast breaking down, and the two countries were on the way to a common pursuit of those principles of liberty and democracy on which they are founded.

Referring to the criticisms sometimes leveled at France, the speaker declared the charges of French militarism and imperialism were without foundation, and that as regards her foreign debt, France was making every effort to assume to the full her just obligations.

"The French citizens," he said, "are paying five times the amount in taxes that they did before the war, and relatively twice that of the American citizen today. As for armament, she is expending considerably less than in pre-war days. In Syria and Morocco France has accepted the mandate as the representative of Europe in the interests of peace and civilization.

"The moment will soon arrive when the debt negotiations between France and the United States will be satisfactorily concluded, with honor to France and fulfillment of the traditional generosity of America in carrying out her treaties with other nations for the betterment of international relations."

$36,000 of Fund Raised.

Frank D. Pavey, President of the Federation, announced that $36,000 has been raised in the last year toward a $100,000 fund to meet the expenses of French lecturers engaged to speak at American universities and before social and civic groups.

The Cross of the Legion of Honor was conferred by the French Ambassador on Albert Schinz, head of the French department at Smith College, for his distinguished services in education. M. Schinz has been in the United States since 1897 and has taught at the University of Minnesota, Bryn Mawr and at Smith College since 1913.

Other speakers included Samuel Hardin Church, President of the Carnegie Institute at Pittsburgh; Benjamin Vallotton, Swiss writer and journalist, who has for several months been lecturing in this country under the auspices of the Alliance Française, and Felix Weill of the department of French of City College, General Secretary of the Federation. Lawrence F. Abbott, President of the Franco-American branch of the American Good-Will Society, and Gonsalve Desaulniers of Montreal, Vice President of the Federation in Canada, announced as speakers, were unable to be present on account of illness.

Officers of the federation elected for the coming year were: President, Frank D. Pavey; Vice Presidents, James Hazen Hyde (France), Gonsalve Desaulniers (Canada), Albert Sauveur (New England States), Samuel A. Boyle (Eastern States), Murray M. Shoemaker (Central States), Charles A. Johnson (Western States), Leon Bocqueraz (Pacific States), Charles Loridans (Southern States); Chairman of the Executive Committee, Albert Blum; Treasurer, Maurice Mercadier; General Secretary, Felix Weill.

SENATE TO DECIDE TIME OF ENGLISH TRIAL

Precedent Holds Impeachment Actions Must Take Place While the House Is Sitting.

Special to The New York Times.

WASHINGTON, April 10.—A decision will be reached next week on the question as to whether the Senate has authority under the Constitution to try Judge George W. English of Illinois at a special session, or whether it must act while the House also is in regular session.

The House voted for the impeachment of Judge English, the resolutions charging the jurist with misbehavior in office. The Senate prefers to try the case at a special session to be called either in June or in November, but there is a precedent which holds that the Senate can sit as a trial body only while both branches of Congress are in session.

This precedent, which was established in 1876 in connection with the trial of Belknap, Grant's Secretary of War, was the result in large part of a contention made by Senator Conkling of New York. In the consideration of the Belknap impeachment, Senator Conkling insisted that "the trial of a public officer accused before the Senate could proceed only while Congress is in session."

The point was sustained by a vote of 21 to 19. Among those who voted for the proposal was Senator Dawes, an uncle of Vice President Dawes.

The Senate Judiciary Committee has appointed a subcommittee to decide whether the Senate would be within its rights in trying Judge English at a special session. The subcommittee is composed of Senators Cummins, Deneen, Overman and Walsh.

BE KIND TO ANIMALS WEEK.

Gov. Smith Endorses Movement; Old Mare to Be Retired.

Be Kind to Animals Week, which was inaugurated by the American Society for the Prevention of Cruelty to Animals in 1915 and has been continued annually ever since, will open today. In calling attention to the week's activities, Governor Smith said yesterday:

"I heartily endorse this very thoughtful and considerate movement to help dumb beasts and make their lives more peaceful and contented. It is right and proper to teach the youth of our country to be kind to dumb animals and to exercise mercy in the treatment of them. In teaching children the proper care of animals we at the same time teach them the benefits of kindness and mercy in the treatment of humanity."

One of the features of the week will be the retirement of Gypsey, a piebald mare employed in the service of the Namm store in Brooklyn for twenty years. Gypsey will be taken to the store in a S. P. C. A. ambulance, escorted by four mounted policemen, after which she will go to the Bailey Farm at Glen Head, L. I., to spend the remainder of her days.

WILD RUN ON BANKS BY CUBAN DEPOSITORS

that the country was going through a slight crisis caused by the low price of sugar, but that there was absolutely no justification for the run on the banks.

"Every bank established in Cuba today is in good condition and false reports, such as those started yesterday, can only harm the island," he said. "That is why I personally went to the Royal Bank of Canada and I assure you that $40,000,000 in the National Treasury is at the disposal of the banks if necessary. Fortunately, however, they do not need this help.

"The price of sugar has not changed. If it had been 5 or 6 cents and then dropped to 2 cents a panic would have been unavoidable; but as sugar has been 2 or 2½ cents for the last few months the banks have made their operations on that basis and no reason for panic exists."

General Machado asserted that only a slight crisis existed and that at the special Cabinet meeting on Monday some measure to settle the sugar problem would be adopted.

"I shall continue giving the country an honest, constructive administration," he added. "The Treasury is in splendid shape. No deficit exists, nor will one exist while I am President, and Cuba will not float any foreign loan while I am in power."

Statement for Americans.

To the correspondent of THE NEW YORK TIMES President Machado made this statement:

"No reason for alarm exists whatever. Americans residing here and those in the United States have no cause for worry. The run on the banks was of no importance and was caused by malicious statements. The slight crisis caused by the low price of sugar will soon disappear and the country continue its march of progress and prosperity. We have faith in the American people and its banking institutions, knowing they are favorably inclined toward us and glad to help when necessary."

The secret judicial police are seeking the persons circulating the malicious rumors about the banks. They are believed to be two discharged employes of the Royal Bank of Canada.

Money Being Rushed to Cuba.

Special to The New York Times.

WASHINGTON, April 10.—While the Federal Reserve Board was notified of the run on Havana banks and that the Federal Reserve Bank at Atlanta was extending cable credits to Havana banks through its branch in Jacksonville, the board, it was explained by officials, was not called upon to approve the course taken by the Atlanta Federal Reserve Bank.

Unofficial information was received here that the cause of the run was the publication of a statement in a Havana newspaper that the Government was about to declare a moratorium. This, it was said, caused many depositors to withdraw their money from banks in the fear that it would be tied up indefinitely if a moratorium were declared.

It was understood in Washington that money to cover the credits extended was being shipped to Havana and that an effort would be made to obtain a naval vessel to carry it from Key West, there being no passenger or other commercial vessels in operation today between Florida ports and Havana. Unofficial information received here later was that late this afternoon $35,000,000 in cash was being shipped from Jacksonville to Key West and would be carried to Havana on some Government vessel leaving Key West at daybreak tomorrow morning. This money would be at hand in Havana when the banks opened their doors again Monday morning, it was said.

Runs on Banks in Cuba Frequent.

The Federal Reserve System has a branch in Havana and is directly interested in seeing to it that ample funds are on hand to meet all the demands of depositors. In the case of the Havana branch of the National City Bank, also, the Federal Reserve Branch offers the most practicable and quickest agency through which additional money can be supplied. At the offices both of the National City and the Royal Bank of Canada in New York it was said yesterday that ample funds were assured to meet all demands and that most of the depositors who had withdrawn their funds in the run probably would put the money back in the banks within the next few days.

Bankers said that this was the third or fourth time that talk of a moratorium had started a bank run in Havana recently in connection with depression in the sugar industry due to low prices and the high American tariff. On the previous occasions depositors rushed to withdraw their money, hoarded it a few days and then returned it to the banks when it was seen that the moratorium reports were unfounded.

The disturbed conditions in Cuba were attributed partly to reports that the present sugar situation might result in the island's sugar industry falling into the hands of American banks. While interested in stabilization of the industry, American bankers have denied any desire for domination and have discredited reports that price fixing would be attempted.

The New York sugar market responded to the situation yesterday by developing a firm tone. This was based on reports that the Cuban Government early this week would take action with a view to reducing the production indicated by the principal crop estimates. From a market standpoint this would be a beneficial step, as the large centres now are oversupplied with sugar. Offerings were withdrawn to await further developments in Cuba and prices advanced.

ON ST. PAUL BOARD, HE OWNED NO STOCK

John McHugh Elected a Week Before He Got Holdings, Hearing Develops.

ROAD NEEDED A FINANCIER

Banker Asserts High-Type Man Would Have Been Great Help—Byram Chose Directors, He Says.

John McHugh, President of the Mechanics & Metals National Bank, testified yesterday at the Interstate Commerce Commission's investigation of causes that led to a receivership for the Chicago, Milwaukee & St. Paul Railway Company. He said he had been made a director of that railroad at a time when he did not own a single share of its stock.

Daniel H. Grady, Special Assistant Attorney General of Wisconsin, pointed out to the witness that, under the laws of Wisconsin, in which State the St. Paul was incorporated, it was necessary for a person to be a stockholder in any corporation before he could legally become a director. He said also that the by-laws of the St. Paul specifically stated that it was necessary for a person to own at least 100 shares of the stock before he could qualify as a director.

O. W. Dynes, attorney for the St. Paul, said that the records of the company showed Mr. McHugh had bought 200 shares of St. Paul stock Feb. 2, 1923, one week after his election, and that he had thereby legally qualified. He asked Mr. McHugh to look up his own records to verify this.

Got Stock a Week Later.

Mr. Grady then asked the witness if he recalled any such transaction, or whether anybody had obtained 200 shares for him at about that time. Mr. McHugh could recall nothing of the kind. Mr. Grady requested the witness to bring in the canceled check paid for the 200 shares, if he had it, and to furnish the name of the person from whom he obtained the shares.

Walter L. Fisher, formerly Secretary of the Interior, who is acting as special counsel for the Interstate Commerce Commission, following up his expressed desire of Friday to ascertain "what the directors of the St. Paul actually directed," asked Mr. McHugh how he had become a director of the company. The witness replied that he did not know exactly, but he thought it was because H. E. Byram, then President of the St. Paul and now one of its three receivers, had wanted him to be one. He admitted he had known Mr. Byram but slightly at the time.

"What was your understanding as to who determined the selection of the road's directors?" asked Mr. Fisher.

"Mr. Byram, I believe," answered Mr. McHugh.

"You mean that your belief is that Mr. Byram merely made up his own mind and the Board of Directors acted accordingly?"

"I believe so," said the witness.

Mr. McHugh said he knew nothing about the Gary line, acquisition of which by the St. Paul has been a subject of criticism, except that it was "located near Chicago."

Couldn't Stand 10 Per Cent.

Mr. McHugh testified that he served on a special committee of the St. Paul in 1924 to consider what was to be done about meeting the June maturities, which were earlier said to have been the real cause of the road's financial collapse. It had been suggested, he said, to make a cash payment of 10 per cent., but he thought the St. Paul treasury could not stand such depletion.

"Did you try to get in touch with any of the large bondholders to avoid the threatened bankruptcy?" asked Robert K. Prentice, representing the Bondholders's Defense Committee.

"I understood the officers of the company were doing that," replied Mr. McHugh.

"Did the other directors of the St. Paul concern themselves any more than you did with its financial interests?" asked Mr. Fisher.

Mr. McHugh smilingly "supposed" they had. He said he had gone to Europe in December, 1924, and that on his return he had been informed of the receivership and asked to serve on the Protective Committee of the preferred stockholders.

Needed High Type Financier.

"You have heard, no doubt," said Mr. Fisher, "that the lack of a high type of general financial official for the railroad in this city was considered one of the organization's greatest weaknesses." President Byram, it has been stated, was essentially an operating officer rather than a financier. Did you consider that his financial ability and experience were sufficient to make his advice of value in financial matters?"

"A financial official of a high type here would undoubtedly have strengthened the company's position," said Mr. McHugh.

The witness testified later that for competent advice about the financial policy of the company he had found it necessary to confer with Jerome J. Hanauer of Kuhn, Loeb & Co., or some other New York banker. Mr. Prentice, who again took the witness, brought out that, although at present Mr. McHugh holds no stock in the St. Paul, he is still a member of the Preferred Stockholders' Protective Committee.

"Were you placed on the Board of Directors of the St. Paul to represent the Rockefeller interests?" asked Mr. Fisher.

"No," replied Mr. McHugh. "I was not put on to represent any interest so far as I know. My bank has no business connections with the St. Paul or what you describe as the Rockefeller interests."

Mr. McHugh's fullest explanation of several matters about which he had been asked previously came in answer to a question by Mr. Fisher as to whether he had discussed the affairs of the St. Paul with representatives of any of the banking interests. To this he replied:

Says Hanauer Proposed Payment.

"I recall that at one meeting Mr. Hanauer was called in to give us the benefit of his experience and judgment. We considered many plans. One of these was to offer the holders of the $48,000,000 June maturities a cash payment of 10 per cent. I believe that suggestion came from the banking interests.

"My position was that this step would be unwise. It occurred to me that we might obtain the consent of the holders of the securities to an extension of the obligation by the substitution of other securities without a cash payment which the road was not in a position to make. I believe Mr. Byram undertook to canvass the holders of the June maturities, but without success. As I recall I attended only three board meetings at which there were general discussions, but no conclusion was reached."

Mr. McHugh's heaviest holdings of St. Paul securities at any time was 15,000 shares, he said.

It had been announced that the first witness yesterday would be Samuel Pryor, business associate of Percy A. Rockefeller in Owenoke Corporation at 25 Broadway. Mr. Pryor appeared at the hearing, which was conducted in the offices of the Port Authority at 11 Broadway, but was excused on the ground that he had pressing personal business that would not wait.

The hearing was adjourned until tomorrow morning, when Mr. Pryor, John D. Ryan, Charles E. Mitchell, D. G. Geddes, Mr. Hanauer and C. N. Bliss will be among the financiers subpoenaed. It was said the hearings would be adjourned next Wednesday for a week, because Mr. Fisher had to appear in an important case in the Supreme Court at Springfield, Ill.

HOLDS 42D ST. SPUR IS WORTH $975,438

Court Awards That Sum to the Interborough and Elevated in Suit Against the City.

CLAIM WAS FOR $4,200,000

Justice O'Malley Regards Case as Basis for Future Suits in Condemnations.

A total of $975,438 was awarded to the Interborough Rapid Transit Company and the Manhattan Railroad Company yesterday in their claims against the city for the condemnation of the Forty-second Street elevated spur. The companies sued for $4,200,000. The award was made by Supreme Court Justice O'Malley, who heard the case without a jury.

In his opinion, Justice O'Malley pointed out that the questions presented were "wholly novel," because the Interborough's damage claims for the removal of the Sixth Avenue elevated spur from Fifty-third to Fifty-ninth Street was pending before him. The probability that all elevated lines might some time be condemned was also considered.

The opinion ruled against the contention of the city that although the spur was condemned by the city the transit companies suffered no damage, because the property was operated at a loss. It also dismissed the claim of the railroads that they were entitled to compensation for a right to the bed of the street granted by the city when the franchise was awarded.

The largest award—$750,000—was for the easements of light, air and access surrendered by the companies, although the claim in this phase of the proceeding was for $3,600,000. The companies held that the franchise was worth $100,000 and they got only $25,000. They sought $95,000 for the cost of remodeling the Third Avenue elevated station at Forty-second Street and received $89,000. The value of the easement in the bed of the street, which the Court decided amounted to nothing, except as it was considered in fixing the value of the franchise, was asserted by the claimants to be $300,000. The Court fixed the physical value of the structure at $120,438, against a claim for $185,513.

The claimants in the suit were the Interborough, the Manhattan Railroad Company, from which the Interborough leased the property, and the Central Union and Equitable Trust Companies as holders of the first and second mortgages on the Manhattan Railroad property.

At the outset of his opinion Justice O'Malley said that the particularly novel feature of the claims was the value of the private easements of light, air and access which the owner of the railroad property had acquired previously from the abutting owners, as distinguished from the claim to the public easement in the street.

This question, Justice O'Malley said, had never before been presented in a condemnation proceeding, "and as both parties agree that it is within the bounds of possibility that eventually elevated lines in the city will have to be taken in condemnation, this proceeding may obviously become the forerunner of numerous others." The Court said that the trial of the claim for the Sixth Avenue easements, which came before him, had been stayed until the Court of Appeals could pass on the present rulings.

Path for "Future Damages."

In connection with the question of the value of the private easements of light, air and access restored to abutting property, the railroad contended that the easements were acquired at great expense, that the structure was removed against the will of the railroad, and that the easements restored to the abutting property were greatly enhanced in value. They argued that they were entitled to the present value of these easements as a property right, asserting that they had paid $200,000 to the owners for "future" damages in addition to the sums for past damages.

The city argued that the railroad did not secure title to the easements in a strict legal sense but acquired them for railroad purposes only, and when the city removed the railroad the right in the easements disappeared.

Justice O'Malley held that whatever right the railroad acquired was vested in the railroad franchise, for which it had been taxed, and for which it was entitled to compensation. The opinion on this point, which is the main phase of the proceeding upon which the higher courts will be required to pass, said:

"Because this right in the possession of the railroad company was limited to the purpose indicated, it does not follow that it is without value. Its acquisition was essential to the maintenance and operation of the company's railroad. Without it the company would have been a trespasser and required to tear down its structure and go out of business. As already appears, its original cost was several hundred thousands of dollars.

"If the city had condemned the property now being taken within the first few years of the company's franchise, instead of at this late time, could it reasonably and justly have been entitled to no award for that which but recently had cost its stockholders a large sum? I am unable to conceive why the claimants should be in any more unfavorable position with respect to this right and its value at one time than another, except in so far as the reasonable market value thereof might vary with time and change of conditions.

"The claimants offered evidence tending to show that if this right were to be acquired on the date when title vested in the city it would have cost $3,600,000. The city did not attempt to controvert this proof by testimony of other experts, presumably in view of the conceded increase in the city's valuation of the abutting property predicated on the removal of the structure, and in view of the fact that the city will later be called upon to sustain such assessments could not have been successfully asserted that the value given by the claimants' experts was excessive. In fairness to the city, however, it should be noted that its counsel at all times disregarded the claimants' theory and that adopted by me, and for this reason refrained from calling experts on this phase of the case.

"Taking into consideration the original and present cost of acquisition, both of which are proper elements to be considered in arriving at the value of the property, and all evidence before me, I am of the opinion that the fair market value to the claimants of the right in perpetuity to the maintenance and operation of its railroad, and the impairment in connection therewith, the easements of the abutting property owners, is the sum of $750,000. In reaching this conclusion I have given more weight to the original cost than the reproduction cost for the reason that, in my judgment, the value of the railroad has not kept pace with the value of the abutting property."

EXAMS FOR DRIVERS MAY 1.

New Jersey Commissioner Warns Against Vendors of Questions.

Special to The New York Times.

TRENTON, N. J., April 10.—Motor Vehicles Commissioner Williar L. Dill announced today a modified schedule of drivers' examinations, effective May 1. There are few changes, however, and the tests in large cities will be conducted at the same time and place as in the past.

Commissioner Dill said that all cars used in taking the practical tests must comply with the motor vehicle law with respect to glaring headlights, mirror equipment and powerful brakes. Applicants are also urged to avoid contact with all persons selling what are said to be copies of the examination questions. Commissioner Dill has been crusading against such persons, and has succeeded in stopping their operations to a great extent, but not completely.

WANT BETTER PRICE FOR SONGS BY RADIO

Composers Say Broadcasting Popularizes Their Tunes to Death.

DISPUTE OVER FIXING TERMS

Mills Predicts Failure of Bill in Congress to Set a Rate for Copyrighted Music.

E. C. Mills, Chairman of the Executive Committee of the American Society of Authors, Composers and Publishers, said yesterday on his return from Washington, where he testified before the Joint Patents Committee, that the Dill bill to fixe terms under which broadcasters could appropriate copyrighted musical compositions would never pass through Congress and was practically dead already.

"A year ago the broadcasters went before Congress," he said," and asked for legislation which would enable them to confiscate the copyrighted property of composers without paying anything. They failed in that attempt.

"This year they have gone before Congress with a request for legislation which would enable them to fix the prices at which they would seize our property. That is perhaps a little better than the proposal to seize it without paying anything, but we would still prefer to let the law of supply and demand rule over the subject.

Calls Offer Too Low.

"The broadcasters ask Congress to fix a scale of prices which are hardly justified under any consideration. This scale provides, for instance, that a 5,000-watt broadcasting station should pay 15 cents for a single rendition of a copyrighted song. Under this arrangement WEAF could render copyrighted songs for an hour for $2.70. Now, the American Telephone and Telegraph Company leases WEAF to individual users at the rate of $2,700 an hour, or 1,000 times the price of an hour's rendition of copyrighted songs. The law of supply and demand would handle the matter far more justly, we believe, than a statute that would work out in this fashion.

"The broadcasters raised the claim again that they popularize our music. We admit it. They popularize it to death.

"'Can you popularize "Mother Machree?"' I asked a representative of broadcasters.

"'No,' he replied. 'That has been popularized already.'

"He admitted our point right there. We want the broadcasters to pay for the use of compositions that have been popularized already. They don't want to pay a fair price, and they would prefer not to pay at all.

Proposed a Counter-Offer.

"We put forward the proposal that we would let them popularize our music free of charge. We would let them play any new composition for four or six weeks for nothing. This would be the popularization period. But after the popularization period they would have to pay. They replied: 'What? You want us to popularize your music and then pay you for it? That is unheard-of!'

"Another argument the broadcasters put forward was that they were a public utility and were entitled to legislation for their special benefit. That was a new one—a public utility demanding that others be regulated for their benefit. You don't hear the railroads arguing, 'We are public utilities, and therefore Congress ought to compel the steel companies to give us our rails at half price.' The idea of regulation not of, but by and for, public utilities did not seem to impress the committee, and all of their arguments for getting special price-fixing legislation substituted for sound economic law seemed to fall to the ground."

Negotiated on $1,000,000 Offer.

Mr. Mills said that negotiations had taken place between the American Society of Authors and Composers and Publishers and the Broadcasters' Association in connection with a proposed agreement, under which the broadcasters would pay $1,000,000 for three years for the use of all copyrighted music controlled by the society.

"We agreed to accept those terms if the broadcasters could get 80 per cent. of the broadcasting stations to sign up," said Mr. Mills. "We found, however, that the committee with which we made the agreement did not attempt to sign up the 80 per cent., but merely endeavored to keep us negotiating while they sent out calls to all broadcasters asking for contributions to help their fight to push the proposed legislation through Congress."

HEIRESS DENIES MARRIAGE.

California Woman Says Another Person Assumed Her Name as Bride

Special to The New York Times.

CARMEL, N. Y., April 10.—Lawyers have just procured from County Clerk H. S. Agor's office in the Putnam County Court House here a record of the marriage of Miss Eunice L. Sargent, who was married in Carmel seven years ago to William Gough of Seattle, Wash., in the belief that the woman assumed the name of Miss Eunice L. Sargent, an heiress, of Santa Cruz, Cal.

The latter young woman has inherited a fortune, provided, as the will requires, she did not marry before the will was filed.

The young woman who was married in Carmel by the Rev. William Parker gave her address as Santa Cruz, Cal., and her age at that time as twenty-six. She said she was a daughter of William and Arianna Sargent.

Miss Eunice L. Sargent, the heiress, of Santa Cruz, denies she was ever married. So lawyers are trying to establish that some one "pirated" her name.

According to former Town Clerk Stanley Cornish, who issued the marriage license to Miss Eunice L. Sargent, the young woman of that name from Santa Cruz has $500,000 in her own right and about $300,000 more hinges upon the investigation here.

"The heiress in California is going on forty," he said, "while the Miss Sargent that was married here in Carmel would be thirty-five now. I think, from what the lawyer from the Coast has told me, got the record of the marriage wrong, they are different women. The lawyer told me he knew positively Miss Sargent of Santa Cruz had never married, and the description of her does not tally with that of the young woman who was here."

THE CITY'S HISTORY TOLD IN A PAGEANT

VAUXHALL GARDENS SHOWN

President and Mrs. Washington Are Depicted at the John Street Theatre.

The Historical Committee of the Town Hall presented yesterday afternoon the third of its annual pageants, "Sidelights of Old New York," a historical revue, and it was acclaimed by many of those who crowded Town Hall as the most successful of its yearly events. There was shown a series of stage pictures dealing with historical incidents in New York City during the Revolutionary period.

The settings, designed by Leonard Cox and Franklin C. Wells, were charming, as were the costumes, which were said to be faithful reproductions of the times. The revue was the work of Donovan George Rowse. There were what appeared to be unnecessarily long intervals between the tableaux that made the audience restless.

The narrator was G. Evans Hubbard, who in Colonial costume explained the historical significance of each scene shown. The most charming and interesting number on the program represented a scene at the Vauxhall Gardens, where the elite of New York gathered in the days when there were no dinner clubs or couvert charges. Dr. Fenton B. Turck won applause as Sam Fraunces, the landlord of the Garden, and his introduction to the puppet show and his announcement of the coming attraction, a strong woman, were well done. A feature of the scene was the dancing by the children of Miss Lusie Duisdieker's School.

The most impressive scene depicted the appearance of President and Mrs. Washington at the John Street Theatre to witness a performance of "The School for Scandal." The part of Washington was taken by Mr. Cox. Mrs. Hunt Slater appeared as Mrs. Washington, Robert Innes Center as General Philip Schuyler, Miss Amy Seabury Weeks as Mrs. Schuyler and Howard Shelley as an actor. The latter announced that a piece of music had been written in honor of the President and dedicated as "The President's March." To this Washington responded:

"Mrs. Murray Entertains," an incident of the Revolution in one act, was written especially for the occasion by Mr. Rowse. It was directed by Miss Grace Henry. In this act Mr. Cox represented General Howe; Mr. Center, Sir Henry Clinton; Mrs. James Duane Livingston took the part of Mrs. Robert Murray; Cyril Butler, her son; the Misses Agnes Warren and Elizabeth Blair, her daughters. The action takes place in the garden of the "Belmont," the Murray residence in the Village of Inclenburg, on the morning of Sept. 15, 1776.

The tableaus represented "The Turtle Feast," "The Kissing Bridge," "Twelve o'Clock at Burns's Tavern," the "Press Gang" and "A Revolutionary Recruiting Scene." Among those who posed in them were Mrs. Livingston, Mrs. Hendrick V. Duryea, Nigel Cholmeley-Jones, Roynon Cholmeley-Jones, Miss Florence Havemeyer, Martin Aigner, Mrs. Leonard Cox, Mr. Center, Ferdinand D. Sanford, Mr. and Mrs. Clarence F. Busch, Robert Ingersoll Brown, Mr. Shelley, Miss Elizabeth Schroeder, Dr. Turck, Donatien Noel Moulton, Miss Muriel Wurts Dundas, William C. Kopper, Harry Gott, Miss Marjorie Cleveland and Masters Lemuel Stetson Jefferson and Ralph Jefferson. The harp soloist was Miss Lucile Lawrence.

The epilogue, "In the Dawn of Independence," represented Washington at the Morris House. Mr. Cox appeared as Washington and Mr. Kopper as his sergeant. Mrs. Schuyler N. Warren, Chairman of the Revue, whose name led a list of distinguished patrons and patronesses, made a brief speech in which she thanked all those who had a part in making the affair a success.

HASTY PUDDING SHOW HERE

Harvard Players Will Present '1776' on April 23.

The Hasty Pudding Club of Harvard University will pay its annual visit to this city on April 23, presenting the show "1776" at Mecca Temple auditorium. The song hit is "Colonial Blues," written by Thayer Cumings, '26, captain of the hockey team.

Among the characters in the comedy are George Washington and other Colonial leaders. The principal feminine rôle will be taken by Scott Wilson, '27, of Lynchburg, Va. Others in the cast are Clement Coady, '27, captain of next Fall's football team; Leo F. Daley, '27, twice a member of the varsity football squad, and G. A. Gross, '27, a hockey forward. The book and lyrics are by W. L. White, son of William Allen White, and G. R. Leighton.

The show opens next Wednesday in Cambridge, playing three nights. Buffalo, Detroit, Cleveland and Pittsburgh will see it before New York has a performance. Three performances will be given in Boston after the New York appearance.

$7,000 TO CHARITY AT OPERA

"Boris Godunov" Given Last Night as Benefit—"Traviata" at Matinee.

"La Traviata" and "Boris Godunov" were repeated at the Metropolitan yesterday afternoon and night, the latter performance as a special benefit, while the regular popular subscription for the same date went over to next Saturday and the season's closing. The matinee house enjoyed a well-sung performance of Verdi's classic, given for the sixth time, with Miss Bori, Messrs. Lauri-Volpi and Danise, under Mr. Serafin's direction.

A Chaliapin audience greeted the Russian basso's third performance of Moussorgsky's historic tragedy in the evening. Julia Claussen appeared as the Polish Princess Marina, with Mmes. Delaunois, Anthony, Howard and Wakefield, Messrs. Fullin, Bada, Rothier and others in familiar rôles, and Mr. Bamboschek conducting. Out of the $17,000 receipts a profit of about $7,000 went to the charitable funds of the Grand Street Settlement.

J. E. MOODY DIES IN SICILY.

Parents, Mr. and Mrs. John Moody, Sail From New York as Word Comes

John Edmund Moody, 25 years old, a son of John Moody of 317 Fifth Avenue, head of Moody's Investors' Service, died early yesterday in a hospital at Messina, Sicily, of typhoid fever, which he is thought to have contracted while on a vacation tour in Northern Africa and Southern Europe. His parents received word on Thursday of his serious illness and sailed yesterday on the Paris for Messina, accompanied by another son, Ernest. Five minutes before the Paris left the pier they learned of John Edmund's death, but decided to proceed to Messina.

Dr. Thomas H. Morgan.

Dr. Thomas H. Morgan died at his residence, 222 West Seventy-first Street, on Friday. He was graduated from the Medical School of the University of Toronto in 1897. He belonged to the American Medical Association, was a Fellow of the American College of Surgeons, a surgical expert on the staff of St. Elizabeth's Hospital and assistant gynecologist to the Polyclinic Hospital.

E. HOWARD-MARTIN DIES SOON AFTER WIFE

Retired Diplomat Succumbs to a Stroke of Paralysis at His Home at 69 Years.

Edmund Howard-Martin, retired diplomat, died yesterday at his residence, 160 West Fifty-ninth Street, of a stroke of paralysis that is believed to have been partly due to the death of his wife, Alice Agnew Howard-Martin, on April 2. He is survived by a niece, Miss Bessie Martin. Services will be held in St. Thomas's Church, Fifth Avenue and Fifty-third Street, at 2 o'clock tomorrow afternoon.

Mr. Howard-Martin was born in 1857 in Meriwether County, Ga., and was educated at Washington and Lee University. He was for several years, during the Presidency of Grover Cleveland, First Secretary of the United States Legation in China, and in 1890 was one of a small group of diplomats that were the first to be received by a Chinese Emperor. On his return to New York he lectured on the Orient. Of recent years he has spent a great deal of his time abroad.

He belonged to the Society of the Cincinnati, Colonial Wars, Sons of the Revolution and the Military Order of Foreign Wars. He married the daughter of John T. Agnew of New York in 1901.

JACOB PROPOS IS DEAD.

Garment Manufacturer Aided Many Charities—Funeral Today.

Funeral services will be held at 1 P. M. today in Temple Shaare Zedek, 212 West Ninety-third Street, for Jacob Propos of 200 West Ninetieth Street, head of the women's coat firm of Jacob Propos & Sons, Inc., 1,333 Broadway. He died on Thursday night of heart disease in the Presbyterian Hospital. He had been a sufferer from asthma.

Mr. Propos was actively interested in and a financial supporter of many Jewish charities, among them the Hebrew National Orphan Home, the Home of the Daughters of Jacob, Harlem Home of the Daughters of Israel, Hebrew Day Nursery, Hebrew Sheltering and Immigrant Society and the United Consumptive Society of America. His wife, three sons and a daughter survive.

MOTHER M. XAVIER JONES.

Dies in the Presentation Convent in Her Ninety-first Year.

Mother M. Xavier Jones died yesterday in her ninety-first year at the Presentation Convent, 619 West Thirty-third Street. She had been a member of the order for sixty-eight years. She came to this city from Dublin, Ireland, in 1875 with other sisters, to take charge of St. Michael's Parochial School in West Thirty-third Street. There she labored for years until age restricted her activity. For a long period she governed the community as Mother Superior.

Services will be held at 10 A. M. on Tuesday at St. Michael's Church, West Thirty-fourth Street.

James A. McSloy.

ST. CATHARINES, Ont., April 10 (AP).—James A. McSloy, President of the McSloy Haircloth Manufacturing Company, and known throughout Canada and the United States as a breeder of blooded cattle and thoroughbred horses, died today at his home in this city. Mr. McSloy was owner of the famous Martindale Cattle Farms near Port Dalhousie. He was 70 years old.

MRS. M. LORILLARD BARBEY

Sister of Tuxedo Park's Founder Dies in Her Paris Residence.

Word was received here yesterday of the death in Paris of Mrs. Mary Lorillard Barbey, widow of Henry L. Barbey of this city. She was a daughter of the late Peter and Catherine Griswold Lorillard and a descendant of the original Huguenot family of Lorillards who settled in this country in the latter half of the eighteenth century. The late Pierre Lorillard, founder of Tuxedo Park, was a brother. Mrs. Alfred Seton of 7 West Fifty-second Street, is her daughter.

Mrs. Barbey was a member of the Tuxedo Club and the Colonial Dames of America. Her residence in Paris was 45 Avenue l'Alma.

LOOKS TO FLORIDA TO RIVAL RIVIERA

Frank A. Parsons, Sailing on Leviathan, Says Gulf Region Will Draw Our Tourists.

AN EXODUS OF BUYERS

Many Who Will Study the Fall Fashions in Europe's Centres, Also on Board.

The Florida coast and the Gulf region will become more popular with American tourists in the next ten years than the Mediterranean Riviera, according to Frank Alvah Parsons, head of the New York School of Fine and Applied Arts, who sailed yesterday on the Leviathan, for Cherbourg and Southampton. Mr. Parsons is to make charitable movements, was another the itinerary for the Summer courses of the Art School. While in Europe he will take twenty young architects into Southern Italy and Spain to study types of architecture adaptable to Florida and the Gulf States.

Mr. Parsons was one of 1,134 passengers sailing on the Leviathan. The list gave the first intimation of the great exodus of buyers who are going abroad for Fall fashions. More than 10,000 persons were on the pier to see friends and relatives sail.

Mr. Parsons, while in Paris, will give a three months' lecture course on the history and art of France from 51 B. C. to the time of Napoleon. The Paris centre of the art school is on the Place des Vosges and occupies the old house in which Victor Hugo was born.

Donald H. Adams of New Haven, Conn., President of the International Rotary Club, and Crawford McCullough of Chicago, and Guy Gundaker of Philadelphia, former Presidents, also sailed. They are going to London to attend a conference of Rotary Clubs of the British Isles. Edwin H. Rushmore, Secretary of the New York Rotary Club, and a delegation of twenty members were at the pier to see the Rotarians off.

Motty Eitington, who escaped from a Bolshevik prison in 1919 and came to America, made a fortune in business, took out $3,000,000 in life insurance, and gave large sums to many passenger. Mr. Eitington is President of the Moscow Fur Company.

John E. Dockendorff, President of the American Diamond Line, operating fifteen Shipping Board vessels between New York and Holland ports, sailed on a business mission.

Officers of the Leviathan had to make room on a lower deck for one of the largest collections of flowers ever seen aboard that ship. They were farewell gifts to the passengers from friends.

DIES IN HOME AT 108.

Inmate of Israelite Institution Was Once a Russian Cowherd.

The death at the age of 108 years of Haskel Cawralnik, for five years an inmate of the Home of the Sons and Daughters of Israel at 232 East Tenth Street, was reported to the office of the Health Commissioner yesterday by Dr. H. Hallarman, physician in charge of the home. The centenarian died Monday from senility.

Cawralnik was born in Russia and came to this country fourteen years ago. No further information about his life or family was available at the institution except that he has several children surviving, whose names and addresses could not be learned. Cawralnik was understood to have been a cowherd in his earlier days.

3 OF ESCAPED CONVICTS RETAKEN IN TENNESSEE

Mystery Surrounds Greatest Jail Delivery in History of the State's Prisons.

NASHVILLE, Tenn., April 10 (AP).—Three of the convicts who escaped last night in the largest jail delivery in the history of the Tennessee State Penitentiary were again in custody tonight, with every effort being made to apprehend others. Twelve of the men who escaped were looked upon by A. A. McCorkle, prison Warden, as dangerous criminals. Three were life termers.

Lee Allen of Carroll County, serving a term for robbery and grand larceny, who with Howard Barr, Knox County robber, overpowered the two guards, locked them in cells and led the escape, was captured in Shelby Park today by Gus Kiger, city detective, after Allen had been shot in the leg by officers in a gun battle. Kiger was shooting to kill, but the escaped convict was not seriously injured.

Whether the ringleaders at first used a "wooden" pistol in overpowering W. H. Dodson, a guard, and where they obtained the arms with which they successfully carried out the escape remain mysteries.

ANNA SILLAG BOBS HER HAIR.

Beauty Specialist, 76, Cuts Off 72 Inches of Golden Tresses.

Copyright, 1926, by The New York Times Company.

Special Cable to THE NEW YORK TIMES.

VIENNA, April 10.—Anna C. Sillag has bobbed her hair today. For almost fifty years she has been in the beauty business, specializing in the secrets of how to grow long and beautiful hair.

Unlike a bald barber, she herself was a testimonial of her tonic. Her hair when cut today was 6 feet and 1 inch long and still golden in color, although she is now 76.

By advertising she made her photograph, with her tresses flowing toward the floor like a Niagara, better known throughout Central Europe than any Kaiser's. The inscription invariably accompanying the picture, "I am Anna C. Sillag with the lovely hair," long ago became a household phrase.

A Value Event in Slenderizing SPRING APPAREL

Because of conditions that are a consequence of the late, cool spring, we find it possible to present two groups of high character apparel—all new—most of it brand new—at prices far below normal marking.

COATS

A group notable for the very special character of its several types of coats. Models for which the smartest women already have shown a marked preference.

For instance, there are the models of fine twills in the smart navy or black and the light spring shades. Many with fur collars. An all-black faille silk coat of distinguished appearance has flat-pressed pleats at sides. Untrimmed sports coats of woolen mixtures, and others.

FROCKS

A collection of picked styles—each one a successful expression of some important Paris theme. Chosen also for its slim effect lines that are subtly size reducing.

Daytime dresses in the new tailored effects. Coin spot embroidered and plain flat crepes. Printed silk frocks in smart colors including the polka dot model promoted by Paris. Lovely Georgettes, some lace-trimmed, some beaded—pretty for semi-formal wear.

Including in both sale groups models for the short stout woman—youthful styles that seldom need alteration.

Fashion's Soft Handmade Hat

Introduced in Large Headsizes

Practical as well as extremely smart—can be folded for packing. The one pictured is of satin faced with straw. All black; black and white.

Ideal for Sports or Travel Wear

The other smartly tailored model is of faille silk in navy with gray stitching, black with white; also pearl, sand, blue and green.

FRENCH TO ISOLATE RIFFIAN CHIEFTAIN

Peace Proposals Are Sent to Heads of Allied Tribes Over Abd-el-Krim's Head.

SEEK TO CAUSE DESERTION

Alternative of War or Peace, With Pensions, Flocks of Sheep and Herds of Cattle, Is Offered.

Copyright, 1926, by The New York Times Company. By Wireless to THE NEW YORK TIMES.

PARIS, April 10.—France's hope for success in the peace negotiations with the Riffians lies in her intention to draw away from Abd-el-Krim the support of the caids and tribesmen who have until now been united under his banner.

These negotiations will not be undertaken with Abd-el-Krim as chief of the Riff. His position, as such, is not recognized either by France or Spain. He is the caid of the Beni Ouriaghel tribe and nothing else, and negotiations will be conducted simultaneously with his representative and with those of Djeballa and Beni Zeroual tribes.

To these tribes the alternative will be offered of peace, with restoration of their flocks and herds and probably a considerable pension for the caid's themselves, or war, if they continue to make common cause with Abd-el-Krim.

At the Quai d'Orsay it is frankly admitted that Abd-el-Krim is not considered the chief of the negotiators.

An attempt will be made to make peace with each of the Riff caids separately, and the old tactics of Marshal Lyautey will be followed; for long ago he proved that it is cheaper to purchase than to impose peace in Morocco.

In order to improve the chances of success, it is the allies' intention to rush the discussion once it begins, which may be next Thursday.

Caids Are Offered Tempting Terms.

The Caids of three tribes have already been well primed with promises. All they have to undertake is a promise to submit to the authority of the Sultan of Morocco, that is to say, to abandon all their claims to the independence of the Riff. They then can expect their depleted flock and herds to be replenished and in future to enjoy the prosperity which has come to other tribes and caids who have learned wisdom in preferring peace with France.

In this plan there is no great hope that Abd-el-Krim himself will until the last moment submit. He has promised too much in the way of independence to his people to be easily led to accept less even at personal profit. But if the other tribes and caids accept the French and Spanish conditions it will be all but impossible for him to continue the war.

The negotiations which have already taken place make it possible for the French to advance their lines considerably to the north at many points without risking a serious fight. It is expected that during the peace pourparlers a kind of armistice will be observed, but the French are decided to maintain all preparations for a new attack in case Abd-el-Krim proves obdurate and seeks to influence the other tribes to continue their resistance.

There is reason to believe that the Riffian leader has already been trying to raise trouble in the South of Morocco, finding support for his cause weakening in the north. So far, however, he has been unsuccessful.

Aim at Banishing Abd-el-Krim.

For the future the presence of Abd-el-Krim in the Riff is considered a danger which, if possible, must be got rid of. What decision will be taken in this respect will depend on the success which attends the attempt at Oudjda to secure the desertion of his followers.

If they can be bribed and cajoled into abandoning him and his claim for Riffian independence, for which he has fought a victorious war against Spain for nearly ten years and has during nearly a year maintained a stiff fight against the enormously superior French force, fully equipped with modern weapons, he may be forced to become a refugee and an outlaw.

The peace offers, which today are being addressed to his people and lieutenants, are being made over his head. If his abandonment and peaceful intercourse with the other tribes can be established, then the political terms of the peace will not matter much.

So long as the Riff tribes and their leaders recognize the authority of the Sultan they will be given all but complete control of their internal affairs. Their disarmament thereafter will be only a matter of time, if the Spanish can be persuaded to adopt the same tactics of authoritative and beneficent rule as the French have exercised with success in their own zone.

The Moroccan press of Casablanca says it has obtained from an authorized source the peace conditions to be offered to Abd-el-Krim, which are as follows: First, recognition of the Sultan's sovereignty; second, complete disarmament of all Riffian tribes; third, Franco-Spanish military control; fourth, military occupation of a certain number of strategic points; fifth, the opening of economic relations with the fertile northern valleys.

Spanish Prepare a Big Offensive.

Copyright, 1926, by The New York Times Company. By Wireless to THE NEW YORK TIMES.

TANGIER, April 10.—Any expectations of an early end of hostilities waned here today with the departure of General Sanjurjo, the Spanish High Commissioner, to Melilla a few hours after his arrival from Madrid.

General Sanjurjo, it was said here at the headquarters of the Spanish Protectorate, had gone to supervise in person the preparations for a big Spanish military effort, which, it is hoped, will cripple if not crush Abd-el-Krim so seriously that he will be in a mood to accept the Spanish terms for a permanent peace.

There is still talk of an armistice, and agents of Abd-el-Krim are said to be still in Melilla ready to negotiate, but official opinion here is that peace cannot be discussed formally until the military cards have been played this year and have shown indisputably the relative strength of the Riffians and Europeans.

The view of the Spanish High Command is that Abd-el-Krim has weakened so markedly at the same time the Spanish have been strengthening their forces that it is now time for them to push their attacks home. Peace now could be obtained only on terms distasteful to Spain, and it is feared they would leave Abd-el-Krim in a position to demand further concessions whenever he felt disposed to wage a new war.

In this connection it is learned that Abd-el-Krim has already greatly lessened his demands. Originally he had asked for Alhucemas Bay as a sea outlet to the Riffian State and Tetuan for his allies of the Djeballa. He has now withdrawn his claims to Tetuan, but is still standing firm for the cession of Alhucemas Bay, and this at the present stage is entirely unacceptable to the Spanish.

It is stated here that the French and Spanish are at variance with regard to the peace proposals, though this variance has not shaken their intention to act in concert both in making war and peace.

Peace discussions are reported still to be going on in the French zone. The French, who are now standing practically on their original line, would welcome the end of the hostilities, from which they cannot hope to gain any concrete advantages. The Spanish, however, whose zone is still largely in the hands of the rebels, desire to fight on.

The French are said to be continuing preparations to make an attack to the north of Taza, to aid the expected Spanish action to join the Alhucemas and Melilla sectors. French warships are also still scheduled to join in with the Spanish in bombardments supporting the advance of troops ashore.

CHAPEL OPPONENTS GAIN.

Yale Academic Faculty Recommends Dropping Compulsory Attendance.

Special to The New York Times.

NEW HAVEN, Conn., April 10.—Advocates of optional attendance at both daily and Sunday chapel exercises at Yale believe tonight that their struggle against compulsory attendance took a long step toward success when the general Faculty of the academic department and the general Faculty for the common freshman year filed a recommendation with the corporation to abandon required attendance.

The corporation voted to make the recommendation the special order of business at its May meeting. The intervening month will be devoted to an investigation of the situation.

The Faculty report reverses that made by a special committee of five Faculty members which was submitted last month and which recommended that the system of daily compulsory chapel should be continued as it has existed since Yale was founded, but that upper classmen be excused from attendance at Sunday chapel.

At its meeting today the corporation voted "to record the sorrow of the President and fellows at the death of John Ferguson Weir, first dean of the School of the Fine Arts, who, in the first forty-four years of his connection with the university, in addition to winning international reputation as an artist, established on a permanent high level instruction in the fine arts at ale."

their use and in which the records of their deliberations are kept. The delegates were obliged to confer elsewhere.

Proclamation Is Issued.

After the disarming of the Chief Executive's bodyguard, a proclamation was posted by General Lu Chung-lin, one of the most prominent of the Kuominchun military chiefs and commander of the unsuccessful defense of Tientsin.

The proclamation said that Tuan Chi-jui, since his assumption of the office of Chief Executive, had done much detrimental to the people and the country. His worst offenses were called the signing of the gold franc settlement of the French Boxer indemnity, allegedly without the approval of the people, and the recent shooting by his guards of student demonstrators.

He was surrounded, the proclamation adds, by members of the Anfu Party, who abetted him in ignoring the law, furthering his own interests and stirring up warfare.

"For the sake of the people," it continues, "we are obliged to take drastic measures against him. Meanwhile we have liberated from his guard the former Chief Executive Tsao Kun and have telegraphed General Wu Pei-fu, inviting him to come to Peking immediately to handle all affairs.

"Peace and order will be maintained. The merchants and people are hereby informed of the facts, and are urged to carry on business. In the event that rumor mongers attempt to stir up strife, they will be severely dealt with."

Envoy Uncertain as to Results.

Special to The New York Times.

WASHINGTON, April 10.—The Chinese Chief Executive, Tuan Chi-jui, has been placed under "restraint" and former President Tsao Kun will again assume the Presidency of China, while Marshal Wu Pei-fu is expected to come to Peking to "assume control of the whole situation," according to advices reaching the State Department today from John Van A. MacMurray, American Minister at Peking.

By the new arrangement President Tsao Kun would be under Marshal Wu Pei-fu. Rumors afloat in Peking are to the effect that General Feng Yu-hsiang has returned to Peking from Mongolia and is taking a hand in the situation.

The telegram received from Minister MacMurray reads, in part, as follows:

"The senior Minister has just officially circularised his colleagues to the effect that former officers of ex-President Tsao Kun had called to communicate the fact that Marshal Tuan had been placed under restraint in his residence; that Tsao Kun had been freed and would resume previous office; that General Lu Chung-lin had placed him under the command of Marshal Wu Pei-fu; and that General Chang Chih-chiang in Kalgan was in agreement with this action on the part of the Kuominchun, which had manifested growing discontent with Marshal Feng.

"Soon afterward, the senior Minister was informed by Y. L. Tong of Lu's office, who had just given the same information to this Legation, that Tuan had resigned; that his bodyguard had voluntarily disbanded; that Lu was holding himself responsible for peace and order in the capital; that Marshal Wu would be invited to come to Peking; and that Tsao Kun had been freed. • • •

"From Anfu and independent Chinese and foreign sources of highest credibility I have been informed that the coup d'etat has not been entirely successful; that the combination between Wu and Kuominchun has not been effected; that Tuan's bodyguard has taken defensive positions at his house and at the Cabinet offices and President's palace and that he himself took refuge in the Legation Quarter at midnight last night.

"The Legation was first aware of the coup d'état early this morning when the city gates were closed and telephone service was interrupted. The gates have now been opened and telephone service has been resumed. There are many extravagant rumors afloat. A report has even reached me from an ordinarily credible source that Marshal Feng has returned to Peking and taken charge.

"It is too early yet to determine definitely what has actually taken place or how Chang Tso-lin, whose troops are reported to be closing in more and more on Peking, will react to the coup d'etat if it has been successful. All is quiet in Peking."

GREENBURGH MAKES BUS CHOICE KNOWN

Town Board Favors the County Transportation Company in Westchester.

SINGLE SYSTEM IS UPHELD

Joint Secret Meeting of Cities on Wednesday Decided on This Program.

Special to The New York Times.

WHITE PLAINS, N. Y., April 10.—The Town Board of Greenburgh has decided to back the County Transportation Company as the one to receive the consent of Westchester County municipalities to establish a county-wide bus system, according to Supervisor Charles D. Millard, head of the board. The support came after a secret meeting of municipal officials in this city last Wednesday when the bus situation was thoroughly discussed.

At this meeting the proposals of the County Transportation Company, which is headed by Leverett S. Miller, receiver of the Westchester Street Railroad Company and President of the New York, Westchester & Boston Railroad Company, were heard, after which Albert W. Kroeger, President of the Westchester Motor Transfer Company, another bus system that is seeking county-wide franchises, addressed the meeting. As a result of a discussion of the feasibility of the establishment of a county-wide system under one management, it was decided that officials were to recommend to their respective communities that smaller operating companies seeking short routes should not be considered and that franchises which would permit of a linking together of all of Westchester major municipalities, together with facilities that would expeditate the transportation to and from New York City, should be granted to the larger operators.

The heads of the municipalities with regard to whether the County Transportation Company or the Westchester Motor Transfer Company should receive franchises has not been disclosed, officials who attended the meeting on Wednesday of this week stating that they would not speak until the next conference of officials to be held next week. This coming conference, at which a vote is to be taken as to which major company shall receive the county-wide franchises, is also to be secret.

Existing bus lines in Westchester County are to be protected, according to the officials of the various municipalities, so that the granting of franchises will mean that better transportation service between municipalities will be afforded without disturbing existing inter-municipal or intra-municipal routes. This is one condition that municipal officials will insist upon, it was learned today.

Independent operators who desire to establish routes are seeking to lay their plans before county officials for the establishment of a unified system composed of new and old lines. Edward A. O'Brien, representing the United Bus Operators of White Plains, said today that his group was devising a system of eight or ten lines, operating together, offering transfers, coordinated schedules, uniform equipment, and union terminals. He was prepared to lay the proposal before the county officials this coming week, he said.

Bronx Subway Station Burns.

A fire which is believed to have been caused by a short circuit destroyed a portion of the 177th Street elevated station of the Bronx Park subway at 5:10 yesterday morning and tied up northbound subway trains and street traffic for nearly half an hour. As the tracks are elevated to a height of about fifty feet at this point, the firemen had to throw up ladders to reach the blaze. About twenty feet of the roof and a portion of the platform were destroyed.

TWO PATROLMEN HURT STOPPING RUNAWAYS

One Dragged Through Traffic in Lower Broadway—Another Stops Horse Near Park.

Two patrolmen were injured yesterday in stopping runaway horses and a third patrolman's uniform was torn in assisting in one of the efforts.

While Patrolman Henry N. Bokelman was standing at a police box on Broome Street just west of Broadway about noon a team of horses hauling a truck east on Broome Street were frightened by the noise made by a steam-roller. They darted into a trot-lop out of control of the driver, Henry Stollak. As the animals plunged on toward Broadway Bokelman leaped and grasped the bridle of one of the team. He was dragged along the pavement while the frightened horses sped into the traffic on Broadway. Traffic Patrolman Laurence Wordenhauer ran and seized the bridle of the other horse.

The team pulled the two patrolmen along the pavement for more than 200 feet, weaving through heavy traffic amid the shouts of excited men and women. Just before the shaft of the wagon crashed into an automobile parked at the curb, halting the horses, Bokelman fainted, narrowly escaping the pounding hoofs of the horses.

Bokelman was treated for cuts, bruises and possibly fractured ribs. Wordenhauer's uniform was torn.

The other patrolman injured was Traffic Patrolman Michael O'Callaghan, who was directing traffic at Fifth Avenue and Seventy-second Street when a horse attached to a Charles & Co. delivery wagon which had bolted while standing near the Casino in Central Park dashed out of the park past the patrolman. O'Callaghan leaped for the animal's head and, missing, fell to the pavement. Jumping on an automobile, O'Callaghan pursued the horse east to Madison Avenue, then north to Seventy-eighth Street, over to Park Avenue and north to Eighty-fifth Street, where he finally caught it. He succeeded in halting the horse but not before he had received a blow in the body. He was relieved from duty.

Charles Sammet of 225 East 123d Street, the driver, received a summons for having left his horse and wagon unattended in Central Park.

SALONIKI REBELS IN ATHENS FOR TRIAL

General Panagiatopoulos and Newspaper Hestia's Editors Also Are Arrested.

PLASTIRAS IS INVOLVED

Belgrade Hears General Headed Movement in Attempt to Overthrow the Government.

ATHENS, April 10 (AP).—Reports from all part of Greece today indicated that quiet prevailed following the nipping in the bud of an attempted revolt near Saloniki, led by three disgruntled army officers, Majors Bakirdji, Karakoutsa and Hevas. They declared when arrested that the movement was not directed against the Government but against the heads of the army at Saloniki.

Nine of the principals involved were brought to Athens for court-martial today. Premier Pangalos ascribed their acts to personal motives and declared that, if found guilty, they should receive exemplary punishment.

General Panagiatopoulos, former Minister of the Interior and former Governor of Macedonia, has been arrested, as have the editors of the newspapers Hestia.

Fears Plastiras Headed Revolt.

BELGRADE, April 10 (AP).—The revolt in Greece, having its central base at Saloniki, was headed by General Plastiras and was aimed at the overthrow of the Pangalos Government. This is the explanation of the movement reaching Belgrade from Saloniki, and it is understood, additional impetus was given to the revolt by the fact that General Pangalos, now Premier and Dictator of Greece, is in a fair way to become President of that republic through the pending elections.

General Plastiras in 1922 headed a head of the Greek revolutionary committee. The following year he was deported by the Government, and is known as the bitter enemy of Pangalos. In Yugoslavia he was given as a political distriffect, but made his escape and went to Albania, from which territory he moved into Saloniki two weeks ago.

Direct advices from Saloniki state that 5,000 troops, with heavy guns and field artillery, were concerned in the revolt. The demands of the revolutionaries included: First, the resignation of General Pangalos; second, a neutral Government; third, free elections; fourth, reinstatement of the Presidency by Admiral Coundouriotis, who resigned recently; fifth, general amnesty for all deported soldiers and leaders.

Special Cable to THE NEW YORK TIMES.

VIENNA, April 10.—Reports from both Belgrade and Sofia confirm the official Greek version that the Saloniki mutiny has been repressed, although Sofia says there is still sporadic trouble along the frontier and that a number of Pangalos's adherents are refugees in Bulgaria. The same sources declare that General Pangalos's airplanes bombarded Saloniki and state that the loss of life was considerable.

Enright Not to Leave New York.

Enright, former Police Commissioner, announced yesterday that although he had become president of a Florida development he would continue to live here and would remain president of the International Police Conference, an international organization acting as a clearing house for crime information. He will spend about half his time in Florida.

OPPOSE SURVEY HERE FOR AMERICAN CANAL

Rivers and Harbors Committee Minority Contends Necessary Data Are on Hand.

FAVORS ST. LAWRENCE ROUTE

Four Representatives Assert Barge Waterway Would Be Unable to Handle Traffic.

Special to THE NEW YORK TIMES.

WASHINGTON, April 10.—An attack upon the provision in the River and Harbor Bill authorizing an appropriation of $250,000 to defray the cost of a survey across the State of New York of the proposed all-American waterway, on the ground that it would be "waste of public money," was contained in a minority report on the measure filed today in the House of Representatives by Representatives Chalmers, Mooney and Morgan of Ohio and Bowerman of Michigan, all members of the Committee on Rivers and Harbors.

These men have been active in support of the St. Lawrence waterway, or Canadian route, believing that it is preferable, from every standpoint, to the route advocated by Governor Smith and members of the New York delegation. A suggestion is made in the minority report that further consideration of an all-American canal is unnecessary, that all the essential information concerning its availability is at hand and that another survey would only tend to delay action by Congress as between a deep waterway through New York and one meeting with the St. Lawrence River.

The report strikes statements made by army engineers that the total cost of a ship canal through the St. Lawrence River would be $100,000,000, and that a canal from Oswego to the Hudson River would cost $200,000,000, as "flights like the all-American route are not economical" and that "the facts do not warrant the building of a canal across New York State at the present time."

"The report of the engineers just filed gives the total maximum capacity of the New York canals as 43,000,000 tons, and 22,000,000 tons unbalanced and 21,000,000 tons balanced upon the milleage. The statistics gathered from various Government reports show that the Great Lakes territory in 1924 had a total export tonnage of better than 50,000,000 outbound freight which will seek and use this channel. So, if the New York Barge Canal was now in operation it would not, if it could carry to its full capacity, serve the territory that has asked for and is entitled to relief at the present time.

"There have been some twenty-odd surveys made by the Federal Government across the State of New York. The State of New York itself has made some four or five surveys. All of the data and information in these reports are available.

"Further appropriation of $250,000 or any other sum at this time would be a waste of public money and could have only the effect of delaying a comparison of the two routes."

Douglas Robinson Fully Recovered.

AVON, Conn., April 10 (AP).—Douglas Robinson, the Harvard student, who was found in Rochester, N. Y., Thursday suffering from amnesia, is now "perfectly all right," his mother, Mrs. Theodore Douglas Robinson, wife of the Assistant Secretary of the Navy, said tonight. The son and his parents are spending the week-end here at Woodford Farm, the home of Joseph W. Alsop, President of the Connecticut Valley Tobacco Association, and Mrs. Alsop, Mr. Robinson's sister. Douglas Robinson will resume his studies when the vacation period is over.

MADRID, April 10.—Count Guell, president of the Spanish Trans-Atlantic Steamship Line, yesterday notified the Mayor of Seville that the new Seville-New York service would be inaugurated the latter part of each month with the steamship Manuel Arnus.

Plans will soon be published as to the projected direct service between Vigo and New York, which will consummate by one day the shortest and best route from the United States to Europe.

The new route will be equipped with the fastest liners and the most comfortable accommodations.

When it materializes, this new line is expected to draw much traffic to Spain, the country benefiting both directly and indirectly through the transit of tourists bound for other European countries.

MADRID, April 10.—The Government bond issue of 400,000,000 pesetas, placed on the market yesterday, was oversubscribed twenty-fold. The City of Bilbao alone subscribed nearly 2,000,000,000, or five times the entire loan.

With yesterday's issue the amount of Spain's total floating debt reaches 5,175,000,000 pesetas, with annual interest amounting to 250,000,000, and amortization premiums of 31,000,000. The consolidated external debt requires an annual interest payment of 530,000,000 pesetas, or nearly a quarter of the country's budget.

in Canada, the crowd that packed the room laughed so long and loud that it was with difficulty order was restored. One woman almost went into hysterics.

"As long as human nature lasts," Mr. Russell commented, "and that will be until the end of the world, there will be a demand for liquors for beverage purposes, and as long as fermentation lasts the means of supply will be there."

In Winnipeg in 1923, when wets regained control, more than 70 per cent. of the women voters, said Mr. Russell, voted to do away with prohibition. They did so, he added, "to save their families."

There is still a considerable American trade in hard liquors, he said, and so anxious are some people in Minnesota and Wisconsin to get hold of the real article that special trains from those States into Winnipeg is now the common rule.

Sir William Stavert, who followed Mr. Russell, told a story of similar conditions in Quebec to those which Mr. Russell said prevail in Manitoba and other Western Provinces. He said the Quebec Government operating system had decreased crime, eliminated the bootlegger, as well as bringing about a reversion from hard liquors to light wines and beers.

When the committee convened this morning Senator Walsh said that on Monday he would hear the first of the dry witnesses, but on Tuesday would give wet witnesses not heard this week a chance to testify.

SULLIVAN CALLED FIRST.

"Ever since the prohibition legislation went into effect," said Mr. Sullivan, the first witness of the day, "it has been a continuous subject of discussion at every convention of the New York State Federation of Labor, and it has become more acute year after year. The New York State Federation of Labor has gone unanimously on record, without a dissenting voice at every convention held within the past five or six years, asking its representatives to do everything that lay within their power to urge the Congress to modify the Volstead act, because the membership of the New York State Federation of Labor are of opinion that nothing that has ever transpired has so set back true temperance in America as the Eighteenth Amendment and the Volstead act.

"I have had occasion to travel quite extensively not alone in the State of New York but throughout the United States and I have seen things in that time that if they had been seen prior to prohibition the people of this country would have been dumbfounded.

"In New York City and in the several cities of the State of New York, I have had occasion to attend parties such as banquets, dinners and social gatherings, and I have never seen one yet that you could call dry. They have the most peculiar concoctions that I have ever seen.

"The last one I attended presented this situation: There was laid in front of everybody's plate a little doll dressed up on a bottle, with a card, and it contained two ounces of liquor. I do not know, of course, whether that was done with the knowledge and consent of the hotel at which it was held, or was under the auspices of the party that held the affair; but nevertheless, I have not heard any protest and I did not see any bottle left empty, because I tried to get one full as a souvenir and I could not get it. I wish to add that there were quite a number of ladies present at that affair.

"Not alone organized labor but the unorganized of the State of New York, and I will take in the United States as well, is in favor of temperance as much as any other class of citizens in the United States. We are preaching it.

"But before I come to the unorganized question, I want to state one thing: in the meetings of our local unions, if a man appeared, before prohibition, if a man dared to appear under the influence of liquor prior to this legislation, why he would be ostracized. He would be a man they would not care to associate with. But what is the present situation? He is a hero if he comes in.

Pass the Flask Around.

"It is nothing new to see them passing the flask around at union meetings, something that was never done before and something that would never have been tolerated before prohibition. But now the question is asked, 'Where did you get it?' and they will say, 'How good is it?' and so forth and so on.

"During the past four years I have had charge of the Municipal Employment Bureau run by the City of New York. It occupies three large floors of possibly 150 feet deep by 200 feet wide. One department was apart for women, girls and children, and the others were for men and boys. The ground floor was entirely given over to common labor.

"Things have come to such a state there that on several occasions they have had to send for the ambulance to take away men apparently that would come in the morning perfectly sober and within about an hour or so I would get a telephone message from one of my men downstairs to the effect that a man dropped on the floor, and we do not know whether he had a fit or what was the matter with him. That was not occasional.

"Well, if you were to see the number of flasks that our porters take out of that floor every morning it would be astounding.

"I want to say this that at least the labor movement, I think beyond any question, and unorganized labor, I feel sure, views the situation with some alarm particularly because of the influence the situation has on the young generation—our children. I have been to places where it was not an unusual occurrence at all to see a young girl take out her pocket flask of whisky and hand it around to her chums and associates. I have seen this on more than one occasion. And I belong to an institution in New York that we organized, and we were in a first-class hotel at a gathering and I had occasion to go into the lavatory, the gentlemen's lavatory, and I was astounded to see there three young girls with three men and they were drinking out of a flask and handing it around.

"Nobody wants to see that. I am the father of a large family myself and I have always preached temperance since the first day I came into the labor movement and I shall continue to do it, but I believe most honestly, it is my firm conviction, that the Volstead act and the Eighteenth Amendment has set back temperance in America at least fifty years.

"And what does it tell us? It is only a case of history repeating itself. We had this same thing back under the administration of President Madison. Conditions were exactly the same. The people were all indulging in the use of highly alcoholic liquors, which caused alarm at that time, so much so that it caused President Madison to appoint a commission to visit European countries to study the liquor question over there.

Pleads for Modified Law.

"The mission went abroad. They were more impressed by the conditions that existed in Germany than anywhere else. The result was that the President of the United States sent a special message to Congress advocating that German capital be invited to come to America, and given land free of charge and exempted from taxation for a period of one year, and it was with the one object in view, which was to encourage temperance in America; and here we are back again to the same old game.

"I repeat, in behalf of the men I represent, that I hope this committee will do everything within their power to re-establish temperance in America, and by doing that you will advocate a modification of the Volstead act."

Senator Reed—Mr. Sullivan, will you just state about how many men you represent as the head of the New York State Federation of Labor? A.—Approximately 1,000,000 men.

Q.—You spoke about girls carrying flasks of whisky and passing them around to their companions at social gatherings. Were these girls the class of girls that before prohibition, and speaking of them as a class, would have indulged anything of that kind? A.—They would never have looked at it. They were the daughters of respectable families, and they would never then have dared to attempt it.

Q.—Do you think that these conditions you have spoken of were confined to just a few cases, or is that growing general? A.—It is general. It is becoming worse day after day.

Q.—And do these girls and boys drink together out of the same flask? A.—Absolutely.

Q.—You say that is becoming general? A.—Yes.

Q.—What effect is that having, outside of drinking, generally on the morals of the people as you observe it? A.—Why, it does not have any good effect, Senator. It has, in my judgment, a demoralizing effect.

Q.—What is the effect now with reference to whether the laboring element, with which you come in contact, both organized and unorganized, as to whether they are drinking more or drinking less of hard liquors than they did before prohibition? A.—Why, they are drinking a good deal more, because I knew hundreds of our men in the labor movement who never touched hard liquor, but who are rinking it now.

Q.—Why do you say if you had beer and light wines that would have a deterrent effect upon the consumption of hard liquor? A.—Because every man that I have come in contact with has stated that if they only had their glass of beer back, the same as they were used to here before, they would never dare to take this stuff because they know it is injurious to their health.

Q.—Your thought, then, is that if the hard liquors are prohibited and if all that these people could get would be this doubtful stuff that is sold by bootleggers and yet the people could get a mild stimulant in the form of a mild beer or wine, that they would take that in preference to buying this bootleg stuff? A.—Why, absolutely that is true, Senator. There is no question about it. That is the unanimous opinion of verybody I have come in contact with.

Q.—You think a modification, then, would be in the interest of temperance and morality? A.—Absolutely. It would be nothing else, to my judgment and in the judgment of the men I come in contact with, who are, as a matter of fact, advocating temperance.

Drinking by Young People.

"With no purpose whatever," interrupted Senator Walsh, "of expressing any doubt about the conditions of which you speak among the young people, let me say this:

"I remember that about the time of the breaking out of the World War, and before we had the Eighteenth Amendment or national prohibition, my daughter and I were dining at one of the hotels in this city, and she called my attention to several young girls at an adjacent table who were drinking cocktails. So that the drinking of hard liquor by girls to my certain knowledge antedates the national prohibition law as to drinking in public places that occurred then.

"I deplored it then, as I do now, and it may be increasing, but it was certainly coming upon us before prohibition."

"Well, Senator," replied Mr. Sullivan, "I will say that seldom have I ever seen girls drink in the open before national prohibition."

"It was so rare then that my daughter called my attention to it," said Senator Walsh.

"It is not a rare thing now," remarked Senator Harreld.

"I should say not," Mr. Sullivan commented.

"Is it not largely true by reason of the fact that twenty-five or thirty years ago the most of these women who drank liquor drank it in the red light district, where people like you and I may add not see it?" Senator Harreld asked.

"Well, I cannot answer that, Senator, because I never patronized those places," Mr. Sullivan replied.

"We have no such places now," said Senator Harreld.

"No," agreed Mr. Sullivan.

"Let me call attention to this," said Senator Walsh.

"Now we see very young girls in all the public places of this city smoking cigarettes. That would have been regarded ten years ago even as a horrible offense.

"I recall very distinctly that when the Princess Eulalie of Spain was invited over here to represent her country at the Chicago Exposition, in 1893, she was caught—actually caught—mind you—smoking a cigarette in her room in the hotel, and it was then seriously debated in the public press of this country as to whether the President of the United States ought not to recall the invitation to her to come to this country.

Agree on Changed Conditions.

"You see we have undergone some change?"

"Yes, a considerable change," said Mr. Sullivan, "because now it is the common practice in all European countries for every girl to smoke."

Q.—Well, it has become the custom in this city if I judge rightly what I see. A.—Well, I should not like to see my young daughter smoking.

Q.—Neither would I. A.—But I do not know that there is anything wrong about it if she wants to.

Q.—I am indicating to you that some change has come over us. A.—Yes, quite a change.

Senator Goff—Is it not a fact that twenty-five years ago in this country, as Senator Walsh has indicated, women did not even drink light wines in public places? A.—That is quite true.

Q.—And did not the practice of women drinking light wines in hotels come into play before this country adopted the Eighteenth Amendment? A.—Not very much so, or I never saw it.

Q.—Do you mean to say that prior to the adoption of the Eighteenth Amendment you never saw women drink cocktails and wine and champagne in the hotels of this country? A.—I have never seen them.

Q.—Did you ever hear of it? A.—I have heard of it, yes, but I have never seen it.

Q.—You know it did become quite the common practice, do you not? A.—No, I do not.

Q.—Why is it that people are drinking today because of the passage of the Eighteenth Amendment when they did not drink prior to that time? A.—Because they believe that it is an infringement on their personal liberty.

Q.—Well, people do not violate other laws that might be an infringement of their personal liberty, do they, for that very reason? A.—I do not know.

Q.—Well, you must know from your observations and the records of the police courts of the country that men are not committing larceny or other kindred offenses merely because the statuory law of the State says they should not commit them. (There was no reply.)

Senator Reed—Well, the crime of larceny is hardly to be likened as an infringement of personal liberty. A.—I should say not.

Senator Goff—Oh, yes, it is. A.—Mr. Sullivan—That is not a comparison.

Q.—I know a great many people who feel it is an infringement on their personal liberty to prevent them from stealing and the putting of them in the penitentiary as the result of it. A.—Yes, but I never considered it a great offense to drink a glass of wholesome beer.

Violations by Law Officers.

"Now," continued Mr. Sullivan, "Senator Nicoll of New York, a State Senator, who is a Republican, said before a committee last month in Albany—and Mrs. Boole, President of the Women's Christian Temperance Union, listened to it—he said it was making people of the State of New York more resentful, and the reason was that the officer who made the arrest was a violator of the law, the attorney who prosecuted was a violator of the law, and the Judge who sentenced the man was a violator of the law. That is a statement made by a State Senator, and this lady was sitting right there listening to it."

"Do you know," asked Senator Reed, "whether or not—and I think we all know what conditions were before prohibition, and I think we all know that they used to have banquets, and that at those banquets they served wines and sometimes served cocktails, and that some women drank along with the men on those occasions, took a glass of wine, and they might take a cocktail, but that was largely confined to the rather elaborate banquets, this habit of passing the bottle at the table—that is a thing that never existed before at banquets, and we all know that—is this passing of the bottle a thing that is confined now to the elaborate dinners, or is it a general custom that has grown up where young people meet?"

"It is general," replied Mr. Sullivan.

"But, do you know now, and I do not ask you to state whether you know from your personal experience, but do you know now," Senator Reed repeated, "whether the custom has grown up in cities where people can step to the telephone, a woman can step to the telephone, and call a bootlegger and have a bottle delivered at the door; do you know whether that is true from what you have observed or what you have learned talking with the people? A.—I have heard that, but I have not witnessed it. I know, however, that if you have the money there is no trouble in getting it. That is certainly true.

RUSSELL TELLS OF CANADA.

The first of the Canadian witnesses, Francis William Russell of Winnipeg, President of the Moderation League of Manitoba, then took the stand. He addressed the committee along the line of the suggestions recently made by Senator Bruce in favor of adoption here of the Canadian system. He also described how the law was working in Manitoba, which has tried various experiments.

"I wish to tell," he said, "the experiences we have had in the prairie provinces of Western Canada and of the evils that came into those provinces as the result of prohibition and what success we have had in attempting to cope with those evils.

"In 1916 the people of Manitoba passed a prohibition law by a very large popular majority, in a referendum vote. In 1919 they began very much to regret what they had done in 1916 and were filled with a feeling of dismay at the havoc that prohibition was making of the social, moral and economic interests of the country, and yet they did not see how they were going to relieve themselves of these evils.

"We found all those evils that have been so graphically described as existing in this country during this hearing existing in our own country. We found that more than half of the people were in avowed, unblushing revolt against this law. They were not obeying it. We found that the Province of Manitoba was covered with a network of stills. We did not have a still in the Province of Manitoba in 1916 when prohibition came in. The first evidence we had in our courts of any stills was in 1918, after two years of prohibition.

"There were forty convictions for illicit stills annually until 1923, the last year of prohibition, when they numbered about 300. The convictions for illicit stills did not cover the fringe of the illicit still business and the output of these stills was debauching our towns and villages and hamlets.

Bootleggers Were Getting Rich.

"In addition there was the distribution of all kinds of obnoxious liquor in attractive bottles and good labels, which was going on under an organization of men who were getting rich at the business.

"As the result of this our psychopathic wards at the hospitals, instead of doing the work that they were intended for, to look after the naturally defective, were filled with the wrecks of humanity caused by drinking this liquor. The young people of the province had simply gone wild. They seemed to take a special pride in lawlessness of this kind. Liquor parties, the hip-pocket flask menace—well it is true it became absolutely the despair of the parents of the city of Winnipeg.

"We were told that prohibition would remove and decrease crime. We never had such crime waves in Western Canada, especially Western Manitoba, as we had during the last two years of prohibition. We had the very same crime that is complained of so much in this country today. There were bandits shooting up villages and robbing people and banks. We never had it before, and, thank God, we have got rid of it now, but it was the result of the rum-runner and the bootlegger in Western Manitoba.

"And our assizes, before prohibition we had two assizes a year in Winnipeg, and one Judge could handle both. In the last two years of prohibition we had to have four assizes and at each there were always two and sometimes three Judges sitting in court to handle the big increase in the work resulting from the increase of crime in Manitoba as the result of prohibition.

"Now the financial side. The municipalities were all hard up. They lost all the revenue from licenses, and they had a very largely increased expenditure of hundreds of thousands of dollars more for law enforcement.

"We formed an organization called the Moderation League in 1921, to try to crystallize public sentiment on this matter, temperance sentiment, not prohibition sentiment, but temperance sentiment in the Province of Manitoba, to remedy these evils, to save our Province.

"We went to the politicians and the Legislature and begged for remedial legislation. They laughed at us, but in 1921 we had a general election in the Province of Manitoba and we begged the people to forget all party affiliations—and we are pretty strong party men up there—and to vote only for candidates who would support a referendum of the people on this question within six months of the meeting of the House.

Prohibition Snowed Under.

"Our request was so well received by the people that the politicians had to climb down, had to make promises and pledges, and we got a House unanimously elected to give us this referendum.

"In January, 1923, we presented our bill to the local Legislature with a petition for the Government to take a vote on it and they took the vote in June, 1923, with the result that prohibition was snowed under.

"For instance, take the city of Winnipeg, which in 1916 voted 10,000 majority for prohibition, in 1923 Winnipeg voted 26,000 majority against prohibition. The total vote in that city in 1923 was 66,000. Forty-six thousand voted against prohibition and only 20,000 voted for prohibition, after seven years of experience, a complete change.

"What was the form of the referendum?" the witness was asked.

"It was: 'Are you in favor of the Government control of the liquor act proposed by the Moderation League.' And they voted 'Yes.' Forty-six thousand out of 66,000 in Winnipeg voted 'Yes.'"

"The Legislature submitted the bill?" Mr. Russell was asked.

"The people in a referendum vote," he replied.

"The women did not have the vote in 1915 when prohibition was passed," he continued, "and the prohibitionists rather chuckled over that, and said they would keep prohibition for all time to come in Manitoba. But as a matter of fact 70 per cent. of the women voted against prohibition in 1923 in Winnipeg. The mothers to save their families and sisters voted against prohibition in 1923 as they will in any community, I am quite sure, as they have done all over Canada in every province where they have got the chance.

"The act came into force 1923. It has been in force now for two and a half years and every one worth while in the Province of Manitoba is perfectly satisfied with its working. The only people not satisfied with it are the irreconcilable fanatics who cannot see anything good when the question of liquor is concerned. Outside of that the business element, the financial element, the working classes are satisfied.

"We had that same condition in our province described here yesterday of the working classes being jealous of the richer classes under prohibition. They saw their cellars filled full of wines and liquors which were held for entertainment purposes, and the working man could not get his glass of beer, which he needed, legally, and there was a great cleavage caused in our province, which we never had before between the classes of people.

Everybody Now Satisfied.

"Everybody is satisfied now. We have had no revolt against the act. We have apparently no stills now in the Province of Manitoba. I told you that in 1923 we had 300 convictions for illicit stills. In 1925 the convictions did not average one a month. There is no output from the stills going into the Province of Manitoba, which has tried various experiments.

Senator Harreld—Has the saloon business been restored? A.—No.

Q.—How do you sell it? A.—Commissioners.

Q.—Do they have charge of the distilling? A.—No, they buy it.

Q.—From distilleries? A.—From breweries and distilleries.

Q.—And resell it? A.—Resell it and make a profit. The first year's profit turned in $5,000,000 to the relief of taxation.

Q.—Do they have open stores where they sell it? A.—No.

Mr. Russell resumed his narrative, saying:

"Now the young people have come to their senses, apparently, and have returned to the preprohibition habits. As President of the Moderation League for five years I can assure you the parents of Winnipeg are the most grateful people in the world for the miracle that has been worked in connection with their boys and girls.

"The class of boys and girls that were being ruined under prohibition in Manitoba were the very class who should be the future hope of the country—the young professional and business class.

"They had their liquor parties—their byol parties as they call them up there—their 'bring your own liquor' on the card. So we have the gratitude of parents of Manitoba, especially of Winnipeg, which I know.

Big Decrease in Crime.

"With reference to crime, I told you about the increase in the assizes. The last three assizes in the cities of Portage, La Prairie and Brandon, west of Winnipeg, the Judges have been presented with white gloves, which is the symbol in our country of there being no cases at all on the docket, and in Winnipeg at our January assizes there were only five cases, the smallest assizes in fifteen years in Manitoba.

"As I have said, the financial result has brought in $3,000,000 for relief of taxation.

Senator Reed—In Winnipeg? A.—No.

Q.—In Manitoba? A.—About $1,500,000 has come into Manitoba and $1,500,000 has gone to the Federal Government.

Q.—I was wanting to know whether you speak of the Province or the city of Winnipeg? A.—The Province, $1,500,000. Our act provides that the sales profits go half to the Government, to the consolidated revenue of the Province, and one-half is divided among the municipalities according to their assessed value, and the municipalities look forward now every year, every six months, to this check; and municipalities that voted against our act in 1916 are now the most consistent supporters of our act, because they find they get the profits, which help them to build roads and things, that the bootleggers used to get.

Senator Goff—Have you any statistics on the number of people in Winnipeg who are drinking since your referendum went into effect, as compared with the number who drank before? You said the assizes do not have as many cases. I think that might follow from the fact that what was illegal before has now become a legalized traffic. A.—None of our prohibition cases come before the assizes. They are all disposed of summarily in our courts. They do not deal with men in that way.

Q.—What were the cases before the assizes? A.—Cases that could not be dealt with summarily, like burglary, larceny, manslaughter, murder, which have a preliminary trial in the magistrates' court and are then committed to a jury at the assizes.

Bootleg Liquor as Crime Breeder.

Senator Goff asked why the prohibition of liquor sale produced these crimes.

"All the drinking under prohibition is more or less under cover," replied Mr. Russell. "It produces orgies of drinking which set people crazy. They do not go and get a glass of beer and go home. They do not drink beer. They drink all kinds of concoctions, wild, vicous things, and they sit around a bottle until it is all gone, and go out to drive their car wild; and the fact of the matter is that blocks and tenements of the City of Winnipeg were filled full of parties every night. It was the favorite, popular indoor amusement to defy the law, because the great majority of our people did not and do not think it is a crime to take a drink."

Senator Goff—Have you studied whether this great increase in crime was due entirely to prohibition or to the aftermath of the World War? A.—I studied that, and we do not say—we are not unreasonable—we do not say the whole of it came from prohibition. But we do say that after four, five, six or seven years of prohibition, after six or seven years after the war closed, we should have had much better conditions in our country if it had not been for the fantastic legislation which had been put on the statute books during the war period.

Senator Reed—You did get a better result, did you not? A.—Immediately after.

Q.—Immediately changing the law? A.—Yes.

Senator Goff—Did you consider that immediately after the signing of the armistice and in the years following there was a great increase in crime in the European countries, where prohibition did not prevail? A.—No, we only took into consideration our own country. We wanted to know what our own trouble was.

Q.—Did you consider these general factors that might possibly enter into this question? A.—No, we did not approach it mathematically at all.

Disagrees With Harreld.

Senator Goff disclaimed any intent to embarrass Mr. Russell, but merely wanted information.

"Do you recognize?" asked the Senator, "that history records that after every great war, where nations seek their rights by force, that the reaction on society generally is that the individual members try to achieve certain rights by force?"

"No, sir, that is not my reading of history," Mr. Russell answered. "That has not been the experience of England."

Senator Goff—It was the experience of England immediately following the World War. Have you considered the question? A.—No, not very much. England is today the most sober and most law-abiding country on the face of earth. And it has a well regulated license system. Fifty per cent. of its jails have been closed since the World War.

Q.—At what time? A.—Closed completely, said the Police Commissioners are wondering what to do with them. They are turning them into tenements to relieve the house shortage.

Q.—Well, that was not the condition, to my own personal knowledge, in England within three years after the armistice.

A.—clipping presented by Mr. Russell read:

"LONDON, April 3 (Canadian Press Cable).—In consequence of a decrease in the prison population nearly half the prisons in Great Britain have been closed in the last twelve years. Since the war twenty-five jails have been converted for other purposes.

"The Prison Commissioners are at a loss as to what profitable use the disused prisons can be put. Several of them are being used as temporary dwellings for victims of the housing shortage."

Senator Walsh asked if there were jury trials in the summary proceedings for the trial of prohibition law violations. Mr. Russell said there were not. The witness described the sentence limits as $200 or more for illegal buying. For second offfenses there was no fine, but imprisonment from six months to a year, he stated.

"Well, do not your people regard that as a violation of the Anglo-Saxon right of trial by jury?" asked Senator Walsh.

"No, because we think that we give every reasonable opportunity to our people to get liquor under the law now," was the reply.

Q.—No, I was speaking about under the prohibition law. A.—What was it? To send people to jail? A.—Yes, we did think it was a violation—that is why we objected to it, sir.

Q.—Under the prohibition law, offenders were tried summarily without a jury? A.—Yes.

Q.—And might be sentenced to imprisonment for a period of a year? A.—Yes.

Q.—Now you have abandoned that system and you have the regulatory system. Now are offenders under the regulatory system tried in the same summary Magistrate's Courts? A.—Yes, in the same way.

Q.—And what is the limit of penalty that may be imposed. A.—The same thing.

Q.—The same thing. So that if it is a violation of the Anglo-Saxon right of trial by jury, you have disregarded that principle? A.—We never had it, sir, in Canada. We never had trial by jury for that class of cases in Canada. We never thought we needed it.

Q.—Well, the point was that you never did try that class of cases before a jury in Canada? A.—Never. We never thought we needed it. We never felt any loss of liberty by not having it. We have the British system that is, trial by the Magistrate.

Q.—Well, do you understand that that system obtains in Great Britain? A.—Yes.

Q.—That Magistrates try offenders and sentence them to imprisonment for a period of at least a year? A.—Up to two years, yes.

Q.—Up to two years without trial by jury? A.—Yes, sir. Sure, absolutely. I was a court reporter for many years in England.

How Present Law Works.

Senator Reed asked: "Now, you were going to tell us, were you not, the methods of distribution of liquors under the present law of Canada?

"Well, I have nothing much more to say, except that I would like to call attention to the fact that there is an increasing purchase in our country of beer and wine as opposed to the purchase of hard liquor," said Mr Russell. "My friend, Sir William Stavert, is here from Quebec. He could tell you, if necessary, about the habits of the people of the Province of Quebec. They drink practically nothing but beer and wine. All the hard liquor is purchased by visitors; about 90 per cent. by American visitors.

"And it is the same in our province. We are getting a very large tourist trade up there. Special trains run every week-end. Our city is full of tourists and our commission is doing a very large business with tourists from Minnesota, Wrisconsin and the rest of those countries up there; but our people are drinking beer and wine more and more every year.

"Manitoba was not a wine-drinking country. We were not a wine-drinking people like Quebec might be supposed to be, French-Canadian, but the biggest seller of Manitoba today is a wine that is made down in the Niagara Peninsula of Canada. The French wine comes in under very low duty. They are becoming wine drinkers up there in preference to anything harder.

"Now we have not got rid of the evils of prohibition yet. There is still an illicit sale of liquor retailed in what I like are referred to as 'speak-easies' here. Is that the word used down here?"

"That is a good term here," said Senator Walsh.

"Blind pigs," Senator Goff remarked.

"Blind pigs we call them and we have not been able in the two and a half years since the change thoroughly to get rid of that evil, which grew up to tremendous proportions," continued Mr. Russell. "And seven years of prohibition thousands and tens of thousands of dollars were invested in the business, but we are getting rid of it, and one difference today is that all the liquor that is sold there is good liquor, that is, that is first purchased from the commission and then retailed, and there are not the evil results from that that there is from the stiff they used to sell. And all of it pays a tax to the Government. But we are gradually wiping that out. That is the only remaining evil, I think, that we have in the Province of Manitoba from prohibition.

"I might say that the Western Provinces of Saskatchewan and Alberta have the same experience. They passed a prohibition provision in the same year, 1916. They rejected it again, after we did ours, in 1924, by equally large majorities, equal turnover of the voters, and they are both very well pleased with the result.

Quotes Mounted Police Report.

"I dare say most people have heard of the Royal Canadian Mounted Police. You have seen them in the pictures if you have not heard of them otherwise. Here is the last report of Major A. B. Allard, superintendent of the Southern Division of Saskatchewan: 'The enforcement officers investigated 557 cases of illicit manufacture of liquor, a decrease of 20 per cent. in comparison with the 1924 figures.' He says:

"'This, in my opinion, is largely due to the passing of the new liquor laws of this Province, which came into effect in the early part of the year.'

"'Eighty per cent. reduction in Saskatchewan. Next year we will clean that right up.'"

"Superintendent G. L. Jennings of the Northern Division of Saskatchewan reports regarding the illicit manufacturing of liquor:

"'There is no doubt, however, that the illicit manufacture of spirits for the purpose of sale is decidedly on the decrease, especially since the new provincial liquor act came into force. It has now become a hard matter for the illegal distiller to dispense of his concoctions at a price which makes this nefarious practice profitable.'

"Now, that is the experience, and, mind you, we claim that ours is the best temperance legislation ever introduced into any Legislature. We say it is temperance legislation, not total abstinence legislation, but temperance legislation of the highest grade.

"And we found, and our conclusion was after investigating the whole situation in Western Canada, from all classes of people, from all parts of Europe, in a great territory stretching from the international boundary to Hudson's Bay, that as long as human nature exists, and that will be to the end of the world, there is going to be a demand for liquor for beverage purposes, and as long as the law of fermentation lasts the means of supplying that demand will be there illegally, and we had to meet the situation. We met it by reasonable laws, sane liquor laws, and we have accomplished a wonderful reform in Western Canada.

"The other two provinces have a little advance on our act. They have public drinking. We have no public drinking in Manitoba. But they have gone a little further."

Senator Walsh—Just what do you mean by public drinking, Mr. Russell? A.—Under our act the liquor ordered is delivered by the commissioner at the place registered. That is in my house, my order. And it is drunk in my house. There are no bars and no places to sit down.

Senator Goff—Your commission delivers the liquor directly to the homes of the people? A.—Yes, sir, in Manitoba. And in Saskatchewan and Alberta they do not. The people fetch it themselves. And I think that our act will be changed a little in that regard, Senator. I think there will be public drinking again of beer and wine at meals.

Q.—Senator Reed—Will you tell us what your system of regulation is? How you distribute the liquor? A.—First of all you must have a permit. There are three classes of permits. A permanent resident of Manitoba can get a permit for one year for $2.50. He can get a permit for a single purchase—a lot of people want to buy a bottle of brandy—he can get a permit for a single purchase by the payment of 50 cents, or a visitor who has not been in the Province a month can get a permit for a month for $1. Now on the permit is the residence of the permittee. Any one wishing to purchase liquor goes into a Government liquor order office and signs an order, and the Government delivers it to the address on the permit where it can be consumed.

Senator Walsh—How many of these offices are there? A.—There are eight order offices in Winnipeg. Only one central place from which it is delivered. There are offices all over the Province in the principal towns. Where they cannot deliver it in any other way the commission delivers it by express or by mail. The price is the same to the purchaser living in the northern part of the Province as it is to the man living next door to the liquor commission. The cost of delivery is absorbed in the price charged.

Senator Reed—Your first must get a permit.

Q.—Now, do you issue those permits to minors at 18, or, sir, 21 years of age; which age provides for that.

Q.—And does the man when he gets his permit have to make any kind of showing that he is a law-abiding citizen? A.—He has to have a proposer, just as you do when you go to a public library. He has to have a rate payer to propose it.

Q.—Somebody that vouches for him? A.—Yes.

Q.—So that there is a check on the character of people who can get liquor at all? A.—Yes, sir.

Q.—If he is a resident. And if he is a non-resident he has to get it renewed from month to month? A.—Yes. You cannot buy more than one case of hard liquor a week.

Q.—A case? A.—Yes.

Senator Reed Stirs Mirth.

"That is not much of a limit. How is it in the other Provinces?" asked Senator Reed, and the crowd roared.

"But you must bear in mind," Mr. Russell explained, "that we find limits—now take my house, what would be the good of a limit? I have a permit. My two boys might have permits. Well, we could each get a case. But there is the provision in our act for the commission to watch the orders, and if they find any one whom they think is giving way to over-indulgence in liquor it is the duty of the commission to give him a talking to, to try to urge him to more temperance, temperate habits, and they do it.

"You can get up to one case a week. Very few people get that. Very few people. You would not get that unless you were going to have a banquet or something like that at your house. You would not get that for personal use."

"That, while it is entirely too much for any one person to use under any ordinary circumstances, does place some limit upon the fellow who might want to sell it again, does it not? asked Senator Reed.

"Yes," replied Mr. Russell, "that is the reason. That is the only object of it. And we can get two cases of beer a week.

Senator Goff—Could the domestic servants of your houses obtain a permit and also order beer or liquor? A.—Yes, sir. It is a democratic country. The domestic servant has the same privileges as I have.

Q.—Well then, does that democracy extend to the head of the house using the liquor so obtained? A.—By stealing it, do you mean?

Mr. Goff—No, no, having it given away or purchasing it from the servant? A.—Oh, well, yes, you could do it, but they did not do it.

Q.—Your democracy goes from the top down and from the bottom up? A.—All the way.

"This limitation of a case a week," said Senator Reed, "is intended to stop the resale of the liquor? So that a man could not go into the business?"

"In our act," Mr. Russell answered, "there is no limitation. We said when we drafted that act that it was not right to treat people as children. There should not be any limitation. If people are going to abuse the act, we will punish them under the clauses of the act, but up to that point we have no right to interfere with any one. But the commission has the right to make regulations under this act, and, finding this retail sale hang-over from prohibition still going on, they made this restriction in regard to the amount. That is the way the restriction came."

Bootleg Supply Cut Off.

"So that the gentleman who had been running a 'speak-easy' under prohibition could not now go for his supply to the Government authorities and get enough to run his 'speak-easy'?"

"That is the idea," said Mr. Russell, "and that is the reason they made the regulation."

"I want to ascertain about your breweries and distilleries. How are they operated? They are licensed also? Senator Reed interrupted.

"They are licensed by the Dominion Government," said Mr. Russell, "under the Inland Revenue act of the Dominion."

"And they in your Province can sell only to the Commissioners?"

"Well," Mr. Russell replied, "they can sell only to the commission, but the commission holds an office in the breweries, you see. If a man wants a case of beer a man holding a permit telephones to the brewery for a case of beer, gives his permit number, that is checked over by the commission officer in the brewery and the beer is sent directly from the brewery, because beer, it was found, was something that could not very well be kept as hard liquor can in the storerooms and warehouses of the commission. It is better to deliver it direct from the brewery under the supervision of the Commissioner."

"What system do you pursue to prevent the diversion of liquor from the distillery to the bootlegger instead of going to the commission?" asked Mr. Walsh.

"Well, sir," said Mr. Russell, "every distillery has in it a representative of the Federal Government from the Inland Revenue Department in checking up the men. The report of the officer checking up the men has to agree with the books of the liquor commission in Manitoba as to the amount of liquor shipped out of that distillery in to the commission and sold. It is all checked up by Government officials."

Senator Goff—Does your law penalize the sale of any of this liquor by the permittee? A.—Yes, sir.

Q.—Well, just what are your penalizing provisions? A.—In the first case he would be fined $200 and costs. In the second case there would be no fine. He would be given another imprisonment. He could be given a year.

Senator Walsh—Mr. Russell, did you say that Alberta has substantially the same law? A.—Alberta has substantially the same law, except that in Alberta they have the open sale and drinking of beer in parlors.

Q.—But the same permit system? A.—Yes, practically the same limitation of amount.

Q.—How do you account for the fact that line from your Provinces then into my State of Montana? Well, sir, there used to be, I will answer that, this way. Our Liquor Commission in Manitoba showed a decrease of $100,000 in gross revenue in 1925. We attribute that altogether to the smaller quantity that has gone over the international boundary of Minnesota during 1925 on account of the extra watch at the boundary. There has not been so much smuggled over.

Q.—What troubles me is this: Your system contemplates that not a pint of this liquor shall go to anybody except your Commissioners. A.—That is right.

Q.—And your liquor commissioners take pains to see that no one gets more than a case a week. A.—Yes.

Q.—Now, if he takes a case each week with any degree of regularity or frequency the commission interposes with him and indicates that he is getting more than he really ought to, and that he ought to limit himself. A.—Yes, sir.

Q.—Nevertheless we find a constant stream of the stuff from your Provinces into the border States. A.—Oh, of course.

Q.—Now what I want to know from you is: How do you think it gets there in any such quantity? A.—Well, supposing I wanted to go into that business, sir. Supposing I was out in Calgary and I wanted to go into that business. I would have a permit. I have got that, but I might have five sons. They would have five permits. We would each get a case of liquor. The law says that liquor shall be consumed on the premises. I might run it over your boundary to get the increased price for it if I went into that business. If I got caught I would go to the penitentiary, of course.

Q.—What is your Government doing to help us arrest it? A.—If we find anybody transporting liquor illegally we arrest them. We do not protect the international boundary.

Q.—But the actual transportation of liquor by anybody is a crime under your law? A.—A crime under our law, yes.

Senator Reed—I want to get at this: Does your law permit the withdrawing of liquor to be exported without any limit on it? A.—It does not.

Q.—Do you know how it is in other Provinces with respect to that matter? A.—I do not know about the Eastern distilleries. We have not got any distilleries in the West, you know. I do not know how it is with the distilleries. The Eastern distilleries seem to export a lot of liquor.

Q.—So far as you know, the laws of other Provinces where the distilleries exist may permit the withdrawal of liquor for export purposes? A.—I should think naturally they would, sir, because no Government would protect other countries against their own manufacturers, would they?

Hampering Illicit Trade.

"It does not seem to be customary," said Senator Reed.

"Let me ask you this," Senator Harreld interposed: "Are these breweries in the East allowed under the law to send into your Province, Manitoba, liquor without limitation?"

"Yes, sir," replied Mr. Russell.

"How do you keep the bootlegger from selling?" asked Mr. Harreld.

"The railways of Canada cannot carry liquor except consigned to the Liquor Commission of the Province," replied the witness.

Q.—Then there are limitations on it? A.—Well, there is no limitation on the amount the Liquor Commission buys.

Q.—No, but the railroads are not allowed to ship from the Eastern Provinces into Manitoba to any individual at all? A.—No, sir.

Q.—Then if a bootlegger brings liquor into Montana, as the Senator from Montana said, how does he get his supply? A.—He buys it legitimately from the Liquor Commission of Manitoba.

Q.—But if you carry out the rigid rules of your commission he could not get enough to amount to anything in the way of seeds to sell illicitly, could he? A.—Yes, I think he could. I think anybody can break a law. I do not think it is done very much.

"Is it not true," Senator Reed inquired, "that these distilleries, in other Provinces where they are run and where your present impression is that there is no law prohibiting exportation, might export to the United States over a Canadian railroad up to Manitoba with an ultimate consignment to somebody in the United States, and that in that way the liquor would get from the Eastern Province into your Province legally for the purpose of being shipped across the line?"

"I don't think that is possible," said Mr. Russell. "I don't think any liquor can be transported on the Canadian railroads unless it is consigned to the Liquor Commission of the Province, and it is all consigned to the King, you see, the Crown, the State."

Representative James M. Mead of New York was heard by the committee for a few minutes and explained the bill introduced last week by Representative Carew of New York, which provides, as does the Edwards bill in the Senate, for the repeal of the Volstead law.

Staver Takes the Stand.

Sir William Staver of Quebec was called when Mr. Mead concluded.

"I only arrived in this country," said Sir William, "Thursday afternoon, and there received the invit wanted more than that. Is not that true?" Senator Harreld asked.

"They had light wines and beers with certain privileges regarding strong liquor, which privileges were abused," said Sir William. "They had the privilege of free sale of light wines and beers, but in speaking of stronger liquors, I will say that certain wholesale firms had the privilege of handling strong liquors under certain restrictions, which they abused, and the abuse was so great that the change was necessary."

"They abused that notwithstanding the fact that they had the right to sell light wines and beer," Senator Harreld commented.

"And the fact that they did abuse this law in communities where they had the right to sell light wines and beers led to the latest reform that you speak of," he added, to which Sir William assented.

Q.—Then have you any right to expect that if we allowed light wines and beers to be sold in this country the people would be satisfied with it? A.—If you have control by a lot of provisions which exist in Quebec at the present time, I think so. Yes.

Q.—It would be a matter of the control? A.—Yes.

Q.—But you do sell hard liquors in Quebec? A.—Well, there is the sale of hard liquors in Quebec by the commission.

Senator Walsh—So that notwithstanding the fact that the people can get light wines and beer they still want hard liquors? A.—Yes.

"That is the point," interjected Senator Harreld.

BETTER CONTROL DEMANDED.

Senator Reed said: "Let me follow that a moment further; You had a law which permitted the sale of light wines and beers, but the beers were of this very inferior quality; that was the condition of the law prior to 1921?"

"I did not say that the beers there were unsatisfactory in quality. I stated that of the Ontario beers," said Sir William.

"In Quebec you had a law that permitted the sale of light wines and beers, and what was the provision with reference to the sale of hard liquors prior to the enactment of the 1921 law?" Senator Reed asked.

"Previous to 1921 there were some eight or ten so-called wholesale firms who had a license to deal in liquors on a wholesale basis, and also to fill prescriptions by medical men—that being the source for obtaining hard liquors which the people required," the witness explained. "Those firms so far abused their privilege under their license as to make the regulation a laughing stock, and for that reason it was felt necessary to adopt better control in the sale of hard liquors, and hence the enactment of the present law."

"That is to say, now," Senator Harreld suggested, "in order to get hard liquors in Quebec instead of doing as they could have done before, buy it from distillers or from their distributing agents and buying it in unlimited quantities, now you substitute Government control of the hard liquors, so that anybody desiring to get them must go to the regular public Government places to secure it?"

Sir William agreed that this was true, and Senator Harreld continued:

"So that, adding the two together, the sale of light wines and beers and the regulation by the Government through the Government selling hard liquors—that being the case, what has been the result? Has it been satisfactory and has it tended to reduce the consumption of hard liquors and to promote temperance or has it been otherwise?"

Hard Liquor Sales Reduced.

"We think it has been entirely successful and we think that it has reduced the sale of hard liquors and that it has induced the people to drink light wines instead of hard liquors,' answered Sir William.

Q.—But not withstanding the fact that the people had the right before to drink light wines and beers without restriction, or there was the sale of it without restriction, you have found it necessary to curb the sale of hard liquors? A.—Yes.

Senator Goff—Does light wine and beer satisfy the appetite of the man who wants hard liquor? A.—We think it does; we find that it does.

Q.—It does under legislative restriction? A.—No, we have evidence that it actually satisfies.

Q.—But the beer must be strong enough to be intoxicating? A.—Well, that is an open question; our beer is very little stronger than the beer in the Province of Ontario, but it is acceptable. For instance, it is not nearly as strong as the English beer.

"Do you find that there is much intoxication among those who drink light wines?" asked Senator Goff.

"Very little intoxication," answered Sir William.

"Well, is it not a fact that if a man desires to become intoxicated and can not obtain hard liquor he will satisfy that appetite with the next best thing, to wit: in this case light wines and beer?

"Yes, but he undertakes something that is objectionable to his tastes in trying to absorb sufficient of light wine and beer to cause intoxication. At least, that is our impression, and it applies to most of the people."

"Do you think that the taste ever prevents a man from becoming intoxicated who desires to reach that stage?" Senator Goff persisted.

"I do. When I speak of 'taste' I speak of the condition of his stomach, for instance. A man is not thoroughly—"

"That reminds me," Senator Walsh broke in, "of the statement of an old friend of mine, who said 'No man ever becomes deliberately intoxicated, it is always a mistake.'"

"It is the case in 99 times out of 100," Senator Reed commented.

"We think that a man would not deliberately overload his stomach for the sake of becoming drunk," Sir William declared.

Senator Reed—Since the question has been raised, let me ask: Is it not your observation that very few men ever start drinking with the idea in advance of getting drunk? A.—Quite true.

Q.—They want a drink and they get two or three drinks, and then they keep on until they get drunk, nowadays? A.—As Senator Walsh just remarked, when it occurs it is a mistake.

Q.—But if they had light wines or beer it would have to drink such an enormous quantity, if it was milk, that they would be able to keep their head and would not go crazy and would not try to get drunk? A.—Certainly.

"Then it comes back to the proposition that intoxication is rather mental than physical," said Senator Goff.

Senator Reed said, "Oh no," but Sir William remarked, "I think so."

"I do not know what you mean by that," said Senator Reed, amid laughter. "I was never mentally drunk in my life."

WOLL SPEAKS FOR UNIONS.

Vice President Woll of the American Federation of Labor was the last witness at today's session. He expressed the view that because of his wide experience in the federation he was qualified to speak with some knowledge as to the real prohibition situation in the United States—particularly, he added, the attitude of labor toward the Volstead act.

"In my official position I am constantly traveling, coming in almost daily contact with all elements making up our social organism, and believe myself capable of presenting impressions and observations of various classes in our society and Government toward sumptuary legislation in general and the Volstead law in particular.

"I am not a drinking man, nor have I any connection whatever or interest of any kind in any organization or association, firm or enterprise concerned in the promotion of the liquor traffic. I therefore believe that the observations hereinafter noted are prompted from an unprejudiced or unbiased point of view.

"Records of American organized labor, and particularly the records of the American Federation of Labor, clearly indicate that the labor movement of our country has always fostered temperance in drinking and has supported every undertaking in that direction. A review of the activities of labor likewise demonstrates that much progress had been made in that direction before the time of the enactment of the Eighteenth Amendment, followed by the enactment of the Volstead law. Since that time all efforts toward temperate drinking have ceased—indeed, a continuation of such activities has since become subject to the severe criticism of being in contravention of the Volstead law.

"By the law drinking of any beverage containing more than one-half of 1 per cent. is made a national crime, and to counsel any one to moderate or temperate drinking of alcoholic beverages is necessarily a national crime. This very fact has made impossible the continuation of the great educational and moral campaign heretofore engaged in by organized labor.

Sees No Dry Law Benefits.

"The passage of the Eighteenth Amendment and enactment of the Volstead law have not tempered or moderated drinking. Whatever improvement has taken place in the meetings of the trade unions, in the working conditions of the workers, in the greater remuneration received by them for services rendered, in the placing aside of the saving reserves are the result of trade union activities and in spite of this prohibitive form of sumptuary legislation.

"Intemperate drinking does prevail among the workers and is constantly increasing. The same difficulties experienced before the enactment of the Volstead law are experienced at present and in a more aggravated form. A noticeable feature is the great number of young men, entering the industrial world, who take a particular delight in their ability to secure liquor and the ease with which the law of the land may be disregarded. This disregard of an unenforceable law had led to the even greater danger of disregard for respect and order of the home and of the parents.

"It is true the Volstead law has dispensed with the public saloon. Instead there has come the greater evil of the 'speak-easy' places, the atmosphere of which is charged with delight for resentment of law and order. It is in this atmosphere that the youth of the land is now receiving its first introduction into the world of crime. Indeed, the first intoxicating drink immediately marks the young man of today as a criminal.

"In addition it is quite a common occurrence for ones to be invited to the homes of the workers and others to join in a party the chief attraction of which is the violation of the Volstead law and the drinking of badly manufactured beers or other alcoholic concoctions. Every one of these meetings is merely another step in the unconscious campaign toward disregard for law and destruction of government.

Resentful Toward Congress.

"There is not at present such great resentment against the Eighteenth Amendment as there is toward the Volstead law, because the latter measure is the method by which the great mass of our people feel that their rights are being denied them. There is the general impression in all classes of citizens and especially among the great mass of wage earners that the definition of intoxicants, as contained in the Volstead law, is unsound, illogical, and in contravention of the intent and spirit of the Eighteenth Amendment.

"It is the general impression that a beverage containing 2.75 per cent. alcohol is not an intoxicating drink in the general acceptation of that term and that the Volstead law has declared a beverage an intoxicant which in fact is not an intoxicant but merely a stimulant. The public is therefore fast losing confidence in Congress and trust in our National Legislature to safeguard and promote the freedom of the American people.

"This spirit of distrust is wearing the spirit of the resentment and intolerance. This feeling is engendered by the ever more vigorous efforts made to throw aside the safeguards with which the individual has been surrounded to protect him from undue and unjust prosecution and punishment on the part of the Government, supplemented by the glaring malfeasance of those in public offices. Trust and confidence are being rapidly undermined in those charged with the executive, judicial and legislative functions of Government, those charged with the administering of the affairs of Government.

"The general impression prevails among all classes of our citizenship that the Eighteenth Amendment and the Volstead law, with its interpretation by courts and the enforcement by governmental agencies have reached almost limitless bounds. The search and seizure provisions of this law are simply appalling and are violative of the very spirit of the Fourth Amendment.

EFFECT ON HOME LIFE.

"No law has ever caused so much dissatisfaction. Millions of homes have been turned into breweries and distilleries, children who never knew the taste of liquor now have little difficulty in obtaining it.

"Enforcement officers have become agents provocateurs. Bribery, when the obtaining of liquor is concerned, has become a fixed practice and is no longer considered one of the most detestable of criminal offenses.

"There is likewise the impression and firm conviction that Congress in the enactment of the Volstead law did not follow the spirit of the Eighteenth Amendment. It was believed that the Eighteenth Amendment was merely a declaratory and an enabling act and that the several States of the Union would be accorded their State right to determine the question of what constitutes an intoxicant beverage.

"The Volstead law not only undertook to determine the conditions that would constitute a crime, but defined an intoxicant beverage to such extent that every State has been denied the right and opportunity of determining such question.

"Indeed, it is the overwhelming opinion and judgment that Congress deliberately undertook to destroy State right and substitute therefor domination by the National Government.

"Disapproval of this assumed power by our National Government has manifested itself in several forms. A number of States have refused to support enforcement of a law in which they have been denied their constitutional right of participation. Consequently they have shifted the burden of enforcement onto the National Government. Resentment against this invasion by the National Government of State rights has likewise caused the States as well as the people to have little confidence in our National Government.

"The temporary defeat of the proposed Twentieth Amendment may be safely laid at the door of Congress because of the ruthless enforcement law enacted by it, under the Eighteenth Amendment. Everywhere the people are distrustful of the National Government, and the fear of centralized power among our people is well exemplified and justified in the Volstead law.

Says Rights Are Denied States.

"Congress, by the enactment of this law, has converted our federated form of Government into a national legislative oligarchy. It is fast becoming clear that it has been our legislative representatives in Congress who are the responsible persons for this unwarrantable intrusion upon the freedom of our people, their right to govern themselves through local self-government and the right of the several States to determine the degree and extent of the exercise of the police power of the State.

"The Eighteenth Amendment provided for co-equal and joint power of the several States in the enactment of enforcement laws. Congress has completely disregarded that concurrent right of the several States.

"Another impression of growing importance is that entertained by a large number of our citizens toward the attitude of a number of ecclesiastics on the subject of sumptuary legislation. It is difficult to understand these preachers of Christianity who advocate and undertake to promote private morals and personal conduct by the appeal of the power of the State rather than by the appeal of the mind and the heart. The appeal for a higher morality and improved human conduct must be directed to the conscience of the people and not to the fear of Government.

"In all history, wherever and whenever the Church and State have attempted by law to fix arbitrarily the moral conduct of its people, dissension and disorder have followed. Christianity's appeal was never intended to be advanced in the form of a policeman's club. Whenever it directs its appeal in that fashion it no longer holds out the reward of Almighty God for doing good, but places the reward in the hands of politicians, and makes of itself the tool of politicians or politicians the tools of the Church. Either consequences are bad.

Calls It Class Legislation.

"Summarized then my impressions gained from an extensive observation, are that when chaos and disrespect for all law are the result of the enactment of any law it should warn those responsible that they have made a previous mistake that should be rectified.

"Laws which develop law breakers in otherwise law abiding citizens have no place on the statute books of America. No law ever caused so much dissatisfaction or brought forth so many charges of malfeasance in office—nor has caused greater expenditure of the peoples' money for its attempted enforcement than the Volstead law.

"Workers entertain the firm conviction that the Volstead law is nothing less than a class legislation not intended for the rich but designed only to curb the personal liberties of those of lesser means.

"Improvements in the higher standards of life and work and greater reward for services rendered are not due to the Volstead law, but in spite of it, and that trade union organizations and activities in the main are responsible for prevailing improvements.

"Organized labor has ever been engaged in promoting temperate drinking and was making great progress until the enactment of the Volstead law. The continuation of such laudable activities now constitutes a national crime.

"Millions of homes in the majority of which liquor was never seen have been turned into breweries and distilleries. The youth of the land is being reared in the atmosphere of disregard for law and lack of confidence in government.

"Former law-abiding citizens see nothing wrong in drinking and even in distilling liquor or making home brew. Men and women who never drank before now seek it openly. The pocket flask may be found in almost every store and is never absent from any meeting, dinner or dancing party.

"Young and old alike do not regard the Volstead law as of sane legislative expression under the Eighteenth Amendment but as an impression of fanaticism clothed in the form of law, which has its counterpart in Mussolinism and Bolshevism. All represent a denial of self-government.

"Beer-drinking has been forced to give way to whisky and near-whisky and other poisonous concoctions. The observance of the Volstead law is in its breach and its virtue in disregard for law. Bribery of officials, in so far as the enforcement law is concerned, is no longer looked upon a detestable criminal offense.

"The Volstead law is looked upon with distrust and as a deliberate denial of State rights and as is provided for in the Eighteenth Amendment.

"The Volstead law is held to be an unwarranted, unjustified and consciously or unconsciously designed to create an oligarchic assumption of power and centralized government.

"Denial of the right of States to define intoxicating beverages and to exercise their police power is causing the people to lose respect, faith, trust and confidence in our national Government and in our State Governments as well.

"Private morals and personal conduct cannot be controlled, much less advanced by fiat of law. Appeal for a higher morality and improved conduct must be directed to the mind and conscience of the people, not to fear of Government.

Points to Wilson's Veto.

"President Wilson was fully aware of the dangers and evil consequences that would follow the enactment of the Volstead law. He therefore declined to associate his name with such an un-American form and character of legislation by vetoing the act.

"The evils that have grown out of the Volstead act are so destructive that William H. Taft, Chief Justice of the United States Supreme Court, found it necessary to warn our people of the dangers ahead. In the foreword of 'The Law of Klanmen,' by Lord Shaw of Dunfermline, the Chief Justice charges that prohibition is responsible for lawlessness in the United States. He said he had been strongly opposed to national prohibition, and one of the reasons was that he had grave doubts it could be enforced, and feared a resulting demoralization of all law.'

"Abraham Lincoln, the great emancipator, made a statement in the Illinois House of Representatives Dec. 18, 1840, which can be found on Page 36 of the Journal of the House of that date:

"'Prohibition,' he said, 'will work great injury to the cause of temperance. It is a species of intemperance within itself, for it goes beyond the bounds of reason, in that it attempts to control a man's appetite by legislation and makes a crime out of things that are not crimes. A prohibition law strikes a blow at the very principle upon which our Government was founded.'

"The denial of a beverage of wholesome quality and of alcoholic content that does not result in drunkenness has resulted in the ever growing demand and supply of a beverage of strong alcoholic content and more often of a poisonous substitute. Morality, sobriety, temperance, respect for and observance of law are best advanced by substitution of sane, temperate legislation, not by ruthless prohibition.

PROPOSES A REMEDY.

"The remedy for evils arising out of intemperate drinking or the drinking of intoxicating beverages is not by prohibition, such as is embraced in the Volstead law. The failure of the existing enforcement laws is not more enforcement laws.

"The true remedy is to re-establish the confidence of the people in law and government by so amending the Volstead law as will more nearly conform to the desires, wishes and attitudes of the people and that will enable them to exercise some discretion of judgment. Regulation, not prohibition, is the proper method of approach.

"Excessive drinking is gradually and steadily dying out under regulation in all countries. It was dying out in America before the Volstead law. State instead of national enforcement legislation is the method to be used. Amend the Volstead law so that a beverage containing not more than 2.75 per cent. alcohol per volume shall not be held to be an intoxicant and truly restore the right to the several States to determine such further restrictions and regulations as may best suit the needs, requirements and attitudes of the citizens of their respective States.

"I have two sons, one who is today at the Massachusetts Institute of Technology in his last year, studying to be an electrical engineer. It was but three weeks ago that I was in Boston and saw the boy. Asking him about the liquor question, I was informed that every fraternity at the Massachusetts Institute of Technology, and I presume that holds good at Yale University, is being solicited by liquor sellers once each week, if not more often. I learned that there is never a party arranged at which liquor is not present.

"Furthermore, my other son is attending the University of Illinois, in his second year, taking a course in law. When I saw the boy I asked him about conditions there and learned that practically the same situation obtains.

Finds Conditions Worse.

"I say to you, gentlemen, frankly that I am very much disturbed about conditions of that nature. When at institutions of this kind boys in the different fraternities, believing that they have been protected against hard liquor, are confronted with this dreadful situation, is a condition that very much disturbs me.

"Furthermore, whenever we have any meeting of any size at all in our organization we see the liquor agent around the halls trying to sell liquor to the workers, and invariably sales do take place.

"So it is that we say there has been no improvement through national prohibition, so far as the liquor situation is concerned. In fact, the conditions are worse than they were ever before.

"I feel that I can testify honestly, unbiasedly and unprejudicedly because I am not a drinking man and never have been and have no connection in any way with any liquor interest or organization of any kind."

When Mr. Woll concluded Senator Walsh announced an adjournment until 10 A. M. Monday, when the first of the dry witnesses will take the stand. Just who this witness will be has not been disclosed, although rumor is that it may be Wayne B. Wheeler of the Anti-Saloon League, Mrs. Boole, President of the Woman's Christian Temperance Union, or Bishop Cannon of the Methodist Episcopal Church.

CARAWAY BITTERLY ASSAILS COOLIDGE

Senator Declares the President Typifies Love of Money That Actuates His Party.

SEES IDEALS CAST ASIDE

Says He Lacks Sympathy for Principles of Republic and Utterly Disregards Rights of Individuals.

An attack on President Coolidge by comparison of him with Thomas Jefferson, was made last night by Senator Thaddeus H. Caraway of Arkansas, in a speech at the annual Jefferson Day dinner of the National Democratic Club at the Hotel Commodore. Senator Caraway also appealed to the Democratic Party to follow the example of its founder, to strip itself of selfish interests and to abandon sectionalism and choose a "composite" leadership which would unite Democrats of the North, South, East and West. Senator Caraway's attack on the President brought only mild applause.

Governor Alfred E. Smith, in what was taken as references to the prohibition amendment and the prohibition referendum to be held in this State this Fall, declared that there must be a new amendment to the Federal Constitution prohibiting the adoption of any further amendments without a vote of the people, and asserted that a party must take responsibility and declare itself on a question of moment to the people whether it was in power or not.

After comparing President Coolidge with Thomas Jefferson, much to the President's disadvantage, Senator Caraway said:

"Mr. Coolidge is unaware there is any world outside of America except a place where American dollars may be profitably put to work for American owners of the great banking houses of the East. He has neither sympathy nor hatred. He feels no longing that the world shall know liberty and equal opportunities. He feels no humiliation that America should go hat in hand to Europe and beg of it to adjust and observe its obligations to America, but in this to make only such settlements as may be made at whomsoever's cost, at whatever loss to national dignity and national honor as will cave the fairest field for private investment or private bankers of America.

Questions Interest in Miners.

"What cares this President that the American people suffered through the long Winter just passed, while the owners of the anthracite mines and the laborers therein fought out their feud? Who believes that he is moved that all the agricultural interests of America lie prostrate and 500,000 people left American farms last year, left them rather than starve on them? Who believes that Mr. Coolidge realizes that 45 per cent. of the 110,000,000 of America's people live on the farm? No utterance of his, no act of his can be cited in support of the assertion that he has at heart the welfare of American agriculture, but how quick the response, how attentive the listening ear, if industry as represented by large investments indicates that some unfavorable wind blows. What instrumentality of government, what bureau—and God knows there are too many bureaus in this country—but what is instantly set in motion to temper the wind not to the shorn lamb but to the bloated bondholder.

"He feels no sting of national humiliation that America should be cartooned and scoffed at as a Shylock, that American rights be ignored, providing that the rights of American capitalists be respected. What cares he that the French Republic reels and totters like a drunken man to its fall? What cares he that the dictator of Italy shall threaten the peace of the world? What cares he that the young Governments brought into existence in that great upheaval of the World War in Eastern Europe and Western Asia shall be trampled into dust by savage Turk or selfish Frank?

Says He Typified Love of Money.

"Mr. Coolidge typifies and exemplifies in all of its stark nakedness the inspiration, if you can call love of money an inspiration, that actuates and moves the Republican Party—the utter disregard for the welfare and rights of the individual, the entire lack of sympathy for the doctrines on which our republic is builded, the frank recognition that 'to him that hath shall be given, but to him that hath not it shall be taken even that which he hath.'"

Senator Caraway stressed the importance of a united Democracy if the party hoped to regain power. "Let me say that you lack national vision and national leadership in this great Northeast," he said. "You don't always put into public office—and by public office I mean national offices—men who see that part of the country furthermost removed from your shores.

"I want to say I mean national offices, because who will deny the Democratic Party has within the State the ablest leadership it ever knew? With come of his views I find myself wholly out of accord, but that he has courage, he has honesty, he has vision, he has that which is better than all, sympathy, no one questions.

"But read your papers. In them I find no line that indicates that they realize that there is a country beyond the Eastern Seaboard. This lack of harmony, this lack of leadership, this lack of sympathy between East and West, North and South, politically must cease. We need a leadership that is a composite leadership. We need to adopt aims that represent the average public opinion from all sections and all walks of life."

Smith Views Party's Work.

Governor Smith, who arrived late after a speech at another dinner, received the customary enthusiastic reception of a New York City Democratic gathering. The Governor reviewed what the Democratic Party in the State had done to redeem his promises made when first elected Governor and which he said he renewed when he spoke at the club dinner in 1919.

"Every amendment to the Constitution of New York State has been ratified by the vote of the people and not by the vote of Legislatures, guided by political expediency and not by the facts of the case," the Governor said. "It is part of our duty now to make another amendment to the Federal Constitution, that hereafter it shall be amended only after the people themselves have voted on it.

"I spoke before coming here at the dinner of the Columbia University Alumni and the president of that university in referring to the fact that statues of Jefferson and Hamilton stand side by side on the Columbia campus, had said that Hamilton's work had been finished, but that Jefferson's work was unfinished.

"Jefferson believed in the rights of the State and the rights of communities. He thought that the people of a sovereignty had the right to say that they should not be governed by people out of sympathy with their ideas. The issue of State rights is in the ascendency. We are not on the defensive. We have nothing to defend. Let the other fellows do that. They've got some job.

"The people of this country are getting tired of too much politics. They are going to hold the political parties to responsibility and look on what each party has done, whether it is in or out of power. It won't do any longer to blame everything on the party in power. The Democratic Party is in the ascendancy and can keep it if it realizes that."

Francis X. Busch, Corporation Counsel of Chicago, attacked the Volstead act and declared that the Democratic Party of Illinois intended to go to the polls this Fall on the issue of the failure of nation-wide prohibition. He added that George E. Brennan, as Democratic nominee for United States Senator, would lead the fight and that he believed Mr. Brennan would be elected.

Thomas E. Rush, President of the club, who presided, read a letter from Mayor James J. Walker, regretting inability to be present. Nearly eight hundred men and women attended the dinner.

RALLIES THE DRYS FOR SENATE FIGHT

The Rev. Clarence True Wilson Says Wets Are Making Their Dying Effort.

"When next week is over we will have broken down completely the wet propaganda that you have read in the newspapers this week," said the Rev. Dr. Clarence True Wilson, Secretary of the Board of Temperance, Prohibition and Public Morals of the Methodist Episcopal Church, in an address yesterday before the New York Conference of the Methodist Episcopal Church in the Washington Square Church.

"You know that the fight is on in Washington," went on Dr. Wilson. "We have seen the wet propaganda come to its climax this week.

"We will convince the American people that prohibition at its worst is better than the license system at its best. Prohibition has smashed the license system of this country. You no longer see the old signs and smell the old smells of the corner saloon as you used to. Legalized and organized temptation has been removed from the streets and pathways of men. A man can get liquor if he wants it, but liquor no longer haunts him if he wants to quit."

The Rev. Olaf R. Miller, State Superintendent of the New York Civic League, made a plea for the cooperation of the conference. "Don't throw our letters in the wastebasket," said Mr. Miller. "We are doing a great moral work and we ask your assistance. In the last year we have specialized in the enforcement of the Eighteenth Amendment."

Mr. Miller introduced the Rev. Harry B. Fisher, Secretary of the metropolitan district of the league, a brother of Bishop Frederick B. Fisher, resident American Methodist Bishop in India. Harry Fisher has had charge for the league of getting evidence on padlock cases.

"We have been called into many cases in which the Government has been unable to obtain adequate evidence," he said. "And when the Padlock Court convenes next Monday the total of padlocks applied in these two districts since Sept. 1 last, through the evidence gathered by the New York Civic League will be more than 200.

"There was one night club here in New York on which the prohibition agents had been trying very hard for padlocks to get the evidence, and they failed. The Government called on our league. In short order the league got the evidence—and then the place was padlocked. The man who operated the night club paid $20,000 a year rent. He had just spent $57,000 on interior decorations. And there was $67,000 worth of liquor there when it was seized.

DRY LAW DENOUNCED BY DR. PARKHURST

Best Citizens Antagonistic to It, Says Pastor-Emeritus, Noted for Vice Crusades.

HE DEFENDS TEMPERANCE

Holds That Present Excesses in Drinking Have Much to Do With Prevalence of Crime.

The Rev. Dr. Charles H. Parkhurst, pastor emeritus of the First Presbyterian Church and famous throughout the country for his crusade against commercialized vice in the early '90s, issued a public statement yesterday opposing prohibition which, he said, had aroused the "antagonism of a very large part of our best citizens."

"My objection to the present prohibition law," said Dr. Parkhurst, "extends to the point that the law interferes with rights which are personal to the individual. The law seems to be trying to make criminal that which is not criminal. I think the objection which men of earnest mind and clean conscience make to the law is based on its interference with what are the legitimate rights of the individual.

"The intemperate excesses which we have now we have had as long as I have known anything about the world. At the same time, there are individual rights which are not made criminal by enacting a prohibitory law. The temperate use of spirits or liquor of any kind is an individual right justified by individual conscience, by old-time usage by the Bible. Four times the use of liquor finds its justification in the Old Testament and once in the New Testament it is made obligatory.

"The mistake made by those responsible for the prohibition law has been in undertaking to do too much at the start. There are prohibitions which are justified and which ought to have been made into law long before the Eighteenth Amendment was enacted, or if laws covering those prohibitions existed in certain communities they should have been enforced.

Says Public Was Against Saloon.

"There are excesses to which liquor drinkers go which are essentially criminal. The old saloon was the centre of vicious infractions of public and private decency, and these infractions were recognized as such by reputable people. If the law had dealt with and wiped out those excesses—so extreme, so utterly beyond all decency, so animal—the law would have had the support of all.

"It would have been fought only by the criminal classes, the beastly, lawbreaking criminals. Their opposition would have amounted to little against the strength of the better classes. Public sentiment throughout the country would have supported the law and its enforcement would have cost nothing.

"In improving conditions, no matter what they are, the law has to move along the line of the better class of people. That has not been done in the case of our present prohibition law. Indeed, the better classes are against it and that is the weakness of the situation. If proper enforcement of the present law is brought about there will be constant exasperation and the people will be left in a crumpled, unsatisfactory state of mind, chafed more and more by the operation of the law.

"There may be a majority favoring the law as it is; at least there is a tremendous minority antagonistic to the law. National and local governments may be able to enforce the law, but if they succeed a large class will continue to feel that it has been denied its legitimate and God-given rights.

Links Liquor and Crime.

"I feel that liquor has much to do with the prevalence of crime today. Of course, we are liable to have crime waves at any time, but I think that conditions following on the enactment of prohibition have accentuated an antagonism to the law that would not have existed without the pressure prohibition has put on the national community.

"Today's crime situation is entirely different from that which existed when I was active. The antagonism I experienced was not on the part of the respectable citizenship. The reputable people of New York believed in the principle for which I was working and I had their support.

"But today the prohibition law and those working for it have to contend with powerful opposition coming from respectable citizens. This antagonism of a very large part of our best citizens has caused the state of affairs existing today.

"A wrong thing cannot be made right by law, nor can legislation make a right thing wrong. The weakness of the prohibition situation lies in the fact that the side opposing prohibition is maintained principally by those who are anxious for what is right and best."

BUTLER BACKS VETERANS.

Endorses Ex-Soldiers' Move to Modify the Volstead Act.

The World War Veterans' Light Wines and Beer League announced yesterday from its headquarters at 342 Madison Avenue that it had received endorsements of its movement to modify the Volstead act from Nicholas Murray Butler, President of Columbia University, and a large number of legislators, including United States Senators James W. Wadsworth Jr., Chairman of the Committee on Military Affairs, and Walter E. Edge of New Jersey.

Lieut. Col. Alexander E. Anderson, Chairman of the League, made public the following letter from Mr. Butler:

"I think it is the duty of every good citizen who loves his country to labor unceasingly to remove the Eighteenth Amendment and to support a constructive and effective plan for the solution of the problems that attach to the liquor traffic in order that the private liquor traffic may be done away with, the saloon abolished and the personal and civil rights of citizens preserved and protected."

WILL GREET THOMAS BULL.

100 to Attend Dinner to Metropolitan Opera Veteran Tonight.

One hundred guests will greet Thomas Bull, associated with the Metropolitan Opera House since 1891, and Mrs. Bull, at a dinner in their honor at the Casa Lopez, 247 West Fifty-fourth Street, assembling at 5:30 o'clock this afternoon and continuing until the hour for the evening's concert at the theatre.

Mr. Bull's staff of twenty-three ushers will attend, by invitation of Otto H. Kahn, Chairman of the Opera Board. Those of the company who have accepted include Messrs. Gatti-Casazza, Kahn, Ziegler, Scotti, Didur, W. J. Guard, Mr. and Mrs. Whitehill, Mr. and Mrs. Tokatyan, the Misses Arden, Gulliford, Morgana and Wakefield.

Also attending are Earl Lewis, Aime Gerber, Hugh Brown, Messrs. Hasselmans, Pelletier, Edwards, Agnini, Mishkin, Kramer, Jules Judels, Fred Hosli, Jack Buchter, John Bellucci, Dr. C. E. Nammack, Emil Katz, William Thorner, Berthold Neuer and many more of the house staff and the friends and frequenters of the Metropolitan.

HARVARD MUSIC CLUBS DELIGHT ALUMNI HERE

Piano Specialty by Comedian Henderson, a Charleston and Jazz Among Features.

The Harvard University Instrumental clubs and the Vocal Club gave last night at Aeolian Hall a concert in which they were greeted with loud applause by alumni and other admirers. The program contained something for all tastes.

The Banjo Club, reinforced by saxophones, drums and double-bass, under the direction of Frank O'Donnell, opened with two exhilarating ensemble numbers. The Vocal Club, led by William Rowell Chase, then gave with vim the popular classics, "Up the Street" and "Johnny Harvard." A piano specialty introduced a comedian in the person of Charles E. Henderson, who illustrated how university men improve their leisure hours, and, when recalled, gave an amusing imitation of the music played during a movie news reel.

G. A. Norton, L. V. Phelan and W. P. Pratt were heard in an attractive banjo trio, while the College Mandolin Club, "the only one remaining in captivity," as it was plaintively remarked, was heard in a transformed Strauss waltz, a "Venetian Love Song," by Nevin, and "Delibes' "Pizzicoti." The Gold Coast Orchestra and its leader, Mr. Henderson, covered themselves with glory in jazz pieces arranged by John W. Green, who also wielded an effective and eccentric baton. To complete the effect, J. H. Monaghan interpolated a Charleston and its derivatives that brought down the house and won a double encore.

Albert Lind, violinist, played an "Adoration" by Borouski and had to give two encores. Kingsley A. Perry introduced two dummy dolls in an almost forgotten ventriloquist's act. H. Senfield exhibited his skill on a resounding marimba. All the Harvard clubs combined to finish the concert with an impressive flourish.

CONGREGATIONAL BODY TO TESTIFY ON DRY LAW

National Council Delegation to Say That 900,000 Members of Church Oppose Change.

The Executive Committee of the National Council of Congregational Churches in the United States announced yesterday that it would send a delegation to Washington next week to testify before the Senate Prohibition Committee that an overwhelming majority of the 900,000 members of those churches oppose any modification of the Volstead act.

Frank J. Harwood, woolen manufacturer of Appleton, Wis., and Moderator of the National Council, will head the deputation. The Rev. Dr. Jason Noble Pierce, pastor of the President's church in Washington, will be a member, as will George D. Chamberlain, State Senator, Springfield, Mass.

Wayne B. Wheeler will be in the deputation as a member of the Commission on Law Enforcement of the Congregational National Council. Among other members of the commission are Hugh Tarift, Chairman, Washington, D. C.; Judge Florence E. Allen of the Supreme Court of Ohio, Columbus, Ohio; Charles H. Kirschner, Kansas City, and William Allen White, Emporia, Kan.

MUSIC

By OLIN DOWNES.

Boston Symphony Orchestra.

The last New York concert of the present season by the Boston Symphony Orchestra, Serge Koussevitsky conductor, took place yesterday afternoon in Carnegie Hall. The performances, tonally of a finer quality than those of the Thursday evening preceding, disclosed again the exceptional and increasing excellence of the band. Mr. Koussevitsky is not only drilling but sensetizing it, making of it a single instrument remarkably responsive to his will. When he chooses to undertake the more subtle phases of musical interpretation, he makes the listener realize the present high estate of the famous organization; when he over-drives the players, as he did at his earlier concert of the week, he covers its better qualities and misrepresents its character. Yesterday the program in the first part demanded musical interpretation that emphasized tonal beauty, texture, nuance. The last part was given to Tchaikovsky's Fourth Symphony, a work of great moments, sweeping passion and irritating vulgarities, in which Mr. Koussevitsky legitimately unchained the energies of his men and gave a performance wholly justified by the nature of the score.

The concert began with the Bach Brandenburg concerto in F—the second, with the solo parts performed by Richard Burgin, concertmaster; Mr. Laurent, flutist; Mr. Gillet, oboist; Mr. Mager, trumpeter. The music was sent spinning from the baton of the conductor with much of the exuberant energy and rhythm that characterizes Bach when he is two-fisted and jovial. In the first movement and in the last the interpretation was ample justice to the work. The middle movement was dragged and sentimentalized. Beautiful as it is, it was long and sluggish under Mr. Koussevitsky's baton, and not even the skill of the admirable solo players could give it the movement and eloquence that it should command. The concerto is weak in the similarity of the first and last movements. The last part, in fact, could almost be a study for the first. Sprightly it is, but with the effect of redundancy, because of what are almost identic rhythms and even, in certain instances, phrases.

Then Mr. Koussevitsky turned from Bach to two modern Frenchmen—Debussy and Ravel. With them he worked wonders of line and color. Debussy was represented by the "Images, No. 1," which is a sterile piece, reminiscent in places of "Pelleas," feeble throughout in its invention, and Ravel by his "Mere l'Oye," originally composed as a piano duet for children. It is curious to reflect upon this fact, since the feeling seems so purely orchestral. Ravel not only makes a few instruments sound like many; he can utilize many instruments for the sake of color and make them sound like a few!

There is no limit to his instrumental ingenuity. Granted that the music is a little precious, a little elegant—pieces for well-brought-up children whose faces and clothes are clean and whose manners are already sublimely polite—there are, nevertheless, fancy and humor. Witness the conversations of the Beauty and the Beast, the parody of a "Gymnopedie" of Eric Satie and the motif of Debussy's "Fawn." This music was beautifully played, although again Mr. Koussevitsky sentimentalized in the final pages, and could have given the "Laideronnette" more impulse and humor.

Tchaikovsky's symphony of course brought down the house. It was performed very effectively, but not all the conductor's temperament and respect for the composer could make up for the inherent weakness and cheapness of it. This is the poorest of the Tchaikovsky symphonies. The Fifth is better; the Sixth, of "Pathetique," is the greatest. It has been overplayed so much that conductors and public have turned to the earlier symphonies; but the fact remains that the work heard yesterday, for all its passion and its pages of arresting instrumentation, is a caricature of the noble symphonic form.

HARVARD DEBATERS DEFEAT PRINCETON

Uphold Affirmative of the Topic: Education Is Curse of the Present Age.

Special to The New York Times.

PRINCETON, N. J., April 10.—By defeating Princeton here this evening the Harvard debating team won the annual triangular debate contested between the two universities and Yale. The subject for the debate, in which Harvard defended the affirmative, was "Resolved, That education is the curse of the present age." The annual forensic tilts goes to Harvard. Inasmuch as the negative team from Cambridge had already defeated Yale on March 27.

The winning Harvard team was composed of Barrett Williams and Frederick W. Lorensen, sophomores, and Dwight W. Chapman, a junior. All three men are prominent in forensic activities at Cambridge, Chapman being President of the Harvard Debating League.

It was announced before the debate that the argument would be in the informal English manner, and that wit would count considerably in the award of the verdict.

Williams, opening the argument for the winning Harvard team, criticized the modern educational tendency as driving "all original thought from the brain." He described the modern college as "cramming the mind with facts, reducing the brain to a mere card index in which there is not the least room for thought."

Burton M. Strauss, a Princeton sophomore, opened the discussion for the negative, declaring that his opponents, representing one of America's greatest educational institutions, but, nevertheless, flaying education, were on "an intellectual

PASSAIC POLICE ROUT CHILDREN'S PARADE

5,000 Youngsters Scatter in Disorder in Spite of Strikers' Attempts to Rally Them.

WEISBORD LODGED IN CELL

Strike Organizer Charged With Inciting to Riot—24 Others Jailed After Fighting.

Special to The New York Times.

PASSAIC, N. J., April 10.—An attempt by 5,000 children of striking textile workers to parade here this morning in defiance of police orders and after necessary permit had been refused to them was balked by the Passaic police.

The main detachment, which formed in President Street near Hope Avenue here, was dispersed before its ranks had fairly formed. A second detachment from Garfield was blocked at the Passaic side of the Monroe Street Bridge and scattered in disorder, while the third detachment, from Lodi, profiting by the example of the Garfield marchers, halted half way over the bridge.

Here they paused long enough to jeer the police. Then, in perfect formation, the columns swung about and marched to the strikers' meeting place in Garfield, Belmont Park.

The breaking up of the parade was attended by numerous minor disorders. By noon twenty-four strikers had been arrested in Passaic and Garfield. The bitterest blow to the workers came just before 2 o'clock, when a squad of plain clothes men raided the headquarters of the United Front Committee in Main Avenue and arrested Albert T. Weisbord, the strike leader.

Weisbord was taken to Police Headquarters and locked up charged with violating Chapter 133 of the New Jersey State Laws of 1902 by inciting riots and encouraging hostility to government.

Leader Held in Cell.

The offense charged constitutes a high misdemeanor and carries a maximum penalty of $2,000 fine or fifteen years' imprisonment, or both. Magistrate William B. Davidson, who was summoned to headquarters soon after Weisbord's arrest, said that bail would have to be fixed by a County Judge. Weisbord's attorneys had not succeeded in getting bail fixed at a late hour tonight, and the strike leader was still in a cell.

But the real crisis in the strike situation here is expected on Monday, when Forstmann & Huffmann, whose workers are not on strike, but are being urged to remain away by the other strikers, resume operations. Strike leaders are openly boasting that the opening of the Forstmann & Huffmann mills will be a grand closing. In the face of this, company officials are determined to reopen their mills. Yesterday their counsel served notice on city authorities in both Garfield and Passaic that they might be held responsible for any property or business losses that might be suffered from now on, due to failure to maintain law and order.

The time fixed for the parade yesterday was 10 A. M. Fully an hour before that children began to gather in large numbers in front of the Ukrainian National Home in President Street. Nearly all were supplied with small American flags given them by strike leaders, and many carried huge placards or signs denouncing the mill owners and pleading for aid for the strikers.

At 10 o'clock the column began moving across President Street. There were about fourteen uniformed policemen there at the time. Two of these were mounted and two others on motorcycles. Under orders from Sergeant Andrew Nicoll, the patrolmen drew up in crescent formation in front of the children and slowly closed in around them. Leading the parade were a dozen boys and girls bearing a large American flag. The police opened ranks long enough to let these through. Then they ordered the other children to disperse.

Children Scatter Quickly.

Encouraged by shouts from men and women strikers along the sidewalks the children did not disperse immediately. But as the officers scattered among them with cries of "There now, be off with you," they began to give way and finally scattered in all directions.

A group of five men and women attempted to rally their panicky offspring and showed resistance when police ordered them to move on. They were immediately arrested.

Considerable disorder followed. As the rout became general, excited mothers rushed hither and thither among the scattering mass of children in search of their own boys and girls. Strike leaders corraled a goodly number of children, re-formed them in line and started them marching south in Hope Avenue. Then police reserves arrived and headed off this body of children, hopelessly scattering them. A final attempt to start another line marching in President Street, which also proved fruitless, marked the last stand of the strikers here.

Meanwhile the Garfield detachment was crossing the Monroe Street Bridge. They carried signs reading: "Your Bosses; Your Murderers," and "Fifty Per Cent. More Children Die in Passaic Than in Any Other Part of New Jersey. Why?" "Night Work for Mothers Kills Children," "Lack of Food Kills Them," "Low Wages Kills Them," and "You Kill Them."

Near the Passaic side of the bridge a small detachment of police stationed there moved forward in a body and ordered the marchers back.

A Fight Develops.

As the children gave way a half dozen strikers sought to rally them. A fight developed between the strikers and the police and the former were arrested. The children retreated slowly across the bridge jeering the police. Many of the men and women strikers encouraged them from a safe distance.

The bridge had barely been cleared when the Lodi detachment was seen approaching from the opposite direction. The leaders realizing that something had gone amiss halted this contingent and went into conference with the Garfield leaders. The Passaic police formed ranks again, this time half way across the bridge.

At a given signal the Lodi contingent started forward again. Waving their flags and singing the strikers' songs, they approached to within a few yards of the police lines. Then the columns swung about and with loud jeers and much laughter for the police, the children marched back through Garfield to Belmont Park.

Here a mass meeting was arranged. One of Weisbord's lieutenants, Rubinstein, was in charge. Toward the close of a denunciation of the police he exclaimed: "Weisbord is not out of town. He is here." Then to the surprise of all, Weisbord himself entered. He carried in his hand two local newspapers which announced in glaring headlines that warrants had been issued for his arrest.

The whereabouts of the strike leader had been kept secret after his return from Philadelphia late Friday night. To reach Belmont Park he left Passaic in a taxicab and went by a circuitous route by Paterson, a distance of eight miles or more, whereas from his headquarters to the park is less than a mile.

Receives an Ovation.

His appearance on the platform was the signal for prolonged cheering, after which he delivered a brief address.

He told the children that the strike was their strike, and urged them to do picket duty and visit the homes of "scabs" to speak to them. Then he called the attention of his audience to the newspaper headlines, and said: "I understand the police are waiting for me at the other side of the bridge. I may be in jail for two hours, I may be there for the rest of the day, or I may be there for several days. When I am in jail I want you to carry on as you would if I were here."

But Weisbord took care to return to Passaic by a circuitous route also. He was discussing picketing plans with a score or more fellow-workers when the police finally learned that he was at strike headquarters and collared him. Sigmund Unger, Weisbord's attorney, followed him to Police Headquarters and became indignant when the police refused to let him see his client at once. Later, however, he was permitted to talk to him. When he learned that bail for the offense with which Weisbord was charged could be fixed only by a County Judge, Unger set out at once to find a Judge.

Just before 6 o'clock a taxicab stopped at Police Headquarters and a young man jumped out carrying with him a huge basket of roses. They were for Weisbord, sent him by the strikers, and they bore a card which read: "Hold the fort. Victory must come."

Ordered to Get Out.

"Take them out of here," ordered the desk sergeant. "The likes of such a thing I never did see, and I'm on the cops these twenty years. To be sending flowers to a man in a cell! It'll have to be some one higher than me that'll give you permission." And so the florist departed with his burden.

Weisbord is reported to have said prior to the parade that if the police interfered with it, or any of the children were injured, it would be interpreted by the strikers as meaning that their children would not be safe on the streets, and that no strikers' children would be permitted to attend school next Monday.

Superintendent of Schools William H. Steger of Garfield said that if this threat were carried out it would be up to the State Board of Education to take whatever action it might deem fit to enforce compulsory school attendance.

At the meeting in Belmont Park yesterday, Weisbord is said to have exclaimed: "You children of this city will never forget how you were treated this morning. You know what you can do, though, to help your parents win this strike."

Whereupon it is said the children responded in chorus: "We won't go to school," while Weisbord nodded assent. As the meeting disbanded children were heard to cry out: "No school Monday." But at strike headquarters this afternoon it was said that there would be no school strike, and that no such thing had ever been contemplated by the strikers.

It was rumored at strike headquarters that one child had been killed by a blow from a policeman's club during the protest at dispersing the parade. No one could tell who the child was, and the police branded the story as "ridiculous."

From the time of Weisbord's arrest until late tonight crowds lined the sidewalks opposite police headquarters. Once the strikers partly blocked the streets and the police were sent out to drive them back. Louis Iacolick, one of the strikers, made objections, and called Patrolman Hogan "Cossack."

The police locked Iacolick up. The prisoner declares he was punched in the nose.

Strike Headquarters Searched.

Following the arrest of Weisbord, police searched strike headquarters for Communist literature, of which there was said to be a considerable supply, but they found only a few books, which they took back with them to headquarters. They also brought back a young boy who had two sledgehammers. The bold told the police he was going to take the hammers to Belmont Park, where the strikers planned to hold a series of tableaux representing labor, in which the hammers were to be used.

After a conference today with the Garfield City Council, Mayor William A. Burke and Chief of Police John A. Forss of that city went to Hackensack and appealed to the county authorities for assistance. Recalling the disorders at the mills in February, when homes and buses were stoned and many persons on their way to work were waylaid and beaten, the Garfield authorities declared they felt their force inadequate to cope with the situation.

Particular reference was made by them to Weisbord's speech in Belmont Park last Thursday when he declared: "The time has come for serious business. We cannot let any more workers enter the plants. You must put a stop to it. If they refuse to listen to them you can deal with them in the way you know how."

Chief Sicciardi of the Bergen County Police announced that his men would take charge of the situation in Garfield on Monday, when the Forstmann & Huffman Company's plant opens. A large number of county police will patrol all streets near the plant.

FAILS TO END STRIKE OF STEAM FITTERS

Conference Halts When Union Delegates Object to Sliding Wage Scale for Helpers.

WOULD CUT PAY, THEY SAY

Possibility Now Is That Walk-Out May Embroil Other Trades in the Construction Industry.

Peace negotiations looking toward terminating the strike of steam fitters and helpers, which began on March 29, broke up yesterday without result. The steam fitters left the conference with the Heating and Piping Contractors' Association at 50 Union Square apparently in the mood for "a fight to a finish."

John Coefield, International President of the Plumbers and Steam Fitters Union, who came here from Chicago last week, was spokesman for the union committee which met the employers. Following the meeting yesterday, Mr. Coefield said:

"We made every concession we thought fair, but the employers asked for a virtual reduction of wages for the helpers. Helpers in all trades have been given a wage increase. Common labor has had a wage increase and there is no reason on earth why the steam fitters' helpers should be discriminated against."

The strike was the result of a difference over the helpers' wages. The employers were willing to pay the journeymen $12 a day, an increase of $1.50 over the present scale. The union asked for a wage increase of $1 a day for helpers, bringing their wage up to $9 a day.

The sliding scale of wages suggested by the employers, according to Mr. Coefield, would have reduced the average of the helpers' wages to $7.50 a day. The proposed arrangement was that helpers employed two and one-half years or more were to receive $7.50 a day; those employed less than that were to receive the present scale of $5 a day, and the new helpers taken on hereafter were to get $6 a day.

Helpers attain the rank and pay of journeymen after passing an examination. Then each new mechanic there would have to be a substitute helper who would be paid $6 a day and another helper to assist the newly made mechanic, said Mr. Coefield, also to be paid $6 a day.

In this city completion of the new wing of Bellevue Hospital is being held up by the strike. Other buildings are affected, and if the strike continues for some time plasterers, painters and other mechanics will be unable to proceed with their work.

The helpers' union, known as the Advance Association of Steam Fitters Helpers No. 629, and the Steam Fitters Union include 3,600 members, of whom 50 per cent. are employed by the members of the Heating and Piping Contractors' Association. The others work for independent contractors.

SETTLE ST. JOHN'S STRIKE.

Stone Masons on Cathedral Work Get Increase in Pay.

The strike of stone masons employed on the Cathedral of St. John the Divine, which began on March 1, was settled yesterday, it was announced at the offices of the State Labor Department, 126 East Twenty-eighth Street.

The settlement was effected when the contractors, Jacob A. Youngs, granted the mechanics a wage increase of $2 a day, bringing their wage up to $14, and the helpers an increase of $1 a day, or $9 a day.

The agreement was signed at a meeting between contractors and employers, at which was present Peter A. Doyle and Michael J. Regan, mediators of the State Labor Department. The strike affected six stone masons.

DR. HARRIS SPEAKS FOR FRENCH HOSPITAL

Asks Support of Its Campaign to Aid Persons of Moderate Means During Sickness.

Dr. Louis I. Harris, Commissioner of Health, issued an appeal to the public yesterday to support the movement started by the French Hospital in behalf of the man and woman of modest means.

"This institution," Dr. Harris said, "purposes to provide in its new building in West Thirtieth Street, private rooms, with food, laboratory service and nursing attendance, for $30 a week. This leaves only the fees of physicians and surgeons by way of additional expense for the patient.

"The French Hospital proposes to remedy the situation of persons of moderate salary who are faced by illness. Such persons can afford better accommodations than the wards provide, but cannot afford the quiet and cheerful surrounding of a private room at prevailing prices. It is safe to say that not a hospital in New York would not have made this attempt long ago had it believed that outside support—the only possible solution of the problem—would be forthcoming.

"Due to the fact that for forty-five years the French Hospital has been caring chiefly for the 'average citizen,' it sees the gravity of the need for better accommodations and believes that the public, which has been the sufferer, will welcome this opportunity to help itself."

STATE MUST DEFER FURTHER SCHOOL AID

Action on Proposed $18,500,000 Increase Would Upset Fiscal Arrangements Already Made.

NEW TAXES ARE REQUIRED

Senator Nicoll Declares Governor's Budgetary Principles Conflict With Advocacy of Measure.

Special to The New York Times.

ALBANY, April 10.—It has been agreed among the fiscal leaders of the Legislature that legislation to carry into effect the recommendations made by Governor Smith's Commission on School Finance and Administration in a report transmitted to the law-making body this week must be deferred until another year, despite the Governor's plea for them in a special message.

For one thing, the general appropriation bill has long been passed and the measure carrying supplementary appropriations has already been introduced and will be ready for final action during the week to come. This, with the fixing of a rate for the direct tax on real estate, adequate to balance the budget, is the final step in providing for the financing of the State Government for the fiscal year beginning July 1. That the leaders regard what has been done in this direction as final was demonstrated by the announcement this week that the direct tax would be levied at the rate of one mill, which represents a cut of 33 1-3 per cent. in this impost.

Senator Nicoll's Views.

All these arrangements would be upset if the Legislature were to act on the commission's proposal for an $18,500,000 increase in the State's contribution to the common schools for the 1926-27 fiscal year. Governor Smith took full cognizance of the situation in his special message, in which he made due reservation for the money recommendations, stating that with the budget for the present year virtually completed, the system of increase would of necessity have to stand over for another year. A bill, introduced by Senator Ernest E. Cole of Steuben, Chairman of the Senate Committee on Public Education, provides for the increases urged by the commission which would run progressively through the years intervening before 1930. It is certain that this measure will die in the Senate Finance Committee.

Some criticism of the report, which in the main has won approval here, is heard on the ground that the commission has failed in making specific its findings relating to methods of raising the necessary funds to finance the increased contributions by the State.

Senator Courtlandt Nicoll of New York expressed this view and incidentally took a dig at Governor Smith for transmitting to the Legislature, with his approval added, a report the Senator called strikingly in conflict with the Governor's principles relating to the budget which he so frequently has voiced in public speeches and messages to the Legislature.

Renewed Agitation by Teachers.

The week just passed has seen renewed agitation by teachers from New York City in favor of the bill introduced by Assemblyman Ricca of Brooklyn, providing for further increases in teachers' salaries. A delegation of teachers from New York City has spent the Easter vacation week at the Capitol lobbying for the Ricca bill, while another delegation has appeared in favor of a bill introduced by Senator Farrell of Brooklyn which provides for increases in the higher paid positions of the educational system of New York City and which would add, it is admitted by the promoters, some $400,000 annually to the city's budget.

The latter measure provides that the salary of the City Superintendent of Schools shall be not less than $25,000 annually; the salaries of Associate Superintendents not less than $15,000; that of District Superintendents not less than $12,000, with a similar minimum for principals of high schools and training schools. These amounts are far in excess of the salaries for these positions provided for in the Ricca bill.

As a result there is a great deal of conflict between the two groups and this, undoubtedly, judging from what is said in legislative circles, is partly responsible for the fact that neither lobby has succeeded in making much headway. Both measures are still in committee. Many lawmakers feel that while an exemption was made in the Home Rule bill, which virtually leaves the New York City Administration at the mercy of the Legislature in the fixation of teachers' salaries, legislation of that character should not be passed, except with the consent of the New York City authorities, and there is no indication so far that the two bills have the approval of the Board of Estimate.

MAYOR GETS FINE HORSE.

Riding Club Secretary Presents Noted Saddle Mount to Walker.

Mayor James J. Walker is now the owner of one of the finest saddle horses in America—Cedar King, an eight-year-old chestnut gelding, which presented to him yesterday afternoon noon by I. Altman, 140 William Street, Secretary of the Central Park Riding Club. The presentation was made by Mr. Altman at Durland's Riding Academy, 5 West Sixty-sixth Street, before members of the club and patrons of the academy.

As the Mayor and his horse were introduced to each other he remarked smilingly, that he thought he would appeal on Monday to the Board of Estimate and Apportionment for an appropriation for more turf along the bridle paths in Central Park, "to soften things up a bit." The Mayor had forgotten to bring along sugar with which to establish himself properly in the affections of his horse, but this lack was made good quickly by Mr. Altman. "I see he's a politician," the Mayor laughed. "He likes sugar, too."

BROWNING, 51, WEDS HEENAN GIRL OF 16

real estate man and the schoolgirl first became known a few weeks ago Browning described Frances as "a lovely girl, 5 feet 7½ inches in height, weighing 145 pounds, with light-brown hair—curly but cut short."

On April 1, when asked directly if he intended marrying the girl, he said: "I cannot say definitely whether or not we will marry. It would not be right to talk about marriage when that little girl is suffering," referring to her burns from the alleged acid attack.

The meeting of Browning and his bride was similar to his meeting with Mary Louise Spea, except that in the second case he did not advertise in the newspapers for a girl for adoption.

Instead he formed connections with the Phi Lambda Tau sorority of the Textile High School where Frances was a student. He bought sorority pins and attended the children's dances. At one dance at the Hotel McAlpin his eyes rested for the first time on the girl who is now his wife.

Took Her Out in Rolls-Royce.

"I liked her from the first time I saw her," he said, "so I asked one of my friends to introduce us." From then on Frances was a frequent occupant of the blue Rolls-Royce automobile of Browning. He visited her and her mother at their home at Iris Gardens.

Then came the alleged acid throwing and the revelation of the romance between the real estate dealer and the schoolgirl.

The story of the acid throwing, as told by the girl and her mother, was that Mrs. Heenan returned to the apartment about 2 o'clock one morning and heard Frances moaning. Frances said some one had thrown acid in her eyes, on her face and over her arms.

Browning hurried to the house with bicarbonate of soda and other remedies and a physician was summoned. Detectives investigated but were uncommunicative.

Then the attentions of Browning and the girl came to the notice of the Society for the Prevention of Cruelty to Children and an investigation was ordered. The investigation revealed that one of Frances's girl friends, Stella Lubin, died suddenly from a heart attack after a party and automobile ride at which Frances and Browning were present.

Following the investigation Mr. Pisarra brought action before Justice Franklin Chase Hoyt in the Children's Court to remove Frances from the guardianship of her mother.

Won't Drop Court Action.

When he was informed last night of the wedding, Mr. Pisarra said that he preferred not to discuss the matter. He said, however, that the Children's Society would not drop the matter. Hearing has been postponed until Thursday and Mr. Pisarra said that Frances would be obliged to be in court at that time.

One of the incidents that formed the basis of the society's charges was that Frances had been allowed to go on the stage in Earl Carroll's "Vanities" at the Earl Carroll Theatre. Frances made only one appearance with the "Vanities," for, according to James Cody, the stage manager, she did not measure up to the standard of a "Vanities" chorus girl or dancer. On that one occasion Browning's automobile was awaiting her at the stage door after the performance and Browning occupied a seat in the front row while the show was on.

Browning has figured in one adoption, another that met with mishap at the last moment, and a divorce action. He adopted Dorothy Geraldine Browning, 11 years old, whom he kept in a camp in New England. Then he was about to adopt Mary Louise Spea, whom he believed to be 15 years old, but an investigation by the authorities disclosed that she was really 21 years of age. The adoption proceedings were broken off and Browning announced that Mary Louise was out of his life forever. The girl afterward threatened to bring suit against him, but the matter has never reached the courts.

HEENAN TRUSTS BROWNING.

Bride's Father Says He Thinks Realty Man Is Sincere.

NEW HYDE PARK, L. I., April 10.—"I think that Browning is going to show the world that he means what he says. I believe in his sincerity and that his intentions are 100 per cent. pure."

This was one of several observations made tonight by William E. Heenan, father of Frances Heenan, upon his return to his home here from the marriage of his daughter, 16 years old, to the realty man. He also said that he was asked over the telephone this morning by Browning's secretary to visit him in Manhattan. He said he visited the secretary, was informed of the weddings plans, and drove in his automobile to Cold Spring, where he attended the ceremony.

Both Heenan and the girl's mother signed written consents to the marriage. In describing his meeting with Browning, Heenan said Chief Browning spoke first, and referred to Frances as "the best girl I've ever seen."

"Well, you take good care of her," Heenan said he replied. "for she's a mighty good kid."

GOBELIN TAPESTRIES TO BE SOLD FRIDAY

Rare Specimens to Be Offered From the Albright Collection at Anderson Galleries.

An unusual collection of rare Gobelin and Flemish tapestries, rugs, furniture, needlework and Barye bronzes from the collections of Count Schenk-von-Stauffenberg, Baron Hoppy, J. J. Albright, S. W. Weis and others, now exhibited at the Anderson Galleries, are to be auctioned there next Friday and Saturday afternoons. Demaison's "Tissot General des Tapisseries de la Manufacture des Gobelins," is also exhibited and contains important data regarding the Gobelins.

Two Gobelins, "Les Nouvelles Indes," from a set of four executed by Jansen Neilson, a Scotsman, after Desportes cartoons, were given as gifts by the Grand Duke and Grand Duchess of Russia, who traveled in France as Count and Countess du Nord and who were afterward the Emperor Paul I and the Empress of Russia. Neilson won his fame in England and was then persuaded by the Gobelins to become one of their master weavers.

A rare small Gobelin tapestry, "Jardin des Plantes," after a Bailly cartoon, is done in miniature with delicacy of design and color. Another early Gobelin, "Diana Rejecting Otus," is from the Albright collection, as is "Abraham and Isaac Welcoming Rebecca," an early Brussels tapestry, woven about 1520.

A gold and silver embroidered rose satin damascene is late seventeenth century Mattese. Other novel numbers include a seventeenth century Syrian ironwood chest. It is from the George Blake Dexter collection (Boston). There is also in the needlework paintings one of Adam and Eve hastily departing from the Garden of Eden clad in Louis Quatorze costumes and with large apples clutched in their hands.

A rare piece of point d'Alençon lace of finest workmanship, made for the Empress Marie Thérèse and given by her daughter, Marie Antoinette, to the Marquise de Chabert in 1780, has the figure of the Empress in its centre.

It is seldom so many Barye bronzes are exhibited at one time and they are a feature to be noted. The furniture is diverse in period and origin. Nine Florentine leather-covered chairs bear the Crest of the Medici, and were collected by Mr. Dexter. There are a number of tapestry-covered chairs and stools, and rugs, including a large Chinese wooden rug with deep blue field, Kirman, Khorassan and other specimens.

SEEKS OUR POLICY ON CONFISCATION

Ways and Means Committee Asks State Department's View of Seized Alien Property.

OLDS DECLINES TO GIVE IT

Neagle Objects to Provision—Pending Bill for Payment for German Ships.

Special to The New York Times.

WASHINGTON, April 10.—Whether the United States has authority to confiscate alien property seized during the World War came up for further discussion today in the House Committee on Ways and Means, which has under consideration the bill introduced by Representative Mills of New York providing for the return of property or its equivalent to German nationals and the liquidation of claims held against Germany by Americans by Treasury borrowings.

Robert E. Olds, Assistant Secretary of State, was examined at length as to whether he believed the United States had a right, if it desired, to confiscate property of foreign nationals now held by the Alien Property Custodian. He refused to commit himself on this point, contending that he was present to give facts and not to commit the State Department on questions of policy.

"This is a matter of serious policy affecting our foreign relations for all time to come," said Representative Mapes of Michigan. "I would like to know exactly what is the State Department's attitude. We are considering a bill which has not been adopted as a policy by any other country in the world in any set of circumstances, except the instance in Cuba. Is the committee to understand that the State Department is going to continue in its attitude of neither approving nor disapproving confiscation? I realize that it is a matter in the end for Congress to determine, but this committee should have the opinion and advice of the diplomatic branch of the Government."

"I am here to give the facts," replied Mr. Olds. "I want to keep as far as possible from touching any of the questions involving policy. I have no authority to say where the State Department stands on the policy, one way or the other."

Picken Neagle, solicitor for the office of the Judge Advocate General of the Navy, appeared to give information regarding the German ships seized, their value as fixed by the navy and as fixed by present day shipping conditions, and the cost of placing the seized ships in operation after they had been scuttled by German crews.

Mr. Neagle objected to the provision of the bill calling for reimbursement for the seized ships, because, he said, according to his interpretation, it provided that the Government would have to pay for war vessels seized. He explained that the bill provided for reimbursement for ships seized from German nationals, and in one definition of the bill the German Government was held to be a national.

DESKS AND HIGHBOYS ARE FAVORED AT SALE

Old American Chairs Also Bring High Prices at Auction of Margolis Collection.

The second session of the sale at the Anderson Galleries of early American furniture collected by Jacob Margolis brought $23,677.50 yesterday. The grand total for both sales was $40,182.40.

An extremely fine eighteenth century Rhode Island carved mahogany block-front desk with cabinet top was acquired by Mrs. Netty Rubin for $2,100. The top has a three-panel folding door, two folds to the right, one to the left, each with concave and convex sunbursts at the top. Two bold scrolls ending in carved rosaces and flanked by three urn and flame finials form the pediment. The slant writing flap has three sunbursts and the blocking of the drawers extends into ogee bracket-supports, and the original brass handles and keyplates remain.

Miss Coulihan, agent, secured for $385 six American Hepplewhite mahogany chairs, two arm and four side chairs, circa 1785. Their shield backs are pierced and carved in Gothic triple-arch fashion. Charles Clasen paid $550 for a Duncan Phyfe lyre-end mahogany sofa table, with leaf carved and reeded splayed legs and stretcher to match, for $550, and also paid $350 for a Duncan Phyfe dining table, a set of three tip-tables with solid blond mahogany top in original finish. Mr. Clasen also paid $525 for three Hepplewhite mahogany side chairs and $750 for a rare Vermont inlaid rippled curly maple secretary cabinet, circa 1790, with a tambour front, banded in tulipwood and mahogany and having a shell medallion of tinted holly in each door, and a sunburst in its shaped skirting.

Mrs. A. Kingsbury paid $725 for a hooded cherry highboy, circa 1750. The upper chest is topped by a double-scrolled pediment with three carved urn and flame finials. It has the old brasses and its centre top drawer is carved in a sunburst of rare pattern, and in the lower part another sunburst is carved on a drawer. The triple-arch skirt has pendant finials.

A Queen Anne maple highboy with original brasses went to Mrs. R. R. Atterbury for $390. Fred Peters paid $400 for an eighteenth century New England hooded cherry highboy with fine circular sunbursts, and $625 for a Hepplewhite mahogany sideboard, circa 1790, with shaped front and inlay. E. F. Bonaventure bid in for $375 a New England small scrolled pine dresser with cyma curves and scrolls on the stiles, circa 1740, and also paid $475 for a Queen Anne inlaid walnut lowboy, the drawers having herringbone borders, and Samuel Serota paid $400 for five Chippendale style mahogany Philadelphia chairs, the backs with interlaced beaker-shape splats and cupid-bow crests with waterleaf motifs.

To Lengthen Subway Stations.

The Board of Transportation, having approved the form of contract and specifications, yesterday fixed April 30 as the date for opening bids for the work of extending the station platforms of the Essex Street, Bowery and Chambers Street stations of the B. M. T. subway system. This is the third group of station platforms on the B. M. T. system to be ordered lengthened to accommodate eight-car trains instead of six-car trains. The other two groups of stations are in Brooklyn and the work of lengthening the station platforms is under way.

EXPEDITION WILL FILM RIVER OF DOUBT REGION

Explorer to Retrace Route Followed by Late Col. Roosevelt to Complete Memorial Records.

An expedition to follow the route of the late President Theodore Roosevelt through the River of Doubt territory of Brazil is being formed by George M. Dyott, South American explorer, it was learned yesterday. The expedition will have the sanction of the Roosevelt Memorial Association.

A complete pictorial history of Colonel Roosevelt's trip through the wilds of Brazil will be made and a reel of film placed in the records of the association. At present movies of the River of Doubt trip are the only things absent in the memorial association's pictorial life of Roosevelt, according to R. W. G. Vail, librarian and assistant director of the association.

The date of departure of the Dyott expedition has not yet been determined. Neither Colonel Roosevelt nor Kermit Roosevelt will make the trip.

"Dyott," said Mr. Vail, "plans to go over the same ground as the late President Roosevelt. It is a very dangerous trip, and he plans to branch out into areas where no white man ever has penetrated. Mr. Dyott is a close firend of the Roosevelts, and they are enthusiastic about his trip.

"The memorial association will participate to the extent that we shall have our motion picture man in New York market the movies, and in return we are to get a complete pictorial record of the expedition. The only pictures we now have of the River of Doubt trip are a few taken at the start. The remainder of the pictures was lost when a boat upset on a river down there."

Mr. Dyott, who has been out of the city perfecting details of the expedition, is expected to return tomorrow.

In olden times "wealth" and "furniture" were words that seemed inseparable. It was thought needful to possess the first to have the second.

If this thought persists in anyone's mind today, it will be quickly dispelled by a visit to our establishment where it will be found that extreme moderation has been the governing influence in the pricing of our goods.

SMITH RUG SALE BRINGS $6,000,000

Company Says at the Close It Is One of the Most Successful Ever Held.

95,217 BALES ARE SOLD

Jobbers Active In Yesterday's Session, Spurring Up the Bidding.

The auction sale of rugs and carpets in the rooms of the Alexander Smith & Sons Carpet Company, 285 Fifth Avenue, ended late yesterday. It was said that the sale had been one of the most successful the company has held. Unchecked totals given out an hour after the close showed that in the auction 95,217 bales were disposed of and $3,900,000 taken in. The total receipts, it was said, would run near $6,000,000 when the final returns had been compiled.

There were probably 100 buyers present representing concerns, large and small, in all parts of the country, and the bidding was brisk all day. The briskness with which the sale moved was shown by the fact that in the first hour of the sale 100 lots had passed under the hammer.

A feature of the day was the appearance in force of representatives of jobbing houses. Jobbers had not been in evidence before and their entry into the competition spurred the bidding. In consequence there were many "balance" bids, which means that after the price had been fixed on individual carpets and the bidders for small lots satisfied, the jobbing houses would put in a single bid for the balance of the bale unsold.

Yesterday 20,100 bales were sold for $1,200,000. The lots sold brought the following prices:

BROOKLYN REALTY MEN ATTACK HOUSING BILL

Say There Is an Oversupply of Cheap Apartments and No Emergency Exists.

The Brooklyn Real Estate Board in a statement yesterday attacked the Nicoll-Hofstadter (Republican) housing bill. It said in part:

"The board is convinced, after a thorough study of existing conditions, that there are more than sufficient apartments renting for $10 to $12.50 per room being offered daily for occupancy; that there is a similar oversupply of unoccupied tenements renting for $3 to $8 per room in the lower east side of Manhattan; that these conditions refute any assertion of an emergency existing or of the need of such legislation providing for State or city aid in erecting new apartments.

"That any change in the present prosperous economic conditions will make the apartments 'a white elephant' on the market, and that it will be impossible to rent them at the $12.50 scale, which has been the entire basis of the arguments for State aid for housing."

The board recommended that the Board of Estimate authorize operation of buses in Greenpoint and Williamsburg. "Cross-town facilities to Greenpoint," it said, "are an immediate need."

THE WEATHER.

WASHINGTON, D. C., April 10.—The disturbance that was over the Canadian Northwest Friday night has moved rapidly southeastward to the St. Lawrence Valley. The disturbance from the Southwest has made little progress eastward. It has two centres, one over Northeastern Texas and the other off the mouth of the Rio Grande, Brownsville reporting a reading of 29.78 inches. Pressure is also low over the Canadian Maritime Provinces and from British Columbia southward to Arizona. The area of high pressure that was over the Middle West Friday night is now centred between Cape Hatteras and Bermuda, and another area of high pressure is advancing southeastward from Manitoba and the Lake Superior region.

The temperature is now above normal in the Canadian Northwest and in the greater part of the United States, except from Arizona and Colorado eastward to the lower Mississippi Valley. Readings are more than 20 degrees above normal in the Dakotas, Montana, Saskatchewan and Alberta.

The weather will be cloudy with showers over nearly all sections east of the Mississippi Sunday, while fair weather will prevail almost generally Monday.

Colder weather will overspread the lower lake region, Northern New England and Northern New York Sunday and Sunday night, the Ohio Valley, Tennessee and the East Gulf States Sunday, and Southern New England, Middle Atlantic States and the interior of the South Atlantic States Sunday night or Monday.

Country-Wide Weather Conditions.

In the following record of observations at United States Weather Bureau stations yesterday the temperatures given are the highest during the twelve hours from 8 A. M. to 8 P. M., and the lowest during the preceding twelve hours from 8 P. M. to 8 A. M.; the barometer reading and condition of weather are those recorded at 8 P. M., and the rainfall is for the twenty-four hours ended at 8 P. M.

BIG INCREASE IN 1925 IN TRAVEL TO CITY

338,329,767 Passengers Were Carried Into and Out of New York, Survey Shows.

497,543 THE DAILY TOTAL

Number of Commuters Put at 124,882,331 in Transit Commission's Report.

COUNT MADE AT TERMINALS

The Ferryboat Traffic Alone Gained by 1,334,000 Passengers, Total Passing 100,000,000 Mark.

Railroads and ferryboats carried into and out of New York City 338,329,767 passengers during 1925, according to figures made public yesterday by the Transit Commission. Of this number 249,765,663 were classified as commuters using the railroad or boat routes. As the figures given represent two-way traffic, the actual number of passengers was half the number given, or 169,164,883, while the number of commuters on a round-trip basis was 124,882,331.

Counting a year as consisting of 340 full traffic days, engineers of the commission estimated that an average of 497,543 passengers daily used the railroads and boats for round trips to and from New York, and that 367,302 of these were commuters and 130,241 occasional visitors to the city.

The figures were furnished by the railroad and ferry companies in connection with investigations and studies of the commuting traffic problem undertaken by the commission. For the most part, they are based on actual counts made by the railroads.

Growth of Commuting Problem.

The commuting problem has grown greatly during recent years. It has had the consideration not only of the Transit Commission but a special legislative commission in addition to local commissions in Westchester County and Northern New Jersey. The Board of Transportation also has done some work in relation to the subject, and suggestions have been made for new subways and special terminals to deal with the commuters' traffic.

The traffic figures for 1925 show that the trunk railroads entering New York City or approaching it on the New Jersey side carried a both-way traffic of 242,448,883 passengers, including commuters, as compared with 243,389,271 passengers in 1924. This apparent decrease is believed to be due entirely to the new method of obtaining the number of Long Island Railroad passengers by actual count at its Flatbush Avenue terminal in Brooklyn instead of by estimates. Without exception, all the other railroads reporting showed increases.

In addition to the above total of steam railroad passengers there were approximately 46,355,112 local or rapid transit passengers carried on the lines of the Hudson & Manhattan Railroad, which has tubes under the Hudson River, and 49,525,772 passengers entering and leaving the city on ferries during 1925, excluding the ferries between boroughs and the railroad passengers using railroad ferries.

The inclusion of the Hudson & Manhattan and local ferry figures gave the total traffic figure in and out of the city of 338,329,767. The steam railroad commuters during the year numbered 153,884,779. The Hudson & Manhattan and ferry traffic was considered almost wholly commuting traffic and was added to get the total number of commuters.

A Comparison With 1924.

The following tabulation represents a comparison of the trunk line railroad traffic to and from New York during 1924 and 1925:

	1924.	1925.
Baltimore & Ohio	550,000	575,000
Central of New Jersey	15,776,662	16,483,688
Delaware, Lack. & W.	22,359,818	22,465,970
Erie	32,043,150	32,283,140
Lehigh Valley	755,676	933,153
Long Island	75,000,887	*67,128,993
New Haven	18,339,242	18,717,537
New York Central	31,717,518	135,292,861
New York, Ont. & W.	544,365	549,804
N. Y., West. & Boston	6,045,424	6,628,298
Pennsylvania	40,456,529	41,280,389
Total	243,589,271	242,448,883

*The figure for the Long Island Railroad is less for 1925 than for 1924, due to the adoption of a new and more accurate method of accounting for the traffic at terminals, particularly at Atlantic Avenue, Brooklyn. The figure given for the New York Central Railroad for 1925 is materially increased over the 1924 figure, owing to the fact that there are included passengers using the 125th Street Station, 1,840,000 in number, for which no corresponding figures were given in 1924.

The report of Hudson & Manhattan, including passengers coming from railroads, was 105,210,715 for the year. Of these, 67,065,171 were to and from the Cortlandt Street terminal and 38,205,944 to and from the uptown stations of the system. This was exclusive of traffic which began and ended solely in New Jersey or New York.

The traffic to and from the St. George terminal of the steam railroad line on Staten Island was not included in the total because this was made up almost entirely of passengers originating and ending in the city, with only a few commuters from Perth Amboy and near-by New Jersey towns. The traffic figures for the St. George terminal showed 12,433,909 passengers, of whom 3,615,158 were classified as commuters.

Long Island Still Led.

Despite the apparent reduction, due to the change in the method of computation, the Long Island Railroad still led in the number of passengers, its total for the year being 67,128,993, 38,863,973 of whom used the Pennsylvania

Court House 100 Years Old; Warren County to Celebrate

Special to The New York Times.

BELVIDERE, N. J., April 10.—The hundredth anniversary of the building of the Warren County Court House here will be celebrated next week. The red brick building is still in good condition and a recent survey disclosed that though the original cost was only $9,942.34, it would cost at least $200,000 to erect a building of similar type now.

In the public square in front of the building many executions have taken place in the century that has gone. Carter and Parks were hung from a double gibbet a few feet from the front steps of the building for the murder of the Castner family in 1849.

One man who will play an important rôle in the centennal observances is George M. Appleman, who, at the age of 62 years, is rounding out his thirtieth year as janitor of the court house.

FINDS FADING VARIES AS SIGNALS SWING

Dr. Bidwell Thinks Phenomena Are Probably Due to Same Disturbance 100 Miles Up.

RADIO TESTS AT CORNELL

Show Intensity Increases as Seeming Direction of Sending Station Is Deflected to the North.

ITHACA, N. Y., April 10 (AP).—Existence of a definite relationship between "fading," one of the most troublesome of the pests that beset the radio fan, and fluctuations in the direction from which the signals seem to come, has been detected by Dr. C. C. Bidwell, Professor of Physics at Cornell University.

Radio engineers have noted that both phenomena are greater at night and that they undoubtedly are influenced by atmospheric conditions.

Professor Bidwell believes it probable that they are connected with disturbances in the upper atmosphere at a height of 100 miles or more above the earth, and he hopes that a continued systematic study of direction changes and fading will help to find out what that condition is.

In the absence of Dr. Bidwell, who is on leave, Professor Ernest Merritt, head of the Cornell Physics Department, described for radio listeners the results thus far obtained in tracing the relation between the two phenomena.

Apparent Direction Changes.

"Most radio fans," he said, "are familiar with fading, which often interferes very seriously with reception. If indicating devices more sensitive than the ear are used it is found that the intensity of radio signals often fluctuates back and forth through a wide range in just a few seconds and that these fluctuations are extremely erratic.

"Fading is worse at night and depends in some manner not well understood upon weather conditions, especially in the upper atmosphere.

"It probably is not generally known that there are fluctuations in the direction from which signals seem to come that are just as violent and erratic as the changes in intensity. If a direction finder or radio compass is used to determine the direction of signals from some broadcasting station, the direction may be found to be widely different from the exact geographic location, and the apparent direction changes back and forth in a most puzzling way.

"During the eclipse of the sun a year ago observers at Ithaca found that Station WEAF in New York City had apparently moved over into New Jersey so that for ten or fifteen minutes after totality it was located in the neighborhood of Trenton. Then it got over its nervousness and moved back again to Manhattan Island as the sun became unobscured.

"Fortunately, direction changes are much less marked on sea than on land; otherwise the radio compass would be of little value.

Gradual Drift in Intensity.

"Direction changes also are greater at night and undoubtedly depend upon atmospheric conditions. Recently, Professor Bidwell has detected a relation not previously known to exist between these apparent direction fluctuations and fading.

"Simultaneous observations made of changes and intensity over a number of hours would show, besides the sudden and erratic changes, a gradual drift up and down in intensity, and to one direction and another. Professor Bidwell finds that these go together.

"For example, great intensity comes at the same time that the direction is deflected to the north, small intensity when the direction is toward the south. This relation is found in so many instances that it seems hardly possible it can be accidental.

"Apparently, therefore, direction changes and fading are due to the same ultimate cause. There is every reason to believe that it is connected with conditions in the upper atmosphere at an altitude of 100 miles or more and it seems likely that the continued systematic study of the phenomena will help to find out what the condition is."

Jersey Elks to Meet in June.

ASBURY PARK, N. J., April 10.—The thirteenth annual convention of the New Jersey Elks' Association will be held here June 24 and 25, it was announced at a meeting of the Convention Committee here today. A parade on the second day will be participated in by 50,000 members representing virtually every lodge in the state.

BRITISH UNIONS FIND OUR LABOR SECRET

Delegates Sail After a 4-Week Study in Industrial Centres to Fix High Wage Cause.

IMPRESSED BY HARMONY

Think Standardization Explains Prosperity—Coolidge Tells Them Work Is the Reason.

President Coolidge gave the secret of high wages earned by American workers to members of the British Trades Union delegation who came here recently to study American methods of industrial production. The visiting delegation told of their interview with the President just before they sailed yesterday on the Cunard liner, Aseania, for Plymouth, Cherbourg and London.

The eight representative members of the British Trades Unions who arrived here just four weeks ago made a tour of the industrial centres of Eastern and Middle Western States. They came to find out, if possible, how American manufacturers could operate their plants at approximately 100 per cent. higher cost than British manufacturers and then undersell the latter on many products.

Itinerary of Delegation.

The Trades Union delegates visited plants in New York, including the Hell Gate plant of the United Electric Light and Power Company, said to be the largest generating plant under one roof in the United States; and the Hygeia Ice Manufacturing Company, 132d Street and Lincoln Avenue, where 1,000 tons of ice are made daily.

They then went to Schenectady to inspect the plant of the General Electric Company, to Detroit to see the enormous plants of the Ford Motor Company and other automobile manufacturers; to Pittsburgh and Gary, Ind., to make a tour of steel mills and foundries; to Niagara Falls, where they saw the big hydroelectric power plants; to Chicago, where they visited the stockyards, and to numerous other industrial centres, where they inspected scores of different kinds of manufacturing plants.

The union representatives met workers and employers and discussed production, wages and living conditions, welfare work, recreation, health, workmen's benefits, profit-sharing, copartnership and all the other phases of industrial activity from both the standpoint of the workers and employers. Everywhere they sought the secret of American high wages and living conditions.

The President's Formula.

After they had come into contact with American industrial life in all its phases they finished their tour of inspection by calling to see the President of the United States and propounding the question of high wages to him. President Coolidge answered the question put to him with his usual succinctness.

"The whole question of high wages in America was summed up by what the President of the United States said," declared Fenton McPherson, head of the visiting Trades Union representatives. "The President said: 'Well, American workers earn high wages because they work.'"

Mr. McPherson was asked if they would go back and preach the doctrine of work to the British workers, and he said:

"There is no necessity of preaching the doctrine of work to British workers. They know how to work."

Mr. McPherson said they believed high wages in America were due to high production and high consumption, and that the high standards of living among American workers were due to all those conditions.

"We have had a most enjoyable trip and a most informative trip," said Mr. McPherson. "My business was simply to bring these men to America. We have been going through all the big shops, meeting workers and meeting executives. The delegation have had all the freedom they liked.

"They have been greatly impressed by the harmony they saw everywhere existing between workingman and employer. They have been also much struck by the perfect organization they found in American workshops.

"There seems to be quite a movement to encourage working men to invest part of their savings in the industries that employ them and that movement of joint ownership seems to have splendid results in many cases."

Reticent on Prohibition.

Mr. McPherson was reluctant to give his personal views of prohibition. He explained that the delegation was not here to study that phase of American life.

"But every member of the delegation has faithfully obeyed the Eighteenth Amendment," said Mr. McPherson. "We haven't missed our beer, because your excellent coffee and fruit juices are quite as satisfing as beer. After all beer is only worth while as a drink when you have it with your meals."

T. Murray of the United Patternmakers' Association said:

"They don't work as hard over here as they do in Great Britain. Organization is probably responsible for high wages. We found Americans as well off as we expected to find them. The thing that surprised us most is the cordial relationship between workers and the employers."

A. Browning, of the Associated Blacksmiths' Society said: "Standardization probably is responsible for the American workingman's capacity to earn high wages. In England 50 per cent. of our manufactures are produced for export, and our products have to be produced largely in accordance with foreign requirements, so that it obviously is impossible to introduce the degree of standardization in British manufacturing plants that exists in American industries."

Of the prohibition situation, Mr. Browning said:

"Before we came we wasted a lot of sympathy on you people."

Mr. McPherson and Sir Percival Phillips came with the delegation as representatives of The London Daily Mail. The other members of the party were: E. H. Gill, of the United Society of Boilermakers and Iron and Steel Shipbuilders; S. Ratcliffe, J. P., of the Amalgamated Engineering Union; J. T. Kay, of the National Union of Foundry Workers; C. Wilkinson, W. Warsing and A. A. Wildman, of the Amalgamated Engineering Union.

Mme. Calve Protests Against Opera System Which Permitted Marion Talley's Debut

PARIS, April 10 (AP).—Mme. Emma Calvé, the great singer, has broken the silence of her retirement on the Riviera long enough to protest against the system which has permitted nineteen-year-old Marion Talley to appear in a leading rôle at the Metropolitan Opera House in New York.

"No singer should be subjected to such a test without at least ten years' preparatory work on other stages," Mme. Calvé declared. "Singers must be molded slowly and gently. Often such breaks into new atmospheres are ruinous. Those who criticised Miss Talley's performance forget what a strain she was under. I laugh now, but the night I first sang at the Metropolitan—after eleven years singing in the capitals of Europe—I was frightened almost to death."

Too much publicity at an early age and not enough hard work are the ailments affecting the present generation of vocal students, Mme. Calvé asserted.

"When I was a student, every waking hour was spent in study," she said. "Now there seem to be so many diverting influences that it is a wonder singers are produced at all. To become a great singer one must first have the voice, and then one must have the determination to learn every trick in using it. Great singers are produced ever so slowly. But to a great singer that slow, hard work is the essence of life."

William J. Guard of the Metropolitan, speaking as "an old opera-goer who knew Calve when she first came here," said yesterday:

"Mme. Calvé knows nothing about Miss Talley's musical antecedents, nor does she know how much work the young girl put in for her career. Calvé was a great artiste, but she might have been a greater had she been a better musician. She knew little about reading music, and had to have it fairly drummed into her.

"As for her remarks about diversions, I do not think Calvé devoted her every minute to study, although she worked hard. Mme. Calvé's remark about publicity—well, she did not scorn publicity herself, and she knew how to get it, too."

LAWYERS WILL ACT ON THE GIBBS BILL

Hold Final Discussion Tuesday on Measure Proposing to Organize the State Bar.

FAR-REACHING EFFECT SEEN

W. D. Guthrie Thinks Plan Would Tend to Destroy Present Bodies —Hughes Favors It.

Final action on the Gibbs bill, which proposes to organize the entire bar of the State, will be taken next Tuesday night at a meeting of the Bar Association at 42 West Forty-fourth Street. The members will vote on the bill, which has been made the special order of the meeting. The discussion will begin at 8:30.

Secretary Charles H. Strong, in calling the members together, said yesterday: "It is the most important meeting of the association that has been held in many years and the result will commit the association to a policy of very far-reaching effect upon the future and prestige of the profession in the State of New York."

At a meeting of the New York State Bar Association here last January the bill, which provides for compulsory membership in the proposed organization, was criticized by William D. Guthrie, President of the City Bar Association, and supported, with reservations, by Charles E. Hughes. The 4,200 members of the State Bar Association have received copies of the bill, and Tuesday night's discussion is expected to deal with many of its details.

Mr. Guthrie said he believed the measure would tend to destroy the influence of the State and local bar associations, submerge their beneficent activities and coerce into membership at least 12,000 lawyers, mostly in the First and Second Districts, "who have not shown sufficient public or professional spirit or inclination to join the State organization and the great majority of whom do not belong to any local bar association."

He feared, he said, that this "outside majority" would obtain control, to the detriment of the prestige and serviceableness of the profession.

Mr. Hughes said that, in his opinion, there was nothing in the plan which menaced the bar in any part of the State.

Other business to be transacted at the meeting Tuesday night will be the election of a Nominating Committee of nine, which is to prepare a list of candidates for the offices to be filled at the annual meeting of the association on May 11. Inspectors and canvassers of election to serve at the annual meeting, together with an Auditing Committee to report at the meeting, will be named.

MEMORIAL OAK FOR SCOUTS.

Tree to Be Planted in Riverside Park in Honor of Boys' Patrol.

As a memorial to Boy Scouts and leaders, an oak tree will be planted in the Grove of State Trees in Riverside Park on May 4, it was announced yesterday by the Women's League for the Protection of Riverside Park.

The planting will be part of the ceremonies in connection with the dedication of the completed grove on the 300th anniversary of the landing of Peter Minuit. Several other trees will be planted by organizations and individuals to perpetuate the deeds of members and friends.

Boy Scout Troop 599 will serve officially at the planting. This troop has the grove under its special care. A Scout patrol is present in the grove all day to protect the trees from damage.

The Grove of State Trees is now completed, with every State and Territory represented.

CONTEST IN ORATORY ENTERS BRISK WEEK

Final Events in the Five City Boroughs Are Scheduled for Friday.

LEADING MEN TO BE JUDGES

District Chairmen in Various Parts of Region Announce Programs for Elimination.

Easter vacation over, most high schools will reopen tomorrow, and the coming week will produce fully fifty borough, district and elimination contests in connection with the National Oratorical Contest on the Constitution being conducted by The New York Times.

Both the metropolitan area and New York State at large show a heavy calendar. Interest in New York City will probably centre this week upon the five borough final contests to be held in Manhattan, the Bronx, Brooklyn, Queens and Richmond on Friday. The prominence of the judges the larger events in the competition are attracting offers presumptive proof of the support the contest has received from the public in general and from men active in public and business life in particular.

The Manhattan Borough finals will be held at Julia Richman High School on Friday afternoon at 3:30. Dr. Michael H. Lucey, Principal, and Chairman of contest arrangements in Manhattan, will preside.

Leading Men as Judges.

Those who have agreed to act as judges are Supreme Court Justice Thomas T. C. Crain, John G. Agar, Max D. Steuer, Dean Frank H. Sommer, head of New York University Law School, and Dr. Frederick B. Robinson, head of civics and sociology at City College.

The contestants will be:

William Ludwig, Alexander Hamilton Junior H. S.
Bernard Goldberg, Stuyvesant H. S.
Elizabeth Jones, Washington Irving H. S.
Henry Kohn, De Witt Clinton H. S.
William Scheer, High School of Commerce.
Rose Kusselman, Julia Richman H. S.
Charles K. Banghart, Washington Heights Evening H. S.
Olga Cabral, George Washington H. S.
Helen Bylund, Wadleigh H. S.

Brooklyn Borough Finals.

In Brooklyn the borough finals will be held Friday evening at 7:45 at Girls' Commercial High School. Eugene A. Colligan, Principal of Boys' High School and Chairman of the borough committee will preside. The judges will be District Attorney Charles J. Dodd, Supreme Court Justice Harry M. Lewis, William C. Redfield, former Secretary of Commerce; Mrs. Isaac Franklin Russell and Alvah W. Burlingname, former State Senator.

The contestants will be:

Marian Millstein, Thomas Jefferson H. S.
Marian Draisin, James Madison H. S.
Dominick La Cicero, Manual Training H. S.
Harry Engel, Boys' H. S.
Harry Galland, Alexander Hamilton H. S.
David Green, New Utrecht H. S.
Catherine Alcott, Bushwick H. S.
Judith Wolfert, Bay Ridge H. S.
Haakon Gulbransen, Brooklyn Technical H. S.

Borough Contest in Queens.

In Queens candidates from Jamaica, Newtown, Bryant, Richmond Hill, Far Rockaway, Flushing and Long Island City Evening High Schools will compete for the borough championship at the Jamaica Training School for Teachers in Jamaica on Friday evening at 8 o'clock. Charles H. Vosburgh, Principal of Jamaica High

Baldwin Steadies England

How a humdrum business man, with a rich mind, mellowed by his attachment to the soil, has restored that equilibrium the world has learned to expect from England. The change in the country's attitude toward coal is only one of the matters in which the Premier has calmed the fears of his countrymen and brought back the nation's confidence.

LIGHT-ENERGY IDEAS TOLD BY MILLIKAN

EINSTEIN THEORY UPHELD

The Many Shifts of Views on This Science Are Discussed in Detail.

Special to The New York Times.

NEW HAVEN, Conn., April 10.—"Of the many jolts which the physicist has received in the rapid discoveries which have been made the past quarter century, the worst has come into the field of photo-electricity," said Professor Robert A. Millikan in his final address in the Lee De Forest Course at Yale today.

Dr. Millikan, who is a Nobel Prize winner in physics, is director of the Norman Bridge Laboratory at Pasadena, where he has performed revolutionary experiments in spectroscopy. The feature of his experiments, dwelt upon in his closing address, was that they form a complete check on the Einstein corpuscular theory.

For the first time since the course was established three years ago, Dr. De Forest attended. Professor Hubert M. Turner of the Dunham Electrical Laboratory at Yale said in introducing Professor Millikan:

"When Dr. De Forest developed the three-element electron tube twenty years ago no one had any idea of the many uses to which it would be put. Now the photo-electric cell is very much in the same position as was the audion at that time.

"We find that the photo-electric cell is now being used by Dr. De Forest in his phono-film or 'talking movie'; by C. Francis Jenkins in his transmission of pictures by radio, and by the General Electric, Westinghouse and other laboratories in their general research work. It appears likely that it will be in general use in the near future."

Professor Millikan said that in 1900 Leonard found that when light was allowed to fall on a metal energy was emitted and was independent of the intensity of the light. He assumed that the light falling on the atoms of the metal simply released a spring inside it and let off the energy. Dr. Millikan called this the trigger theory.

In 1905 Einstein, with the disregard for the past which is so characteristic of him, assumed that the radiant energy was something bullet-like. The next ten years were spent in experimental checks and Einstein received the Nobel Prize in 1920 because his work in this field had been verified.

Dr. Millikan's work at Chicago was the first quantitative proof of this theory, which is a corpuscular theory and cannot be reached on any other concept. Bohr threw away the corpuscular concept because no concept is necessary; the energy is equal to the Bohr constant times the incident frequency of the light, minus the ionizing potential of the metal. There was no work more important than the determination of the conditions under which this equation held.

In 1903 Dr. Millikan began his work on photo electricity and found that the effect was independent of temperature. The previous theory would require that the photo-electric effect be dependent upon temperature and it was a great surprise when he raised the temperature of a piece of aluminum from room temperature to 220 degrees and found no change in the number of electrons emitted. Since that time these results have been questioned, but there is no doubt that under most conditions there is no thermal effect.

The bullet-like theory of Bohr was very hard to reconcile with other phenomena, but experiments have given a complete check, and no experimental work of the last ten years has been more conclusive than this, which has set up the validity of this concept for all frequencies higher than the critical frequency.

Dr. Millikan then discussed the much-debated question of the direction of emission of the electrons with respect to the incident beam of light. He told of some experiments of Lockbridge, which have not yet been published, in which the direction of the electrons can be measured closer than five degrees.

Recently German scientists have said that five irregular tracks which are seen in apparatus such as Lockbridge's are optical illusions; but recent experiments show that these irregular paths are followed by the electrons.

Watson, using newly developed apparatus, allowing X-rays to fall on a fine tungsten wire, found that the electrons are emitted in all directions, but that the maximum number are emitted at an angle between 65 and 75 degrees with the incident beam. In order to get these results it is necessary to hold the current in the magnetic coil constant for a week at a time. This means adjusting it every two hours.

The results completely overthrow the work of Bubb, in that he predicted a band of 20 degrees width in a direction opposite to that of the incident beam in which there would be no electrons, and these experiments show that there is no difference in the amount of radiation either in the direction of the beam or opposite to it.

Leaving the field of photo-electricity, Dr. Millikan showed that he had discovered that the same effect on temperature exists when electrons are drawn out of tungsten wire by means of an electric field. He attributed the success of his recent experiments to the high potential gradients which he was able to get by using very fine wires and fairly low voltage differences. The total number of electrons which are obtained in this way is greater than the number contained in the tungsten wires, thus showing that they must be conduction electrons and the same as those obtained in the photo-electric effect. These are independent of temperature, in the case of tungsten, until 1,100 degrees absolute is reached.

All these considerations indicate the corpuscle theory. The experiments in interference and radio indicate that the wave theory should be applied. The results seems to be that it will be necessary for the physicist to use both theories in attempting to find one picture that will cover all cases. Each can now be applied in its own separate field, and until some one comes forward with a theory that will apply equally well to both it will be necessary to use the two.

Spring-Mooning Typists Boost Misdirected Mail

PHILADELPHIA, April 10 (AP).—Spring fever has taken possession of Philadelphia typists in earnest, according to clerks in the Misdirected Mail Department of the Central Postoffice. They have observed a marked increase in carelessly directed mail in the past few days, many of the mistakes being transposition of the numerals of addresses.

The men who correct these mistakes are known around the postoffice as "nixie" clerks. All day they pore over directories trying to untangle the errors of stenographers.

"We are the worst victims of Spring's vagaries," sighed one. "As soon as Spring weather sets in our troubles begin. The toll of mistakes this year is heavier than ever."

THIRD OF VACANCIES IN CAMPS ARE FILLED

Cavalry Course at Fort Ethan Allen This Summer Has All Students It Can Take.

Summerall Tells Parents Their Sons Can Have No Better Vacations Than at Camp.

The first "sold out" sign for this year's Citizens' Military Training Camps, was hung out at Governors Island yesterday when the cavalry course at Fort Ethan Allen, to open on Aug. 2, was declared closed, with an application list seventy-one in excess of the quota. These men will go on the waiting list, but will also receive an opportunity to transfer to the Field Artillery camp at Madison Barracks, where considerable mounted work is carried out. This camp is popular with young men who are interested in horses and field guns. It has only eighty-five vacancies left, and from the number of applications that have been received during the past week it is expected that the list will be closed by Saturday. The signal course at the big army radio centre, Fort Monmouth, N. J., is also filling fast and now has only 100 vacancies left.

Almost one-third of the total number of vacancies allotted to the Second Corps Area, comprising New York, New Jersey and Delaware, has been filled, Major Gen. Charles P. Summerall, the Commanding General, announced yesterday. The quota for this corps area is 6,500, and 1,706 applications have already been accepted.

Vacancies at Fort Hancock.

Fort Hancock where the First Regiment, United States Engineers is stationed, has 100 vacancies, and the post at Sandy Hook, N. J., headquarters of the heavy artillery of this area, has 150 places open. Fort Niagara, near the famous falls, a camp devoted exclusively to infantry training has approximately 250 openings.

Plattsburg Barracks, the mother of the C. M. T. C. ides, has a greater capacity than the other camps in the Second Corps Area combined. Two training periods will be given there this Summer, the first one opening on July 2, and the second August 6. About 1,100 applications have been received for the courses at Plattsburg, but 700 vacancies still remain for the first camp and 1,050 for the second.

Three months from now there will be nearly 2,000 youths in uniform, hard at work, drilling and playing at the first 1926 C. M. T. Camp at Plattsburg.

"These young men will thrill to the adventure of a month of life in the open, living in tents, having food, trim uniforms, drills and training under modified military regulations, in association with hundreds of clean thinking young fellows, coming from all sections of the country with different ideas and view points," says General Summerall.

To Teach Citizenship.

"In these civilian camps every effort will be made to keep the young men true to the best ideals of American citizenship. They will be imbued with the spirit of devotion to the country, a sense of civic responsibility, mental and moral excellence. Under military discipline and the instruction of competent and sympathetic officers they will learn the important lesson of self-control, self-direction and respect for the principles of well-ordered society. At these camps will be represented concretely the thought of patriotism and individual growth that makes for clean, healthy and vigorous American manhood.

"Parents and friends can be sure that no cleaner, healthier or more stimulating experience can be given their boys than this combination of work and play for a month of the Summer in the great outdoors."

'WET' CONTRIBUTORS.

Listed in Wayne Wheeler's Story Through Error as 'Monthly' Givers.

Through a typographical error in the eighth instalment of Wayne B. Wheeler's "Inside Story of Prohibition's Adoption" in last Sunday's New York Times, it was indicated that the persons listed as contributors to the Association Against the Prohibition Amendment were making monthly subscriptions to that organization. The list should have shown that all were outright contributions except that of E. H. Baker, who contributed $25 a month.

Mr. Baruch's Attitude to Conscription.

In today's issue of your paper, under heading of "Urge Wealth Draft At Outset of War," you state that I approved the conscription of capital as well as labor. This is incorrect. I approved the direction and control of capital and labor, as well as materials, as well as manufacturing resources. I specifically opposed the conscription of labor and capital. B. M. BARUCH.

BRITAIN THROWS OFF WAR NEURASTHENIA

Is Now Intent on Commercial Gain, Social Reconstruction and Better Living.

DIFFERS FROM CONTINENT

Favored by Her Insular Position, England Wants a Minimum of Armed Protection.

LABOR MORE CONSERVATIVE

Coal Problem May Yet Be Settled Finally Without an Industrial Struggle.

By ERNEST MARSHALL.

Copyright, 1926, by The New York Times Company.
Special Cable to The New York Times.

LONDON, April 10.—Great Britain is rapidly throwing off the effects of the after-the-war neurasthenia. By comparison with some, if not most, of the Continental countries which engaged in the great struggle, her recovery may be described as complete. She is thinking in terms of commercial improvement, social reconstruction and general betterment of conditions left by the war. There are even aspirations toward an advance beyond the standards of 1924.

The Continental powers still present a spectacle of war psychology, a kaleidoscope of international rivalries and a phantasmagoria of political suspicions. Your Britisher, however, has set to work upon his own business. He wants to make things better for himself.

At the same time, he recognizes that he cannot achieve complete success in that way until things are made better for others. He looks upon the others not so much as possible competitors as possible customers.

He, of course, occupies a specially favored position. He knows that, and is ready to leave it to his military and naval and aerial advisers to determine what is the minimum of protection he requires. But he insists it should be the minimum. He is, in fact, willing to take chances, because he has come to the conclusion that sensible people do not want another Armageddon.

In other words, he has had more than enough of the tortuous roads of war, and he wants to tread the paths of peace. He is ready to credit his Continental neighbors with similar desires. Your Continental European has not yet reached that stage.

Continentals Still See Red.

What the Englishman has forgotten the Continental still remembers acutely. His outlook is still bloodshot. His neighbors are potential enemies or only friends so far as his and their interests run together. He thinks in terms of international politics chiefly. Until he can see security on that plane he cannot give his mind fully even to the task of putting his own domestic affairs in order. He looks to others rather than to himself for a savior. He seeks a strong man who will guarantee him the peace and tranquillity his heart aches for.

He has little or no faith in his politicians. He sees Stanley Baldwin in power in one country and Mussolini at the head of another. Baldwin was put in power because he was essentially the negation of a politician pure and simple, and the personification of a plain man whose objects were not mainly partisan. Premier Mussolini's success is as much due to his rudeness toward politicians as to his suppression of Bolshevism in Italy. Until there is a radical change in the psychology of at least two great European nations there will remain the possibility of a new dictatorship on the Continent.

There has been much talk of the "tragedy" of the League of Nations meeting at Geneva in March. Sir Austen Chamberlain has eaten his unfortunate words and there is a better comprehension now in London of what was not done and what did actually happen in Geneva when Germany stood waiting on the threshold of the League, than there was when the British Foreign Secretary answered his critics in Parliament.

The only "tragedy" of Geneva was that by the delay in the admission of Germany to the League and the allocation to that power of a permanent seat on the Council, complete and final acceptance of the Locarno compacts was postponed.

London Optimistic Over League.

It is true enough that six months delay in rounding off the work of Locarno is a sad business. Both in France and Germany opposition to the compacts has been strengthened and between March and September much water will flow under the bridges of both the Seine and the Spree, with possibilities of cross currents upsetting all calculations.

Here in London, however, optimistic views are held. Raoul Dandurand, Canada's former President of the League Assembly, has drawn attention to the fact that in the main journalistic reports of the League meeting were the work of men in whom the war spirit was still strong, who went to Geneva with prejudice and who came away unable to see the woods for the trees.

The press campaigns which have followed upon the March meeting of the League are the aftermath of the war, but the best information available is that the general situation has not been seriously jeopardized and that September will see a revival of the spirit of Locarno with all its promise of a better Europe.

As regards the League itself, to apply the tragic adjective to the Geneva meeting is to exaggerate a temporary interruption in the working of the machinery into a complete breakdown.

To return to the point with which this dispatch began, Great Britain is setting an example to other European countries of the way in which progress can be made along ordered and constitutional lines. It is tackling its problems fairly and squarely. There is the will to find a solution and an equitable solution. The extremists, who are to be found in every camp, are losing, not gaining ground.

Better Feeling Over Coal Situation.

After even a short absence from England, one is impressed by the change that a few weeks has brought about. The Coal Commission's report has been accepted by the Government and by the owners and the attitude taken up by the miners' delegates is one of tactics rather than of intrinsic opposition to the recommendations of the commission as a whole. Three weeks remain for discussion and negotiation, and only the most pessimistically minded Jobs and Jeremiahs believe that next month will witness a great industrial struggle in this country.

It is a practical certainty that there will be no great reduction in the miners' standard of living. Figures issued by the Miners' Federation show that if certain proposals of the commission were enforced and the Government subsidy withdrawn, wages in certain districts would drop to only from 3 to 10 per cent. above the pre-war level, and in one coal field actually 3 per cent. below that level.

As the cost of living still remains 72 per cent. above the pre-war figures, such reductions in the miners' earnings would be repugnant to the general sense of the British people. The owners have yet to state their proposals, but none of them ventured to suggest that the miners should be penalized to such an extent.

Some form of governmental subsidy will most probably be found necessary until, at any rate, all the recommendations of the commission can be given effect, but it is strongly argued that in the present condition of the coal industry the subsidy should not be employed to pay profits on invested capital, but should be applied only to the maintainance of a living wage for the workers.

Labor Tends to Conservatism.

Another exemplification of the ordered methods by which Democratic progress is being achieved in Great Britain has been given this week by the annual conference of the Independent Labor Party. This gathering has shown one thing more clearly than any other, and that is that extremist influences upon the body of labor are dwindling.

Ramsay MacDonald and Philip Snowden are members of the Independent Labor Party, which began its political existence as a Socialist organization under their leadership. After some years the Independent Labor Party succeeded in getting the trade unions under its wing, and this was the inception of the Labor Party as it now exists. This year's Independent Labor Party conference proved that the Labor Party to which it gave birth has grown bigger than its parent and, in fact, repudiates any assumption of parental authority.

Most of the Independent conference's time was taken up with criticisms of the big Labor Party's leaders on the ground that they are moving too slowly. The Independent Labor Party came out with a program labeled "Socialism in our time," but even so, it is far from being "Red" in the bolshevist sense.

That trade unionism, headed by MacDonald and Snowden and the great majority of the Labor members of Parliament, is an indication that ordered methods of constitutional progress make a stronger appeal to the British working classes than the preachings of the extremists.

ATHENS EXCAVATION TO BEGIN THIS MONTH

Special Correspondence THE NEW YORK TIMES.

ATHENS, March 17.—Unless some unforseen obstacle arises excavation of the old city of Athens at the foot of the north side of the Acropolis will be started on April 24, which date will also witness the opening of the new library, the Genadium, by Professor Kapps, who is coming from Princeton University to perform the ceremony.

It is understood that he will also turn the first shovel of soil in the excavation work, which will be carried on for years.

Historians and archaeologists have been invited to the opening of the new library which is a handsome building of white marble situated at the foot of the Acropolis on the north side. The building cost about $250,000 which was donated by the Carnegie Foundation.

Genadius, the wealthy Greek who has given the library for the instruction of students of all nationalities, has been collecting Greek historical works all his life at the cost of many thousands of dollars. He has also presented a collection of books on the history of the Bysantine period which were purchased by his father at various times when he was fighting in the Greek war of independence in which Lord Byron took a part.

The library will be invaluable to students of Greek history and it is expected that they will come here from all parts of the world.

Mr. Genadius offered the collection to the Greek Government on the condition that Minister of Public Works carried out the work of building the library to contain the books, but there was no money in the exchequer and the Carnegie Foundation came to the rescue and provided the funds.

Americans who drive through the old section of Athens do not feel sad when they hear that it is to be excavated. The roads are narrow, hilly, and full of deep holes into which jaded cab horses fall and taxies catapault over while the startled occupants hit the roof violently.

Economic conditions in Greece are not at all good at the present time and the money has declined to seventy drachmas to the dollar. The currency has been cut in two for the second time, but is divided on a different scale to that in use at the time of the late King Constantine.

The 100 drachma half note was worth 50 drachmas. Now 75 drachmas and half of the 50-drachma bill are worth 37½ drachmas, being two-thirds of the face value of the original bill. This is a little confusing for foreigners who do not speak Greek, when they are trying to pay a taxicab fare or a hotel bill in a hurry, and any loss is never on the side of the native.

Politically there is a good deal of unrest. General Pangalos is not popular with the people. He tries, however, to do his best for everybody. When a delegation came to him about the competition of foreign flour in the market against the domestic product the General rang a bell and told his chief secretary to have a duty placed upon the importation of flour to help the native manufacturers. The only obstacle was that it constituted a violation of the treaties with several friendly nations, and the proposed tax on flour had to be abandoned.

The American contractors for the construction of the new water supply to the City of Athens, Uhlen & Co., have stareed work and a good portion of money has been paid to them by the Greek Government.

The new tax of $5 on all tourists for visiting the ancient monuments, including the Acropolis, has been rigidly enforced, and no one can enter the historical ruins or the museums in any part of Greece without producing the proper ticket or paying the fee at the door. A ticket is good for one year to all monuments.

A tax of 5 drachmas also is charged on all motor vehicles going or coming between Athens and the Piraeus and Phaleron Bay for the repair of roads, which badly need it.

Motor buses are making serious inroads on the earnings of the street cars in Athens and are gaining every day, as the Athenians much prefer them to the electric trolley cars.

The Greek and Armenian refugees who were driven out of Asia Minor by the urks have established their old industries of carpet weaving, silk weaving and rugmaking, all of which had been caried on for more than two centuries in Smyrna with great success, the goods being shipped from that port to all parts of the world.

$15,000,000 OIL FIRE LOSS.

One Reservoir Is Still Blazing at Plant in Brea, Cal.

LOS ANGELES, April 10 (AP).—Oil fires on two California tank farms of the Union Oil Company tonight had been brought well under control and great reservoirs that for several days had been raging furnaces were smoking vats. The loss is $15,000,000.

At San Luis Obispo, where the first fire was started by lightning, a cloud of light-colored smoke hung over the six great reservoirs, which had given 5,000,000 barrels of oil to the flames. Fire had spread in an adjoining field to two more of the 5,500-barrel surface tanks, leaving only five untouched.

The fire was expected to burn out within less than eighteen hours.

The fire at Brea is expected to burn out in fourteen hours. While one of the reservoirs was still ablaze tonight, oil experts said that there was little possibility of it spreading. Hundreds of the workmen engaged in fighting the fire were laid off by the company today.

Officials of the Union Oil Company today announced plans for immediate reconstruction of the San Luis Obispo plant. They doubted, however, whether the company would rebuild the ruined tanks and refinery at the Brea field.

Opportunity Shop Appeals for Donations This Week of Discarded Articles.

AID TUBERCULOSIS VICTIMS

Everything From Clothes to Furniture Welcomed—Dr. Harris Praises Relief Work.

For one week, beginning tomorrow, residents of New York City are asked by the Tuberculosis Relief Committee of the New York Association for Improving the Condition of the Poor to donate their discarded articles, including everything from wearing apparel to furniture, to the committee's Opportunity Shop, 46 West Forty-seventh Street, where they will be sold and the proceeds devoted to tuberculosis relief work. Eighty women are in charge of the shop, which will be conducted on a business basis and is expected to support charitable work hitherto financed by fund raising.

Endorsed by Dr. Harris.

In endorsing the Opportunity Week campaign Dr. Louis I. Harris, Health Commissioner, said:

"The proceeds from the sale of articles at the Opportunity Shop have been so widely and generously used to assist the patients at our tuberculosis clinics that I cannot too heartily endorse your fine and humanitarian enterprise. I trust you will receive strong support from all to whom benevolence makes powerful appeal."

Mrs. Ned Arden Flood, Chairman of the committee in charge of the shop, explained yesterday that the association cooperated with the Department of Health tuberculosis clinics by giving emergency relief and providing additional facilities to the city social service nurses. Each auxiliary likewise maintains a dental clinic for undernourished and tuberculosis contact children.

During the Summer the association leases a bungalow for malnourished clinic children. The Chelsea Day Nursery is also maintained for infants and young children who have some contact with tuberculosis or who are especially malnourished. Two workshops are operated where men and women, unable to work under ordinary conditions because of tuberculosis or heart affections, receive employment. Orders are solicited for such articles as aprons, children's clothing, cushions and scarfs and suitable contract work is accepted. Trained nurses in the Tuberculosis Family Division give educational and social relief to needy tuberculosis families in Manhattan and the Bronx.

The Committee in Charge.

The committee of eighty in charge of the Opportunity Shop is made up of:

HONOR STATION WEAF.

Veterans Give a Dinner in Appreciation of Its Aid to Disabled.

The Sojourners Club, a Masonic organization of war veterans, gave a dinner last night at the Biltmore in honor of radio station WEAF of the American Telephone and Telegraph Company for work done in behalf of inmates of veterans' hospitals. Through appeals broadcast by WEAF, it was said, 20,000 radio headsets had been distributed to these hospitals, representing contributions of $125,000.

A memorial plaque was presented by Captain Norman J. Blackwood, commanding officer of the United States Naval Hospital in Brooklyn, who acted as toastmaster, to Brig. Gen. John J. Carty, a Vice President of the company. Major Gen. Pershing sent a telegram commending WEAF and expressing regret at his inability to attend. Speakers included Worshipful Master Charles H. Johnson, Brig. Gen. March B. Stewart, Rear Admiral Robert E. Coontz, Brig. Gen. George Richards and Captain Arthur W. Dunbar, U. S. N.

ASPARAGUS COMING HERE BY CARLOADS

Spinach Also Plentiful, but Slow Demand Sends the Prices Down.

POTATOES NOW GOING UP

Supply of Strawberries Grows and the Quality Improves in Local Markets.

The largest supply of asparagus this season—twenty-one carloads, or approximately 150,000 bunches—was unloaded here on Friday, according to the weekly review of local food markets made public yesterday by Dr. Arthur E. Albrecht, New York director of the State Department of Farms and Markets. The loose stock sold generally at 18 to 25 cents per pound and bunches ranged from 43 to 55 cents.

"Spinach from Norfolk, Va., and vicinity was in abundant supply," the review says. "The demand was rather slow at the close of the week and in consequence, low prices featured the market. Retail prices were mostly three pounds for 23 cents. The market for cauliflower was slightly higher at the close of the week owing to lighter receipts. California crates of nine to fourteen heads sold at $2 to $3. Oregon shipments in similar containers ranged from $1.50 to $2.75.

"The quality of lettuce was generally poor. Crates of five dozen heads of Iceberg type from the West wholesaled at $1 to $3.50, but fancy stock brought as high as $5.

"Peas and beans were in moderate supply at the end of the week. Trading was brisk for fancy beans. At most retail stores peas and beans sold at 25 cents per pound.

"Florida cucumbers are commencing to arrive in small quantities. The quality has been fine.

"Potato prices trended toward higher levels at the end of the week. Up-State potatoes sold wholesale at $8.50 to $9 per 150-pound sack, and Maine potatoes at $9 to $9.50; Long Islands at $11.50 to $12 per 180-pounds in bulk. Present high prices are undoubtedly a reflection of this season's shorter potato crop.

"Receipts of butter were liberal and prices declined 1½ cents per pound. At retail the finest creamery butter sold mostly at 45 cents per pound.

"Near-by hennery white eggs declined 3 cents per dozen at wholesale. Present prices are slightly below those of a year ago.

"Strawberries from Louisiana are increasing in supply and also improving in quality. About four carloads were unloaded on Friday, when most sales were made at 25 to 30 cents per pint."

The following table shows wholesale prices on Friday and the corresponding date last year:

Apples, bbl., A, 2¼-inch—
R.I. greening	$2.50 @ 6.50	6.50
Baldwins	2.25 @ 4.50	5.00 @ 7.00
Onions, W. N. Y. Yel. 100-lb. bag	2.75 @ 4.00	2.75 @ 3.75

Fowls, dressed, lb.	.28½ @ .33	.31 @ .33
Honey, clover, white, extracted, lb.	.12 @ .12½	.12 @ .13

"At the West Washington wholesale market," the review says, "live poultry was in fairly liberal supply. Light weight fowls and heavy broilers were in demand. Prices on the latter were slightly higher than last week. Long Island ducks were 2 cents per pound lower than last week. Dressed poultry was in light supply, but prices were on a level with those of a week ago.

"Country dressed calves were in light supply all week. Buyers were looking for real top grades.

"Hothouse lambs were in fair demand and premiums were paid for extra fancy, but the average run sold at the same prices as last week."

Leipsic Trickster Had Chicken Soup Supplied by a Guard.

Copyright, 1926, by The New York Times Company. By Wireless to THE NEW YORK TIMES.

LEIPSIC, April 11.—Harry Nelson, professional faster, had an ingenious method to get enough to eat while in his glass cage. After his arrest Friday for fraud, the police learned of his trick.

For thirty-three days he had been sealed in the cage, but he had arranged with a guard to pass hot chicken soup through hollow pipes, forming the framework of the cage, during the morning hours while other watchmen dozed.

Nelson gained in weight instead of losing. This irregularity caused physicians to investigate, and they discovered how he got his sustenance.

The net receipts obtained from those who came to see Nelson, totaling $8,000, were seized by the police.

TIBETAN IS BROTHER OF AMERICAN INDIAN

Dr. Hrdlicka Studied Natives on Trip Around the World for Anthropological Research.

OUR RED MAN AN IMMIGRANT

That He Came From Asia by Way of Alaska Is Now Believed Proved—Other Views of Scientist.

Natives of Tibet who talk, walk, act and dress like American Indians and are their blood brothers, though separated by half the distance around the world, were described in a statement by the Smithsonian Institution yesterday of the findings by Dr. Ales Hrdlicka of Washington, who received last week the Huxley Memorial Medal of the Royal Anthropological Institute, the highest British honor for research in anthropology.

The Tibetan relatives of the North American Indians were examined by Dr. Hrdlicka several months ago in the course of a trip around the world in which he studied thousands of men in Asia, Africa, Java and elsewhere, to gain light on the origin of the human species, their development into white, black, red and yellow types and innumerable sub-types and the great prehistoric migration which had carried them to different parts of the globe.

The Tibetans described by the anthropologist did not talk American Indian dialect, but they intoned their language in American Indian fashion. On previous investigations in Asia, Dr. Hrdlicka found natives of the American Indian type in Mongolia, fairly clenching the proof that the American Indians are immigrants from Asia, passing over from Northeast Asia to Alaska.

Investigations in India.

Dr. Hrdlicka carried on extremely interesting investigations in India. He found the bulk of the present population consisting of three types—Semitic, Mediterranean and Hamitic or North African. Dr. Hrdlicka found nothing "Nordic" about the Aryan population of India, in spite of the fact that their language is a descendant of the common Indo-European mother tongue which was spoken by the forefathers of the Greeks, Romans, Celts, Teutons, Persians and the Sanscrit element of India. The place where this great mother language developed is in doubt. Some authorities put it in Central Europe, others in Russia, others in Asia. On this point the Smithsonian Institution statement says:

"The 'Aryans' show everywhere either the Semitic or Mediterranean type. Dr. Hrdlicka saw nothing that could be referred to the types of Central or Northern Europe. It would seem, therefore, that the Aryans came from Persia and Asia Minor rather than from or through what is now European Russia."

Tiny Blacks a Puzzle.

The puzzle of the enormous distance separating the tiny blacks of the Philippines and Andaman Islands from their closest relatives, the pigmies of Central Africa, was studied by the anthropologist, according to the statement of the institution, which continues:

"At present one of the most interesting problems in anthropology is to explain the presence of the Negrito in the Philippines and Andamans. How did he get to his present home? His nearest relatives are apparently the pigmies of Central Africa, but a great unbridged space has until now separated the two. If he extended from Africa he must have left traces of his passing in Arabia and India. Such traces, so far at least as the Indian coast lands are concerned, Dr. Hrdlicka became satisfied, do exist. They occur in Parganas, northwest of Calcutta, in at least one area along the eastern coast, here and there among the Dravidians, and in the Malabar Hills. These discoveries bring the Negrito a long way further to the westward and so much nearer Africa, making his derivation from the continent so much the more probable.

"Passing through Ceylon, where he reports no definite trace as yet of geologically ancient man, Dr. Hrdlicka proceeded to Java, touching at Sumatra and the Straits Settlements. Of Sumatra, a country not yet perfectly known, he says that 'there still prevail in the island among the whites as well as the natives, beliefs in the existence of wild men. There are said to be two varieties. The Orang Pandak (orang—man, pandak—short) is said to live in the almost impenetrable mountain forests of the central and southern parts of the island. The natives describe him as black, short, long-haired and wild, but not insurmountably shy. The second form is the Orang Sedapak. He is said to live in the unhealthy lowlands of the southeastern part of Sumatra. He is described as having the body of a child of 12, with long red hair on head and body. He is very shy and runs but does not climb.'

"In the mountainous regions of the upper parts of the Malay Peninsula, according to information given to Dr. Hrdlicka, there still live thousands of negritoid people, and there are many old caves waiting to be explored.

His Visit to Java.

"The visit to Java was made chiefly for the purpose of inspecting the site of the Pithecanthropus, but Dr. Hrdlicka also desired to satisfy himself as to any possible cultural traces of early man and as to the present population. When the actual site of the Pithecanthropus was reached by Dr. Hrdlicka, a whole gang of natives advised by the police were already waiting there, each bringing a little pile of fossils gathered from the muddy ledges of the river as they were exposed by the receding water. These fossils were eagerly examined and a good selection was made for the National Museum, but they included no remains of any primate."

In the eastern portion of Java, Dr. Hrdlicka found traces of the pre-Malay Hindu population which peopled the island in historic times. In the central part of Java, these people evidently reached a rather high degree of culture and left imposing ruins.

Full-blood and otherwise, full-colored Australians, but with tow hair, were among the phenomena observed in a boat journey along the western coast of Australia. Dr. Hrdlicka also attended impressive nocturnal ceremonies of the native Australians.

"The data obtained in Australia," writes Dr. Hrdlicka, "throws a very interesting and to some extent new light on the moot questions of both the Australian and Tasmanian aborigines. According to these observations, the Australian aborigines deserve truly to be classed as one of the more fundamental and older races of mankind, and yet it is a race which shows close connections with our own ancestral stock—not with the negroes or Melanesians (except through admixture), but with the old white people of postglacial times.

"As to the Tasmanians, the indications are that they were but a branch of the Australians, modified perhaps a little in their own country. Both peoples have lived, and the Australians of the northwest live largely to this day, in a paleolithic stage of stone culture. They are still making unpolished stone tools, which in instances resemble the Mousterian implements or later European paleolithic types. But they are also capable of a much higher class of work. Today, about Derby, bottles are used in making beautifully worked spear heads."

Studies Zulu Tribes.

Proceeding to Durban, Natal, in South Africa, Dr. Hrdlicka studied many individuals of the Zulu tribe and reached the conclusion that they were undoubtedly true negroes, though some individuals showed a trace of the Arab type due to old admixtures.

The two main objects of the visit to South Africa were the investigation on the spot of the important find of the Rhodesian skull, and of the recent discovery of the skull of a fossil anthropoid ape at Taungs, which had been reported as being possibly a direct link in the line of man's ascent. The Rhodesian skull, found in 1921 at Broken Hill, shows a man so primitive in many of its features that nothing like it has been seen before. Dr. Hrdlicka was able to clear up some of the moot points in connection with this important find, and he collected for study bones of animals from the cave which gave the Rhodesian skull, as well as two additional mineralized human bones belonging to two individuals, all of which were deposited with the earlier relics in the British Museum.

The fossil skull of an anthropoid ape found at Taungs in 1924, belongs, according to Dr. Hrdlicka, to a species of anthropoid ape of about the size of a chimpanzee and evidently related to this form, though there are certain differences, especially in the brain. These differences suggested that this ape may possibly have been somewhat superior to the chimpanzee and nearer to the human. But it is not necessarily a form that stood in the direct line of the human phylum.

"There is the disappearing old native population of Bushmen, Strandloopers and Hottentots, the newer negro population which amounts already to over 7,000,000 and is steadily increasing; the almost stationary population of 1,500,000 South African whites of Dutch and English derivation, who are blending together and producing a type of their own (as is also happening on a larger scale with the whites in Australia) and there are abundant remains of paleolithic culture."

Summing up his study of the distributions of races and the evidences of the great early migrations, Dr. Hrdlicka concluded as follows:

"The story of man's origin, differentiation, spread and struggle for survival is evidently greater, far greater than ordinarily conceived, and a vast amount of work remains for its satisfactory solution."

SALE OF RARE FIRST EDITIONS

American Art Association Also Offers Old Sporting Books and Prints.

The American Art Association placed on exhibit yesterday at its galleries the collection of library sets of esteemed authors with rare first editions of the sixteenth and seventeenth centuries, sporting books and prints in color, some of which belong to Victor Thrane of Chicago, and the rest of which are owned by a New York collector. The books will be on exhibition until next Wednesday and Thursday, when they will be sold at auction.

In the collection are sets of the Barrie edition of Ainsworth on Japanese vellum, Balzac in French and English, Scribner's special edition of Stevenson, Thackeray, Jules Verne, Scott and others. The sporting books and prints include works of Alken, Rowlandson, Wolstenholme and other artists of the nineteenth century.

PAINTINGS PUT ON SALE.

Albright Collection and Others to Be Auctioned Wednesday.

Barbizon, Dutch and American paintings from the collections of J. J. Albright of Buffalo, a gift from Mr. Albright to that city, are on exhibition at the Anderson Galleries and will be sold there Wednesday evening. In addition there are from other collections paintings ordered sold by Charles D. Morgan of Paris, Frederick Rider of New York; James Stillman of New York sold by order of his son, C. C. Stillman, and others. There are eighty-nine pictures by sixty-eight artists.

A little marine by Whistler, "The Sea, Pourville," is in the collection. There also is Dwight W. Tryon's "Morning" and the Corot "View of Doual." There are two by Boudin.

In the Albright collection there are a Mauve, a Jacque, two by Diaz, a Claus, a Troyon and others by Crochepierre, Adan, Abbott H. Thayer and a Lawrence portrait of George IV.

Enjoins Anti-Racing NewsOrdinance

CLEVELAND, April 10 (AP).—A temporary injunction restraining the city from enforcing an ordinance prohibiting publication or distribution in any way of information pertaining to race-track betting was granted to Henry Solomon, head of a news company, by Common Pleas Judge Ruhl today. The ordinance was due to become effective tomorrow midnight. Hearing on a permanent injunction will be held Thursday.

FATHER A SUICIDE, 82 AID HIS FAMILY

$505 Sent for Relief of Widow and 3 Children of Man Who Sought Work 3 Months.

GIFTS FROM FIVE STATES

$600 Asked for by Brooklyn Bureau of Charities—A Technicality Bars Pension for Widow.

Sixty-two contributions for a total of $505 have been received for the relief of the widow and three children of the man who, as told in THE NEW YORK TIMES last Sunday, threw himself into the East River and drowned after spending three months trudging the streets in search of work.

The plight of the widow and children was described by the Brooklyn Association for Improving the Children of the Poor, who found that the father had committed suicide when he did not have money left for carfare. There was insurance of $600, but it could not be obtained for the family until definite proof of death was obtained. The contributions for the family received through THE NEW YORK TIMES and the Brooklyn charitable organization are as follows:

The contributions came from five States and eighteen different cities and towns. The total reported yesterday is within less than $100 of the sum of $600 which was asked by the Brooklyn Bureau of Charities for the relief of the family until some permanent support could be found. Owing to a technicality the widow at present cannot obtain a widow's pension, because the granting of such a pension is dependent, like the insurance, on positive proof of death, which in this case is so far unavailable.

Prohibition to Be the Topic of Many Pastors—Methodist Bishops Will Preach.

RABBI IN CHRISTIAN PULPIT

Dr. Nathan Krass Will Talk on "Jesus" at the West End Presbyterian Edifice.

Prohibition will be the topic of many pastors today. Due to the fact that two Methodist conferences are in session, several Methodist Bishops will occupy pulpits and probably discuss the wet and dry issues also.

S. Edgar Nicholson, Associate Superintendent of the Anti-Saloon League of New York State, will speak this evening in the Fordham Manor Reformed Church, 71 West Kingsbridge Road, the Bronx. He will answer an address delivered from the same pulpit on March 21 by United States District Attorney Buckner, in which Mr. Buckner said he was for self-determination by the States as to the percentage of alcohol that is intoxicating.

"National Prohibition" will be the subject at 3:30 this afternoon of the Rev. Dr. S. Parkes Cadman, President of the Federal Council of Churches, before the Bedford Branch of the Y. M. C. A., Bedford Avenue and Monroe Street, Brooklyn. The address will be broadcast by station WEAF.

"Is Prohibition a Success?" will be the topic this evening of the Rev. Dr. Christian F. Reisner, pastor of the Chelsea Methodist Church, 178th Street and Fort Washington Avenue.

The Rev. Harry E. Fisher, Secretary of the metropolitan district of the New York Civic League, will deliver an address this evening in the Eighteenth Street Methodist Church. Provided he has recovered from a cold Arthur J. Davis, Superintendent of the Anti-Saloon League of New York State will speak also.

Bishop Francis J. McConnell of the Pittsburgh Area will preach this morning in the Washington Square Methodist Church, Fourth Street. At 3 o'clock the Bishop will ordain a class of young men to the ministry.

Bishop William F. Oldham of Buenos Aires will preach this morning in the Metropolitan Methodist Temple, Seventh Avenue, near Fourteenth Street, taking up the World Service Program of the Methodist Church. This evening the preacher will be Bishop Herbert Welch of Japan and Corea.

Bishop L. J. Birney of China will preach this evening in St. Andrew's Methodist Church, Seventy-sixth Street, west of Columbus Avenue. His sermon will be broadcast over the church's broadcasting station WSDA.

"The Religion of Thomas Jefferson" will be the topic this morning of the Rev. Dr. A. Wakefield Slaten, minister of the West Side Unitarian Church, 110th Street, just east of Broadway, in celebration of the 183d anniversary of the birth of Jefferson.

"Judaism and Americanism" will be the theme this morning of Rabbi Nathan Krass in Temple Emanu-El, Fifth Avenue and Forty-third Street.

A rabbi—the Rev. Dr. H. G. Enelow of Temple Emanu-El—will preach in the West End Presbyterian Church, 105th Street and Amsterdam Avenue, this evening on "Jesus." The service will be under the auspices of America's Good-will Union.

The annual service of the New York chapter, Sons of the American Revolution, will be held this evening in the Episcopal Church of the Heavenly Rest, East Eighty-ninth Street, between Park and Madison Avenues. The sermon will be preached by the Rev. Dr. Joseph Fort Newton, chaplain of the chapter.

"Purpose and Power" will be the subject at 2:30 today before the Young Peoples' Conference of the Greater New York Federation of Churches of the Rev. Dr. Daniel A. Poling, the copastor, in the Marble Collegiate Reformed Church, Fifth Avenue and Twenty-ninth Street.

The preacher this morning in the Cathedral of St. John the Divine, 110th Street and Amsterdam Avenue, will be the Very Rev. Howard Chandler Robbins, the dean. The preacher at 4 o'clock will be the Rev. Dr. G. Adye Prichard, rector of St. Mark's Episcopal Church, Mount Kisco, N. Y.

A service in honor of John N. Burnham, blind organist and composer, will be held this evennig in the Episcopal Church of the Comforter, 162d Street, near Morris Avenue, the Bronx. Mr. Burnham will give an organ recital, including some of his own compositions.

"The Wondrous Cross" will be the subject of the Rev. Dr. George H. Baker, who will begin his pastorate at the Washington Heights Baptist Church, West 145th Street and Convent Avenue, this morning.

Today is the third anniversary of the Rev. Randolph Ray as rector of the Episcopal Church of the Transfiguration, Twenty-ninth Street, just east of Fifth Avenue, "The Little Church Around the Corner." Dr. Ray will preach this morning.

Bishop Arthur S. Lloyd will confirm a class in the Episcopal Church of the Incarnation, Thirty-fifth Street and Madison Avenue, at 4 o'clock this afternoon. This morning the preacher will be the Rev. Dr. H. Percy Silver, the rector.

The Rev. Dr. Samuel Trexler, President of the Lutheran Synod of New York and New England, will preach this morning before the Lutheran Congregation of the Holy Trinity, Nutley, N. J., which is worshipping in the Town Hall.

The preacher this morning in the Universalist Church of the Divine Paternity, Central Park West and Seventy-sixth Street, will be the Rev. Dr. Albert Parker Fitch, a member of the Faculty of Carleton College, Northfield, Minn.

The fifty-fifth anniversary of Holy Trinity Lutheran Church, Central Park West and Sixty-fifth Street, will be celebrated this morning. The Rev. Dr. Paul Scherer, the pastor, will preach.

Father James M. Gillis will preach this evening in the Church of the Paulist Fathers, Columbus Avenue and Sixtieth Street, on "The New Decalogue of Science," by Albert Edward Wiggam. The lecture will be broadcast by WLWL.

Dr. Sherwood Eddy of the National Council of the Y. M. C. A. will preach at 4 o'clock today in St. Paul's Chapel, Columbia University.

"Doubt and Faith" will be the theme this morning of the Rev. Dr. Augustus Steimle, pastor of the Lutheran Church of the Advent, Broadway and Ninety-third Street.

"Christianity and Spiritualism" will be the subject this morning of the Rev. Dr. Frank Warfield Crowder, rector of St. James's Episcopal Church, Madison Avenue and Seventy-first Street.

Peter V. Ross will lecture tomorrow evening at 9 o'clock in the First Church of Christ, Scientist, Central Park West and Ninety-sixth Street. The lecture will be broadcast by Station WMCA. Professor Herman S. Hering will lecture next Thursday evening at 8:15 o'clock in the Eleventh Church of Christ, Scientist, 2,382 Grand Concourse.

"The Challenge of the Hour" will be the topic this evening of the Rev. Millard S. Robinson, Superintendent of the Methodist City Society, in the Union Methodist Church and Social Centre, Forty-eighth Street, near Broadway.

"Will the God of the Jew Survive?" will be the subject this morning of the Rev. Dr. Stephen S. Wise, rabbi of the Free Synagogue, in Carnegie Hall.

Preceding his sermon this evening the Rev. Dr. John Roach Straton, pastor of Calvary Baptist Church, Fifty-seventh Street, between Sixth and Seventh Avenues, will discuss conditions in Florida. The subject of his "On the Air" radio class at 3 o'clock over Station WHN will be "Can the Bible Story of the Flood be Believed?"

There will be a demonstration at 4 o'clock this afternoon in the Episcopal Church of St. Mark's-in-the-Bouwerie, Tenth Street, west of Second Avenue, of eurythmy, the new art, of movement, in which sound is carried over, made visible by bodily expression. The music program will be given by the Goetheanum School of Eurythmy.

"The Coming of a New Humanity" will be the subject this morning of the Rev. J. Herman Randall, associate minister of the Community Church, Park Avenue and Thirty-fourth Street. This evening Professor J. J. Cornelius of India will address the community forum.

John Duxbury of England will speak this afternoon at 3:45 o'clock in the West Side Y. M. C. A., Fifty-seventh Street near Eighth Avenue.

John H. Maddaford, Student Secretary of the Y. M. C. A. Physicians' and Surgeons' Club, will speak at 4 o'clock in the West Twenty-third Street Y. M. C. A., near Seventh Avenue.

The Rev. Dr. Silas Evans, President of Ripon College, Ripon, Wis., will preach this morning in the Park Avenue Baptist Church, at Sixty-fourth Street.

"Hope for Society" will be the subject at 4 o'clock today of the Rev. Dr. James M. Farr, associate pastor of the Brick Presbyterian Church, Fifth Avenue and Thirty-seventh Street.

SERVICES IN BROOKLYN.

Bishop Wilson to Preach in Hanson Place Methodist Church.

Bishop Luther B. Wilson of the New York area will preach this morning in the Hanson Place Methodist Church. He will give the official sermon of the New York East Conference, which is meeting in the church.

This evening the Rev. Robert McCaul, pastor of the Washington Avenue Baptist Church, at Gates Avenue, will discuss the slander suit brought by the "Damned Souls" Society in Rochester, N. Y., against Clinton H. Howard. This morning he will preach on "Our Treatment of God."

The Rev. Horace E. Cluis, rector of St. George's Episcopal Church, Gates and Marcy Avenues, will preach this morning on a poem, "My Patch of Blue," written by the late Mrs. Mary Newland Carson. Mrs. Carson was the wife of the Rev. Dr. Robert E. Carson, pastor of Grace Presbyterian Church, Brooklyn. She wrote the poem while bed-ridden. She had long been an invalid.

"The Level Stretch of Road" will be the subject this morning of the Rev. Dr. Charles Carroll Albertson, pastor of the Lafayette Avenue Presbyterian Church, at South Oxford Street. This evening the Rev. Basil Douglas Hall, assistant, will preach on "An After-Easter Question."

Judge Franklin Taylor of the Kings County Court will speak at 6 o'clock this evening before the Fellowship League of the Cumberland Street Presbyterian Church, 103 Cumberland Street.

Horace J. Bridges will speak this morning before the Brooklyn Society of Ethical Culture in the Academy of Music, Lafayette Avenue, near the Atlantic Avenue subway station.

High School Girl Is Missing.

The police of the Missing Bureau have as yet found no trace of Laura Campbell Chatterton, 15 years old, who disappeared on March 13 from her home at 554 West Thirty-fifth Street. The girl was a student at Julia Richman High School. Her parents are unable to account for her disappearance.

MAY PICK SUCCESSOR TO BREWSTER IN MAY

Connecticut Episcopalians to Select an Bishop at Annual Convention.

Special to The New York Times.

NEW HAVEN, Conn., April 10.—A decision has been reached not to call a special meeting of the Episcopal clergymen of Connecticut to make another attempt to elect a Coadjutor Bishop. Instead, the selection will be deferred until the annual diocesan convention which will meet in Hartford about May 20.

Because of the proviso that the coadjutor who will be chosen will succeed Bishop Chauncey B. Brewster of Connecticut, the election has all the importance and significance of the choice of a Bishop in full who will head one of the largest, most influential and prosperous Episcopal dioceses of the United States.

Bishop Brewster's successful and progressive administration has lasted more than a quarter of a century. He succeeded Bishop John Williams in 1899, and the pair have divided the duties and honor of creating the modern Protestant Episcopal Church in Connecticut by their joint terms, lasting more than half a century. Firmly established before, the diocese has been given a permanent place in the front rank of Protestant churches by their able executive conduct of the office of the Bishop.

Bishop Acheson has proved an energetic associate of Bishop Brewster, and his name was presented to the convention at the annual diocesan convention last May. The election took place, but resulted in a deadlock, after, twelve ballotts, when a vote was passed directing Bishop Brewster to make arrangements for an election for a Coadjutor Bishop. Instead of calling for a special election, however, he has decided to await the annual convention next month.

The question which will determine the election will apparently be whether the diocese wishes to place at its head one of the most prominent of its own clergy, such as Suffragan Bishop Acheson or the Rev. Dr. John M. Lewis of Waterbury, or whether it will go outside of the State for Bishop Brewster's successor.

HONOR WOMAN DESIGNER.

Numismatic Society Awards Medal to Mrs. Laura G. Fraser.

The American Numismatic Society awarded the J. Sanford Saltus medal to Laura Gardin Fraser yesterday afternoon at a meeting at the society's museum at Broadway and 156th Street.

Mrs. Fraser received the award in recognition of the excellence of a series of designs, including a polo medal, the American Horse Club medal, the Irish setter medal, the Ride-a-Wee Home medal and the Grant, Alabama and Fort Vancouver half dollars. Mrs. Fraser is the seventh recipient of the J. Sanford Saltus medal. The first recipient was her husband, James Earle Fraser.

Everyday in Hollywood A Day In June . . . Summer or Winter It's All The Same—An Average Temperature of 80.8 degrees and never more than 86.

Before you make any summer vacation plans learn about the wonderful pleasures and many new experiences offered by the Hollywood Vacation Tours. To take one of these tours is like going abroad. Two thousand miles of ocean cruising on a magnificent and luxuriously fitted liner are part of the tour. And every amusement and convenience of a trans-Atlantic voyage are yours.

Hollywood—tropical, colorful Hollywood—you will love it. Rivalling the "mood" of a South Seas' Isle, it is incomparable, because its beautiful hotels, country club and bathing casino have all the advantages of modern construction and conveniences.

Hollywood is right on the Atlantic ocean. Its broad golden beach is washed by the foaming surf of the Atlantic. Perpetual cool, refreshing sea breezes make it a paradise in summer. The weather is ideal for play, for romance, for complete relaxation.

Old delights vie with new delights for your favor in Hollywood . . . Golf, tennis, riding, bathing, surf sports, motoring, dancing, moonlight bathing, sailing and fishing for the famous tarpon and sail fish. But these are not all. Write, today, for every detail and the many things you will want to know about Hollywood and the Hollywood Vacation Tours. Clip and mail the coupon below.

It will bring you the information you seek and you will have plenty of time to plan for and look ahead to your vacation. You will be amazed when you realize that you can take a Hollywood tour for no more than you would spend at home. Mail the coupon, today.

GAIN IN SCHOLARSHIP SHOWN AT HARVARD

579 Undergraduates Are Put on Dean's List, Earning Coveted Privileges.

INCREASE OVER 1925 SHOWN

Number Accorded Honor Is 17.9 Per Cent. of College Enrolment, as Compared to Last Year's 16.6.

Special to The New York Times.

CAMBRIDGE, Mass., April 10.—Five hundred and seventy-nine undergraduates at Harvard have high grade marks sufficient to place them on the Dean's list, which accord them unusual privileges, particularly in regard to attendance at class. The number of men accorded this honor is 17.9 per cent. of the college enrolment, as compared with last year's 500 or 16.6 per cent.

The group of 579 men includes all those whose work was consistently of B average and is made up of the first three groups of the rank list. This group is divided among the classes as follows: Seniors, 153; juniors, 157; sophomores, 103; freshmen, 149. In addition to these there are a number of men who were on the Dean's list before midyears who did not take the examinations.

Names on Dean's List.

THE finishing touches are being put on our new building at 47th Street—the last drive to clear out all furniture and rugs from our ancient shop on 36th Street has begun.

Every piece, every rug is marked for clearance—rapid clearance. In one month we open our door uptown! And one month is so short a time in which to clear out such huge quantities of good furniture as our nine floors hold, that final discounts are available from this day on!

Every single piece of furniture is included. We have gone through and marked many sets at reductions of 1/2 or more. Odd pieces are included. The values transcend anything we have ever offered. Read the tables of prices scattered all around this page.

These prices are without doubt the lowest prices at which good furniture of this type has ever been offered. It is difficult to imagine their ever being offered again, for that is almost an economic impossibility!

So, if you need a small chair, a dining room set, an upholstered set, a bedroom group, some Oriental rugs, or anything that our nine floors of good furniture hold, we advise you to come and come early while the best selection of these wonderful values remains open.

EMILY SCHNIEWIND WEDS JAMES J. LEE

Ceremony in Fifth Avenue Presbyterian Church Performed by Rev. Dr. Stevenson.

MISS MACKENZIE BRIDE

Wed to Herbert Glasier—Nuptials of Misses Hopkins and Meserve and Mrs. Shaw.

Miss Emily Dorothea Schniewind, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Henry Schniewind Jr. of 8 East Seventy-ninth Street, was married to James Jackson Lee, son of George C. Lee of Boston, yesterday afternoon in the Fifth Avenue Presbyterian Church. The ceremony was performed by the Rev. Dr. J. Ross Stevenson, President of the Theological Seminary at Princeton, assisted by the Rev. Francis Whittemore of Dedham, Mass.

The bride, who was escorted by her father, wore a gown of white satin embellished with old rose point lace. Her veil of old Brussels net edged with old rose point completely covered her long court train of catin. It was fastened to her coiffure with a bandeau of orange blossoms. She carried a bouquet of lilies of the valley and cream-pink orchids.

Mrs. Warren B. Pond, the former Miss Helen Schniewind, elder sister of the bride, was matron of honor, and Miss Margaret Schniewind, another sister, was maid of honor. They wore gowns of pale yellow chiffon over burnt orange taffeta. The other attendants were Mrs. Samuel Irwin of Philadelphia, Miss Ethel Schniewind, youngest sister of the bride, who will be a débutante of next season; the Misses Margaret Caradine of St. Louis, Frances Heyworth of Chicago, Margaret Stone, Sarah Holter, Alice Dodge and Evelyn Lanman of this city. They wore gowns of yellow chiffon over taffeta of the same shade. All the attendants wore hats to match their gowns.

George C. Lee Jr., was best man for his brother. The ushers were Henry Schniewind, 3d, brother of the bride; Nelson Lee, another brother of the bridegroom; Charles Denby of Washington, D. C.; Henry S. Grew Jr., Frank Akers, Vinton Chapin, Thomas Oakes, Charles Buel, Arthur Hobson, Harrison Gardner and Chandler and Edward Bigelow, all of Boston.

The ceremony was followed by a reception at the home of the bride. Mr. Lee and his bride will sail on Wednesday on the Aquitania for a wedding trip on the Continent. They will live in England for a year and will also pass a year on the Continent.

Mr. Lee comes from old English stock and the bride from a long line of German and Dutch families. On her maternal grandmother's side she is of Walloon and French descent, and of the Huguenot family, de Bary which dates back to the 13th century. Mr. Lee's aunt, the eldest sister of his father, was the first wife of the late Colonel Theodore Roosevelt, and mother of Mrs. Nicholas Longworth.

Glasier—Mackenzie.

Miss Frances Rivington Mackenzie, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. George Clinton Mackenzie, of 570 Park Avenue, was married to Herbert Glasier, son of Mr. and Mrs Arthur Glasier, of Scarborough, England, yesterday afternoon in the Church of the Heavenly Rest. The ceremony was performed by the rector, the Rev. Dr. Henry Darlington. The bride, whose father gave her in marriage, wore a gown of old rose point lace over white chiffon velvet. The lace belonged to her great grandmother Cooper. Her veil of the same lace, which completely covered her long court train, had been worn by four generations of brides in her family. She carried a bouquet of lilies of the valley and Easter lilies.

Miss Georgia C. Mackenzie, sister of the bride, who was maid of honor, wore a gown of yellow chiffon and a picture hat to correspond. The other attendants, Mrs. George P. McNear, Jr., another sister of the bride; the Misses Louise Dean, Anne Stewart, Olive Cauldwell and Nina Hodgson, a niece of the bridegroom, who came from England for the wedding, wore gowns of lettuce green chiffon and champaigne colored picture hats. They all carried bouquets of Spring flowers. There was a little flower girl in the bridal party, Olive Abbott, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Edward Abbott, of Scarborough, and a niece of the bridegroom.

Cecil Fitz Hugh Gordon was best man for Mr. Glasier, whose ushers were Roger Wilkinson, Thomas B. Harrison, Alson Kimball, Henry Bulkman and Myron Parker Burdette, brother-in-law of the bride. The ceremony was followed by a reception at the Park Lane.

Mr. Glasier and his bride will go South on their wedding trip and on their return will live at 1,335 Madison Avenue.

Meyer—Hopkins.

The chantry of St. Thomas's Church was the scene of the marriage yesterday afternoon of Miss Marion Louise Hopkins, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. J. Appleton H. Hopkins of 56 East Fifty-sixth Street, to Henry Coddington Meyer 3d, son of Mr. and Mrs. Henry Coddington Meyer Jr. of this city and Montclair, N. J. Dean Hughell Fosbroke performed the ceremony in the presence of relatives and a few intimate friends. The bride, whose father gave her in marriage, wore a gown of white satin finished with a front panel of rose point lace and long tight sleeves of point lace. This lace was a gift to the bride from Mrs. Edward Benneche. She wore a tulle veil with a cap of point lace and carried a bouquet of lilies of the valley and white orchids. She wore also a string of pearls and a diamond and sapphire bracelet, gifts of the bridegroom.

Miss Paula Sidenberg was maid of honor, and the other attendants were Mrs. Edmund Osborne, Mrs. Robert Hersey, Miss Emily Meyer, sister of the bridegroom; Miss Deborah Turnbull of Wilmington, Del., cousin of the bride; Miss Louise Hickok of Pittsburgh and Miss Frederica Pisek of this city. They wore gowns of yellow taffeta, made on old-fashioned lines, trimmed with deep flounces of tulle and worn over full hook skirts. They wore picture hats to correspond. The maid of honor was in gray taffeta. All carried bouquets of yellow Spring flowers.

Edmund Osborne was best man for Mr. Meyer, whose ushers were Douglas T. and J. Appleton H. Hopkins Jr., brothers of the bride; Gilbert Bailey, Hughell Fosbroke Jr., Henry Lewis, Allen Treman, Blyth Emmons and Dr. Irvine Page.

The ceremony was followed by a reception at the home of the bride's parents. Mr. Meyer and his bride then will return from their wedding trip will live in Montclair, N. J.

Kunhardt—Meserve.

In the Madison Avenue Presbyterian Church yesterday afternoon Miss Dorothy Turner Meserve, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Frederick Hill Meserve of 148 East Seventy-eighth Street, and Chester, N. J., was married to Philip Bradish Kunhardt, son of Mr. and Mrs. George E. Kunhardt of North Andover, Mass. The ceremony was performed by the pastor, the Rev. Dr. Henry Sloane Coffin, assisted by the Rev. Dr. Endicott Peabody, head master of Groton School.

The bride, who was escorted by her father, wore a gown of ivory colored satin made with a tight bodice and long full skirt. It was embellished with old point d'Angleterre lace, which lace also was used for the long tight sleeves. Her veil of tulle fell from under a cap of old lace. She carried a bouquet of lilies of the valley and white orchids.

Her sister, Miss Helen Meserve, was the maid of honor and the Misses Margaret Hatch, Haroldine Humphreys, Helen Hoyt, Katherine Strauss, Helen Rice, Dorothy Stewart, Harriet Price and Hildegard Kunhardt, sister of the bridegroom, were the bridesmaids. They were all dressed alike in two-tone orchid colored tulle and picture hats of horse hair straw in a paler shade of orchid. They carried bouquets of pink snapdragon, blue larkspur, lavender sweet peas and Queen's lace flowers.

The ceremony was followed by a reception at the Colony Club. Mr. Kunhardt and his bride, when they return from their wedding trip, will live in New York.

MISS EDRINGTON ENGAGED TO WED

New York Girl's Troth to George Bruce Ismay Told by Her Parents in Paris.

MISS ELLIOTT BETROTHED

To Marry Anthony S. Mowbray—Troths of the Misses Traendly, Lehman and Briscoe.

Mr. and Mrs. William R. Edrington of 830 Park Avenue have cabled from Paris to relatives and friends in this city to make formal announcement of the engagement of their daughter, Miss Florence Edrington, now with them, to George Bruce Ismay, second son of Mr. and Mrs. J. Bruce Ismay of London and Hoylake, near Liverpool, England. Miss Edrington sailed last Nov. 25 on the Belgenland for a tour of the world and was met in Naples by her parents when the ship landed there. The engagement is the result of the trip, as Mr. Ismay was one of the passengers. He arrived on the Belgenland last Wednesday, but sailed again yesterday on the Paris for France to join Mr. and Mrs. Edrington and his fiancée in Paris.

Miss Edrington's father is interested in theatrical productions in New York and elsewhere. Mr. Ismay is a member of a family that has been associated with the White Star Line of steamships for many years. His mother is the former Miss Florence Schieffelin, eldest daughter of the late Mr. and Mrs. George R. Schieffelin, who for many years lived at 22 West Fifty-second Street and who had extensive holdings in Southampton (N. Y.) property. Mr. Ismay has lived the greater part of his life in England, where his parents went shortly after their marriage in New York. He is a nephew of Mrs. Henry Graff Trevor of this city and Southampton, of Miss Dorothy Schieffelin and of George R. D. Schieffelin, who married Miss Louise Scribner, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Charles Scribner of this city and The Gables, Morristown, N. J.

Mr. Ismay also is a grandnephew of Mrs. Hamilton Fish, whom his mother frequently visits in New York. Mr. Ismay's uncle, C. Bower Ismay, married his mother's sister, Miss Constance Schieffelin, and they live at Haselbech Hall, Northampton, England. The wedding will take place in this city early in November.

Elliott—Mowbray.

At a bridge party given yesterday afternoon at Miss Elliott's home, 700 Ocean Avenue, Brooklyn, Mrs. Albert Wade of Champaign, Ill., announced the engagement of her niece, Miss Margaret Anne Elliott, to Anthony Scott Mowbray, son of Mrs. Louis M. Mowbray and the late Mr. Mowbray of 338 Third Street, Brooklyn. Miss Elliott is the daughter of the late Mr. and Mrs. George Crawford Elliott of Chicago, Ill. She attended St. Elizabeth's School in Edinburgh, Scotland, and Gordon Hall in London, England. Mr. Mowbray attended Adelphi Academy and Pratt Institute. He served as a lieutenant in the Marine Corps during the war. No date has been set for the wedding.

Among the guests were Mrs. Louis M. Mowbray, Mrs. George V. Taylor, Mrs. Frederick H. Silence, Mrs. Rae A. Murdock, Mrs. Hamilton McInnes, Mrs. William Feick, Mrs. Frank Healy, Mrs. Fred Sitting, Mrs. Ross Truman, Mrs. William Healy, Mrs. James Petrie, Mrs. Harry James, Mrs. Clara Harban, Mrs. Herbert Bye, Mrs. Ralph Tebaut, Mrs. George Frost, Mrs. James Funston, Mrs. Warren Johnson; the Misses Mary Luella Elliott, F. Mowbray, Katherine Simonds, Marian Mayes, Maxine King, Marian Bushnell, Janet Bushnell, Lita K. Perpall, Helen Crosby and Jane Litchfield.

Traendly—Milton.

At a luncheon which Miss Marion Traendly gave yesterday at Sherry's for Mrs. Lester Wilcox of Mediden, Conn., Miss Traendly's parents, Mr. and Mrs. Frank Traendly of 991 Ocean Avenue, Brooklyn, announced her engagement to Ormand Milton, son of the late Mr. and Mrs. Philip Baldwin Milton of Washington, D. C. Miss Traendly was graduated from the Packer Collegiate Institute in 1923.

Mr. Milton was graduated from the University of Pennsylvania in 1918 and served in the artilllery during the war. He also attended the United States Military Academy at West Point. He is a member of the Alpha Chi Rho and Phi Beta Kappa fraternities and of the University Club of Washington, D. C.

Lehman—Weill.

The engagement has been announced of Miss Blanche Regina Lehman, daughter of William L. Lehman of 315 West Ninety-ninth Street, to Jacques Weill of 306 West 109th Street. Miss Lehman is a junior at Columbia University. Mr. Weill is in the real estate business in this city. The marriage will take place in May and the couple will go to Europe on their wedding trip.

Duffy—McSherry.

The engagement has been announced of Miss Laurette Geraldine Duffy, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Edward Duffy of Gl

CARDINAL APPEALS FOR CHARITY FUND

Wants All Catholics In His Archdiocese to Contribute in Next Week's Drive.

SPEAKS OVER RADIO TONIGHT

Report Shows 50,000 Persons Were Aided and 33,191 Got Hospital Treatment Last Year.

Cardinal Hayes in a letter printed in the annual Catholic Charities bulletin, of which 450,000 copies were issued to workshippers in the 339 parishes of the New York archdiocese today, asks every Catholic to rally to the support of the organized Catholic Charities this year. He is scheduled to reiterate the appeal tonight over Station WLWL from 8:20 to 8:30 P. M. The appeal for Catholic Charities opens next Sunday. Last year $1,770,674 was contributed by 349,343 persons.

The Cardinal's Appeal.

The Cardinal's letter to the laity was as follows:

Archbishop's House, 452 Madison Archbishop's House, 452 Madison Av.
New York, April 11, 1926.

Dear kind friends in Christ:

"Peace be to you"—the Peace and the Benediction of "Our Risen Lord"—is my salutation of gratitude for your most generous response to my appeal of last year for Catholic Charities.

Through your kindness the love of Christ Himself has touched the hearts and souls of many, even to the uttermost limits of this archdiocese. Acting in His Name, priests, religious and laity, have labored to root out the thorns and the briars, to sow good seeds, to shield the tender plant, and to offer fruit in abundance to Our Heavenly Father.

The law of Charity has been our never-failing inspiration in this rebuilding of Faith, in the sanctification of souls and bodies, and in the bringing of service and support to our needy and afflicted brethren in Christ.

I have been greatly comforted and strengthened by the continued support of so many thousands of my faithful people, and I look forward to the day when all Catholics—young and old, rich and poor—will gladly assist their Shepherd in caring for the lost and the wounded of the fold.

May God grant that what is yet to be done by our humble ministry may be accomplished by the effect of His divine love.

Faithfully and gratefully your Shepherd in Christ.

PATRICK CARDINAL HAYES,
Archbishop of New York.

50,000 Persons Helped.

A summary of the Catholic welfare work was incorporated in the bulletin. Last year nearly 50,000 persons were aided through the expenditure of $335,627 by the Catholic Charities direct, or through the St. Vincent de Paul Society and the Ladies of Charity. In the hospital division 33,191 patients were treated in Catholic institutions, and nearly 3,000 patients were guided back to complete health in convalescent homes. The Catholic Probation Bureau supervised more than 2,000 cases.

A musical program has been arranged in connection with Cardinal Hayes's radio appeal tonight. There will be a concert by St. Stephen's Choristers, Dr. John P. Foley, directing. The soloists will be Alessandro Modesti, baritone, and Marie Tiffany of the Metropolitan Opera House. Irish songs will be sung by Marguerite Hamal, with Ralph H. Maxiotta as accompanist.

William Ferrari Wins Lebrun Prize.

Special to The New York Times.

NEW HAVEN, Conn., April 10.—William Ferrari, of Short Beach, Conn., formerly a Yale Art School student, is announced as the winner of the Lebrun Traveling Scholarship of $1,400 in a nation-wide competition conducted by the Executive Committee of the New York Chapter of the American Institute of Architects. This scholarship, founded by the late Pierre Lebrun, architect of the Metropolitan Tower, provides for not less than six months of travel and independent study of architectural masterpieces abroad. Contestants were required to submit designs for a community auditorium for a city of 10,000 to 150,000 population.

HUNTINGTON PAINTINGS TO BE SOLD THURSDAY

Art Now on View at Anderson Galleries—$80,000 Troyon Among Objects Offered.

Paintings belonging to the late Mrs. Henry E. Huntington have been removed from 2 East Fifty-seventh Street to the Anderson Galleries, where they are on view, and will be sold there next Thursday evening.

A large painting by Constant Troyon, "Milking Time at La Celle, Near St. Cloud," most typical of his style, for which Mrs. Huntington paid $80,000, will be offered.

There are ninety-four Italian quatrocento, cinquecento and later Italian school examples, and others of the Barbizon, modern French, early Flemish, Dutch and South German schools.

Two portraits of a child are by Mary Cassatt, now totally blind, whose work has found its greatest appreciation in France. Other paintings are a Corot, "Hailing in the Net, Twilight," purchased by M. Quatrain from Corot and from Knoedler's by Mrs. Huntington, and still life examples by Robie Monnoyer and de Fontenay.

The numerous old masters are chiefly religious subjects, mostly Madonnas. There is a portrait of Charles I of England. A Bougereau example is a large painting of a mother and child. "Portrait of a Lady" is by Antoine Pesne. Van Marcke is represented by "Homeward Bound." "The Pets," a dog and two puppies, surrounded by gypsy children, is by Diaz. A handsome portrait bust is Hugues Merle's half-length profile of Charlotte Corday. "Moonlight," by Doucette, shows a river with church spires and windmills silhouetted in the background.

Indian Artist Will Lecture.

The lecture this afternoon in the Brooklyn Museum will be given by W. Langdon Kihn, student of Indian life and painter of Indian portraits. His talk will be called "An Artist among the North American Indians." His Indian pictures have been exhibited at the Anderson Galleries here and in galleries in other cities. The lecture, at 2:30 this afternoon, will be illustrated by photographs and paintings.

Warehouse Removal Sale

The Largest Furniture Warehouse on Manhattan Island

Thousands and thousands of feet of floor space in the new Spear warehouse, stretching along about a block of 22nd Street. Within practically a stone's throw of both stores, near the main arteries of travel, ideally located to make Spear delivery service quicker, surer, more scrupulously helpful than ever! A warehouse big enough to house the tremendous orders of brand new, fresh-from-the-market furnishings which are now under way for us in the foremost factories—to which all present stocks in the old warehouses must be immediately sacrificed.

Unprecedented Opportunities for Home Furnishing

This sale begins TOMORROW, APRIL 12, with what are probably the most remarkable values a furniture store has ever offered. It will continue with a series of eventful undersellings to last until the furniture in the present warehouses has been completely disposed of. You can save on living room, dining room, bedroom furniture, rugs, bedding, lamps, tables, chairs, lacquered furniture, fibre furniture, refrigerators, breakfast sets—anything and everything that goes to make a home comfortable and liveable.

THE WHOLE WORLD'S BUSINESS.

The Preparatory Commission for the Disarmament Conference is scheduled to begin its work at Geneva on May 17. Every man and woman in the United States has a direct, personal interest in it. This nation will this year spend on its military establishment between five and six hundred million dollars. Yet that sum is simply in correct ratio to the money to be expended in Europe for the same purposes. European armaments will always regulate the costs and dimensions of our own. If we wish to reduce our own yearly tribute to the fear of war, we must join heartily in the effort soon to be made at Geneva.

The great problem of reducing armaments is also our problem. That the isolationists are still thinking of the Atlantic Ocean in the terms of fifty years ago does not alter the fact. We are today building two enormous naval airplane carriers which, with the 144 planes they are to carry, will represent about ninety millions of dollars. Have the people of this country no interest in efforts to limit the rapidly expanding weapons and devices for the making of war?

The yet-remembered Oregon of a generation ago cost $6,400,000. The West Virginia class of the United States sea fighters of today costs $27,000,000. The English have gone beyond this with their Nelson and Rodney, and an English estimate places the cost of Japan's Mutsu at $40,000,000. England now has a submarine, the K-26, which is exactly the length of our old Oregon, 351 feet, and another new type of English submarine, the "X" class, has a much larger tonnage and more powerful offense than has the K-26. The "X" class mounts four four-inch guns and the X-1 is reported to be capable of remaining submerged for two and a half days. The K-26 mounts three four-inch guns, and this submarine made the journey to Ceylon and back "on its own" not long ago.

What of the growing competition in 10,000-ton cruisers, the limit fixed by the Washington Conference? Is this of importance only to England, Japan, Italy and France? England now has five vessels of this type building and nine more projected, fourteen altogether. The designs are closely guarded, but "expected speed, thirty-five knots," reveals the progress being made in cruiser design. Japan has four such ships under way and it is expected that four more will be laid down this year. These vessels will each cost $10,000,000. They will have triple hulls as protection against submarines, eight eight-inch guns of a powerful new type and a speed of thirty knots. They will be 600 feet long. The new Italian 10,000-ton cruisers will be 624 feet long. They will have engines of 150,000 horsepower, with a resulting speed of close to thirty-six knots. Here is a cruiser of 10,000 tons whose engines will develop 6,000 more horsepower than those of the famous British battle cruiser Hood, yet the Hood's tonnage, 41,000, is more than four times that of the Italian vessel.

The French have launched their first cruiser of this tonnage, the Duquesne, and others will follow her. The eight-inch guns are also of a new model and the speed is estimated at thirty-four knots. The French cruisers will be 604 feet in length. The United States has deliberately refrained from rushing into this cruiser race, hoping that another conference would halt this newest expression of naval competition. It is only now considering bids for its first pair of cruisers of this new type. The lowest of these bids is $10,508,000 for one vessel and the engines for both, which provides a fair idea of what may be expected in the rapidly developing cruiser competition.

Have the people of the United States no concern in the coming conversations at Geneva having to do with this particular portion of the armament question? It is here, perhaps, that something of a halt may be arranged. It would be a fitting supplement to the checking of the battleship brought about at Washington. The Preparatory Commission will arrange the agenda for the Disarmament Conference. It will have a great task. Not everything to be desired can be achieved. But progress will be made. The commission's labors will be of interest and importance to all the world—including the men and women of the United States.

THE ANTI-PROHIBITION INNINGS.

The week devoted by the Senate committee to hearing witnesses hostile to prohibition, as embodied in the Volstead act, was by no means lost time. It was notable for the amount of material and pertinent evidence brought out. Sentiment or prejudice being put to one side, the facts assembled and spread before the country have a significance which cannot be ignored. They may be offset in part by countervailing facts, but they cannot be whistled down the wind. Drawn from official records and from the lips of enforcement officers like General ANDREWS and District Attorney BUCKNER, they constitute a body of evidence with which Congress and public opinion will somehow in the end have to deal.

Perhaps the chief force of the testimony given is that the Prohibition law not only is not enforced but cannot be enforced. It cannot be, that is to say, without the expenditure of staggering sums of money, the employment of swarms of prohibition agents, miraculously to be kept from being corrupt, the multiplication of Judges and prosecuting officers—in a word, the virtual dropping of nearly all other activities of the Government for the purpose of concentrating its energies upon the execution of a law which is growingly repugnant to great masses of the American people. This is only another way of saying that in many sections of the country the Volstead act can never be enforced. It is today openly violated by people in all walks of life. Especially telling is the evidence of the leaders of labor organizations, who informed the Senate committee that at least 90 per cent. of the workingmen of the country get alcoholic drinks of one kind or another, many of which they make in their own homes. There they are safe from molestation. But neither there nor anywhere else do they cease to be indignant that a law which, in operation, is a discrimination in favor of the rich as against the poor, should remain unchanged after full demonstration of the evils—especially of the way in which it has roused an unhappy class feeling—which it inevitably produces.

What will come next no man can say. The defenders of prohibition will have their week before the Senate committee. But not even the most determined and fanatic among them can be blind to the fact that a wave of sentiment against prohibition as we have it has been rising with extraordinary rapidity and power. This is the big and ominous fact which overtops all the others. It portends a change of attitude on the part of many men in public life. To infer that the law will speedily be altered would be folly. But it would be an equal folly to shut one's eyes to the signs of the times. Social and political forces have been set in motion which cannot fail sooner or later to change the whole outlook for prohibition in the United States.

IMPATIENT SOCIALISTS.

A certain amount of caution is needed in dealing with the statement of principles and tactics at the recent conference of the Independent Labor Party in England. The slogan of the meeting was "Socialism in Our Time." Inasmuch as the Independent Labor Party comprises many young intellectuals, it might be argued from the average age of the delegates that "our time" could possibly be extended to mean something like half a century. Specific resolutions confirm the presence of a sense of moderation underneath the heated rhetoric. Universal cancellation of war debts was recommended, but the proposal that Great Britain should take the initiative on her own account was voted down. The nationalization of wealth was approved, but the question of compensation to the present owners was left to be decided on the "merits" of the individual case. To TROTSKY, who has had some very bitter things to say about British milksop "gradualists," the Independent Labor Party would be almost as viciously gradual as RAMSAY MACDONALD himself.

Yet it is against the MacDonald temper and policies that the action of the conference was directed. The former Labor Premier is himself a member of the Independent Labor Party. He was its Chairman during the critical period twenty years ago when Labor in Parliament definitely seceded from the Liberal alliance. The responsibilities of leadership and office have had their way with MACDONALD as with numerous leaders of socialism elsewhere in Europe. He is today, with men like CLYNES, THOMAS, HENDERSON and SNOWDEN, the avowed exponent of socialism one step at a time, and that not a step into the dark. His opponents will not forgive him for failing to make use of his brief tenure as Prime Minister to formulate a Socialist program of legislation. It would have failed and MACDONALD would have been thrown out of office without loss of time. But it is the contention of the Socialist stalwarts that the issue would have been joined and British Labor would have been furnished with marching orders for the future.

The proceedings at the Independent Labor conference were intended to spur on the over-cautious Labor wing which is at present in control of the party machinery. Compared with the MacDonald-Thomas moderates the Independents are impatient. But it is doubtful whether they have really refused to read the lesson of "immediate" socialism furnished by Moscow and so thoroughly taken to heart by the Socialists everywhere in Europe outside of Russia. The Left Wing of the British Socialists calls for nationalization and the guarantee of an "income" to every worker. But "our time" may in practice be equivalent to the tactics of the German Socialists, with whom the question of "socialization" has dropped out of the picture. Formal deference is still paid to the doctrines of MARX, whom J. M. KEYNES has recently described as "an obsolete economic textbook which I know to be not only scientifically erroneous but without interest or application for the modern world." Though Mr. KEYNES is not a Socialist, the majority of responsible Socialists abroad are far from dismissing his verdict on the Bolshevist experiment in Russia: "In Western industrial conditions the tactics of Red Revolution would throw the whole population into a pit of poverty and death."

HOUSING OF ART.

Opening of a new wing in the Metropolitan Museum of Art adds thirty galleries to the already extensive accommodations provided for its treasures. This will raise the question in many minds of the relation between the treasures and their setting. More than one visitor will go to the new south wing expecting to find thirty galleries full of new acquisitions, or at least of works that could not be seen before for lack of room in which to show them. If these visitors are disappointed, they might reflect upon the root significance of art as most philologists accept it, that ancient root AR, signifying "to put fit things together."

The real and glorious mission of the new wing in truth is just this: to bring into an appropriate environment objects already known to the public in surroundings, if not altogether unfit, certainly unequal to discovering for us the full beauty and worth of each example. The new wing majestically swings into line with the most modern and intelligent ideas of museum installation. Its leading feature on the ground floor is the "classical court," designed in the manner of a Roman garden, with pool, grass plot, pointed trees, dark ivy plants outlining the paths, warm color in the mosaic pavement of the colonnade, the whole lending itself to a reconstruction of the typical setting in which antique sculpture was at home. The sculpture, shown with a beautiful reticence of assertion and surrounded by ample space and resonant color, makes an irresistible appeal. Greek sculpture is here and Roman, and the splendor of the days in which these were freshly shown to their deeply initiated public is revived by the appropriateness of their new surroundings.

On the second floor the room from a Venetian palace, furnished with appropriate objects of the period, emphasizes the art of installation. The style of the room is Baroque, marking the turn of art in the eighteenth century toward the profusion and roundness of nature, a style unendurable in fragments, enchanting in any complete example, since its one great virtue was its subordination of parts to a whole impression. If this room had been torn apart, as in earlier days it might have been, and bits offered as a sufficient clue to the lost completeness, no visitor to the museum would have had what now all may have, a glowing picture of a room in which life went on among surroundings foreshadowing the decline into which Italian art was soon to fall.

Without laboring the testimony, we must applaud the spirit animating the new wing as a whole. With such an example brought into the light that beats upon a museum, it is easy to be optimistic in regard to the future of this one of our many housing problems.

ENGLAND STARTED THE KLAN.

We are indebted to our vigilant friend, The Gaelic American, for news of the discovery that Great Britain was "behind the Klan." It seems that a book has lately been published in Seattle by one LEMUEL A. DEVER, formerly a Grand Dragon of the Realm of Oregon, entitled "Mysterious Plans of the Ku Klux Klan Revealed." The revelations are said to be "startling." DEVER asserts that the Klan was begun as "an agency for British propaganda." Its first organizer was really an emissary of the British Government. Mr. DEVER also points to the damning fact that the first Imperial Wizard, W. J. SIMMONS, visited England in 1910 and 1911. A year later the Invisible Empire started up at Atlanta, and was in reality "built upon a plan made in England and copied from an English secret anti-Catholic organization."

Naturally, the British Government must have had a motive to spur it to this nefarious work. That, too, is explained. England was "alarmed" over the rapid gain for the cause of Irish independence in America. So something had to be done to check the "growth of Irish influence" in the United States. Irish-Americans were too powerful to be attacked openly and directly, and hence the scheme was got up to have the Klan organized against American Catholics and "thus divert the activities of the American Irish from their movement in aid of Ireland." Mr. DEVER charges that some of the Klan literature circulated in this country was in fact "matter prepared in England." He admits that when it was reprinted here it was "sometimes changed in wording." In order to make the story complete and perfect in every particular, it is stated that the hope of the English was that the Ku Klux Klan would become so powerful, particularly in the Democratic South, that the Confederate bonds held in England "would be redeemed inside of five years."

It will be seen that no detail of verisimilitude is omitted. England is once more unmasked as the arch-villain. That, of course, is always with The Gaelic American the Q. E. D.

THE MAKING OF LISTS.

Mr. A. B. WALKLEY has recently been trying to catch the eye of the young recruits to literary criticism by beginning with a paragraph about golf. He thinks that the mention of a golf champion will have a more magnetic attraction for the "young and muscular" than citations from the learned works of professors. Perhaps it will, but Mr. WALKLEY'S own name is a light brilliant enough to guide them to his remarks. He finds fault with them, though he disclaims any wish to "heave another half-brick at them."

The unhappy young scribblers have just had a grilling by ROBERT LYND, because they support most of their judgments by overly long quotations from STENDHAL and PROUST. Now they are taken to task by Mr. WALKLEY for another vicious habit, the mania for classification. It is a common passion; even the golf champions are not immune. But it finds its most thorough, its painfully conscientious exponents in literary criticism. Poets are divided into "Pure, Ornate and Grotesque"; novelists belong to the classic, romantic or realistic school. Then Mr. WALKLEY goes on to complain specifically of the young critics, who "cannot help their youth (lucky bargees!); they have not yet forgotten the list-making proper enough to people in statu pupillari, in weekly essays submitted to the Master or the Senior Dean, in answers to Boards of Examiners, and in distinguishing First from Second Divisions in Torpids and Eights."

All this business of classification is not inevitably an arranging of dried symbols. Sometimes a critic brings to the task such juicy vitality as makes even this dusty labor hearty and warm. MARY COLUM in the current Scribner's has indulged in a little list-making, but she has not squeezed the blood of life from her authors. In setting down her "critical credo" she says that literature is "determined by the conflict of significant mind with significant material; the material is always changing, but the qualities which make the artist's mind significant are always the same." Here is the point of departure for her division: MICHAEL ANGELO, SHAKESPEARE, LEONARDO DA VINCI and GOETHE had the artist's mind, and were lucky in living in a period when they found significant material with which to work. DRYDEN, on the other hand, is cited as a significant mind without adequate material to be found in his age. This seems a part of what CROCE called "the error known as the theory of artistic and literary classes."

When, however, she comes to contemporary writers her analysis warms into life. It is not necessary to join her in rating SHERWOOD ANDERSON as "the one contemporary American story writer with a genuinely free imagination, genuinely strong emotion," to see the truth of her statement that he has transformed his material with the creative touch of the artist, and "added to the significance of the material for all other artists who follow him." One feels, too, the force of another prick: that SINCLAIR LEWIS, on the contrary, has seriously damaged for other artists the material he uses instead of adding to its significance by the power of a transforming imagination, and has actually somewhat exhausted it for other writers." True enough; what is there left to say about Main Street and Mr. Babbitt? Other critics, with a more ardent view of realism, may assert that Mr. LEWIS has done the job so well that no one could hope to improve on his material, and that Mr. ANDERSON has made such a botch of his material that future writers could not fail to improve on it; but at least in this manner of sorting out authors there is stimulation.

If the orderly instinct for classification is a sin, everybody is guilty of it. We rank our tennis players, our financiers, our bathing beauties, our playwrights, our cities and our vegetable gardens. Everybody has "got a little list," and if some of them, like Uncle Podger's, get lost as soon as they are made, there is a good supply to fill up the gap. Some of the young critics will work out of list-making into fuller, richer, more human analysis. The others "never will be missed." But whatever elevated positions the young critics of today attain in time, they will see their sins finding them out. The young critics of tomorrow will "make the punishment fit the crime"; they also will have their little lists.

JUSTICE FOR THE POOR.

Several years ago newspaper headlines echoed a charge that there is one justice for the rich and another for the poor. What gave it sensational value was the fact that it was uttered by no professional agitator, but by a group of prominent lawyers, among them WILLIAM HOWARD TAFT and ELIHU ROOT. As the Chief Justice put it, for the citizen "without money to avail himself of" the courts, the "sounding declaration" of the Bill of Rights is "more honored in the breach than in the observance." He was speaking in behalf of the Legal Aid Society, now celebrating fifty years of growth and service.

In the eighteenth century attempts against rights of the individual were few—still fewer the citizens who could not afford legal redress. Of late years whole classes have been oppressed by poverty and by the inadequacy of the ancient law in contact with new industrial and social conditions. In point of fact, the Legal Aid Society was founded to meet a condition largely accidental and temporary. In 1876 German immigrants were frequently victimized as a result of their ignorance of our customs and our language, and ARTHUR VON BRIESEN organized a group to protect them. The society soon discovered a national need; it was besieged by unfortunates of all sorts who had found that, in the land of liberty, they were unable to maintain the most elementary rights. It was not merely that loan sharks and dishonest employers cheated them, relying on the delay and the cost of court procedure—though abuses of this kind were innumerable. The law itself was inadequate. A typical instance is that of workmen's compensation. Even when our leading industrial States had enacted adequate statutes, the remedy did not become effective until they set up boards or commissions the proceedings of which were summary. Meanwhile Legal Aid Societies had been established in industrial centres throughout the country. Between 1922 and 1925 their number increased from forty-eight to seventy-two. For the most part these, like the parent society in New York, were voluntarily financed and managed by lawyers. The motives were charitable but something more. If the poor are to be made good citizens of the Republic, if the nation as a whole is to escape a corroding hypocrisy, there must be one justice for all. The Legal Aid Society is a monument to the intelligence and the patriotism of the American bar.

There is none the less something anomalous, something deeply disquieting, in a nation that is forced to rely upon private initiative and voluntary contributions to safeguard constitutional rights. "It seems to me," says Judge TAFT, "that ultimately these instrumentalities will have to be made a part of the administration of justice and paid for out of public funds." Mr. ROOT agrees that methods may be evolved which can ultimately be applied by government," but adds: "Those methods cannot be evolved out of anybody's inner conscience or out of any legislative committee; they must be worked out experimentally, and that must be done by organized private enterprise." It is a problem of constitutional development, of the adaptation of fundamental law to conditions rapidly changing.

THE POLAR EXPEDITIONS.

The map of the polar regions which THE NEW YORK TIMES publishes today as a guide for those who will follow the progress of the aerial expeditions striving to reach the Pole and to explore the great unknown region" makes an irresistible appeal to the imagination. One sees the top of the world with encircling lands and islands spread out, names that are household words on account of privations endured and sacrifices made by explorers for 200 years, British, Americans, Scandinavians, Russians and men of the Latin nations. And still the North Pole has been attained by one explorer only, the undaunted and persistent PEARY. Between the Pole and Canada, Alaska and Siberia lies an unmapped space almost, if not quite, as large as Greenland. Around the Pole are the farthest north of NANSEN and other daring spirits who failed gloriously. The failure of AMUNDSEN and ELLSWORTH only last year catches the eye, and their trying adventure is recalled. A thin line of arrows shows their flight almost up to the Pole and the amazing return to Spitzbergen after a month of cutting a path for their airplane. That great white space which AMUNDSEN and ELLSWORTH will again try to reach, this time in the dirigible Norge, and which Captain WILKINS and Commander BYRD will fly their planes into if all goes well, has a wonderful fascination for all of us who are stirred by a great undertaking in which men risk their lives for science.

There can be no courage greater than that required by aerial exploration into polar regions that no man has seen. The old style of discovery by stout surface ships and dog sledges seems to be safe by comparison, though many expeditions never returned and some remain a mystery the curtain of which will never be lifted. The popular impression is that AMUNDSEN and ELLSWORTH in their airship will have a great advantage over WILKINS and BYRD in their planes. But in all three cases success may depend upon weather fair and free from storms. No fabric is more fragile in a great windstorm than a dirigible. It is absolutely essential that Captain AMUNDSEN and his comrades shall have the kind of calm and serene weather which favored PEARY when he made his dash from Cape Columbia to the Pole. Success should wait upon the great Norwegian captain if he has from four to six bright and windless days. Having passed through the unexplored area, he may turn his prow to Point Barrow and to Nome. WILKINS and even BYRD may anticipate AMUNDSEN, and radio out to the world that land has been discovered in the great white space. But their work must be done quickly and with a skill not required of the dirigible's navigators. Should they have to land on the ice or in a "lead" they will face disaster. In advance none of these explorers in air craft can lay out a course of action if things go wrong. They must address themselves to the hazards if and when encountered. All of them have had experience in Arctic or Antarctic adventure, AMUNDSEN most and BYRD least of all. Success or failure is on the lap of gods.

BY-PRODUCTS

Whatever may be the outcome of the wet and dry hearings at Washington, the national complacency stands in no danger of being undermined. Drys and wets agree that billions and billions of dollars are involved.

It is quite true that in the matter of child training parental enthusiasm and affection are not enough; they must be supplemented by a knowledge of psychology and hygiene. Also—and this point is sometimes overlooked—it is desirable that there shall be a child.

Cruel and Unusual Punishment.

One Boston Judge seems to have taken this question of the law's delays too much to heart. There is such a thing as speeding up the wheels of justice to the point where miscarriage of justice results. Assuming that a person is editor of a publication which has fallen under the cognizance of the courts, is it justice or fairness on the part of the court to give a decision in less than twenty-four hours and in favor of the defendant? The normal course of procedure in such a case should be either speedy conviction of the defendant followed by a couple of years of publicity in the higher courts, or acquittal in the court of first instance after due deliberation, say over a period of three months. When the courts set out to acquit a person without affording him the usual opportunities for newspaper interviews, mass meetings of sympathy, mass meetings of protest, public debates, church sermons, resolutions by Chambers of Commerce and letters to the press from both sides in the controversy, it is a question whether said courts are not denying the defendant his elementary rights under the Constitution.

Dangerous Klan Tactics.

The Klan, presumably, does not go in for refined analysis, nor does it waste much time over water that has flowed under the bridge. Otherwise it might stop to reflect on the possible consequences of its new strategy in shifting the war from an attack on Catholics, Jews and negroes to an attack on Evolution. The evolutionary theory allows for decadence as well as progress. By accepting Evolution wholeheartedly any Kleagle or Wizard would have no special difficulty in proving that all men were originally perfect, but that in the course of time a considerable portion of them degenerated in the direction of Rome, the synagogue and the colored chapel. On the other hand, in denying the operations of the law of change, the Klan is in danger of admitting that Romanists, Jews and citizens of African descent are the result of original creation. It thus concedes them a status and prestige which the earlier Klan philosophy refused to acknowledge.

If, nevertheless, the Klan is now working for an anti-evolution amendment to the Constitution of the United States, the reasons are those of practical necessity. They would be very much the same reasons that helped to put the Eighteenth Amendment into the Constitution. Anti-Darwinism enforcement in Tennessee and Mississippi cannot function properly as long as considerable sections of the country tolerate the processes of Evolution. Citizens of a pro-Evolution State might take up their residence in Mississippi and, owing to forces beyond their control, continue to evolve despite the local authorities. A Tennessee girl might marry a man from Boston and find, on coming North, that her husband is all the time evolving while she stands still. This would only make for domestic infelicity. Obviously the only answer is a uniform national law, permitting man to evolve to the extent of one-half of 1 per cent. of the sum total of his physical and moral characteristics.

The Rev. Billy Sunday has announced that in case both of the major parties put up wet candidates in 1928 he will himself run for President on a platform of "To hell with booze!" Three-fourths of the platform may possibly be news, but the presence of the remainder is obviously a matter of course in any public appearance by Billy Sunday.

Willing to Learn.

If there is one American writer for whom one would predict a very poor market in the German Reich, it would be Mr. James M. Beck, author of "The Evidence in the Case" and other familiar publications not at all to the taste of the German public. Yet Mr. Beck's "Constitution of the United States" has just been published in a German translation, with an introduction by Dr. Walter Simons, President of the Supreme Court of Leipsic. "Mr. Beck," says Dr. Simons, "has very definitely shown himself to be a friend of Great Britain and France. He is no friend of Germany's. Nevertheless, I believe that Mr. Beck has performed an act of friendly service to the German people in authorizing the present translation. He has thereby provided us with a mirror in which we may study our own political problems as a republic. If the German people in the trying years ahead can show the resourcefulness and resolution displayed by the American people in similarly difficult circumstances, Germany will succeed in finding the way out of her present political, economic and social perplexities." This amounts to taking several hundred leaves out of a former opponent's book. When a treatise on the American Constitution consisting of lectures originally delivered at Gray's Inn, London, is recommended for serious study and imitation to the German public, it may be asserted that certain phases of the war are definitely ended.

An Old Favorite.

Because this column has spoken with fond expectancy and admiration of the Spring revivals of old plays on Broadway, it feels itself entitled to point out that in one spectacular instance Europe is far ahead of us in this field. We have done very well by "East Lynne," "The Two Orphans," and Gilbert and Sullivan. We still have far to go in order to compete with the elaborate revival of the Roman Empire now being projected under Fascist auspices. It is the intention of the European promoters to revive Horatius at the bridge, Augustus, the Mediterranean Sea as a Roman lake, the noble cities now buried in the sands of Africa and other familiar features of what was once the greatest show on earth. Since the play will call for an enormous cast, it is presumed that the other nations will be permitted to play the part of the Barbarians who figure so prominently in Roman history. It is an ambitious enterprise. Mr. Morris Gest, who is in the habit of rebuilding entire auditoriums for the purpose of staging his latest productions, must now be watching with interest the preparations under way for getting the British Empire, France, Spain, Turkey, Greece, Egypt and other settings out of the way before putting on Julius Caesar's famous old masterpiece.

PEACE WITH TURKEY.

Views on the Bishops' Protest and Senator Borah's Reply.

To the Editor of The New York Times:

Mr. Borah's letter on the Lausanne Treaty is distinctly refreshing. It is a delight to see a question of such vital importance in our foreign relations placed in the clear light of justice, faced squarely and answered in accordance with possibility.

I number among my friends both Armenians and Turks. Incomprehensible as the fact may be to the average American mind, my Turkish friends number among their most intimate friends in Constantinople Armenians—and extremely charming Armenians. I am an American (since 1639!) of English descent, an Episcopalian and a Democrat. This to show that my natural sympathies are pretty well divided in the present controversy.

I changed my political affiliations because of my intense belief in the League of Nations. My faith has not been shaken by the so-called fiasco over the attempted admission of Germany—that has to do with "ways and means"—but Mosul is another matter. That has to do with the spirit. Granted one is dealing with a murderer (to point a moral), does one punish by stealing part of his purse? Christian and anti-Christian, we are much alike under the skin, and we have far to go to reach our common Father's goal. We'll get there quicker hand in hand.

The fine Bishops, Borah, the Armenians, the Turks, all of us desire peace. Borah points the quickest road to it. Had his letter been unsigned and unplaced by political allusions, with only its spirit to go by, I would have accredited it not to a political leader but to a leader of the great Church founded by Bruce Barton's "The Man Nobody Knows." It is a hopeful sign when the true spirit of the true church finds its way into politics.

Athens-on-Hudson, N. Y., April 7, 1926.

SENATOR BORAH'S POSITION.

To the Editor of The New York Times:

In his reply to Bishop Manning and the 109 other Bishops of the Episcopal Church who protested against ratifying the Lausanne Treaty, Senator Borah says: "It would be nothing less than folly to stand out and refuse to make a treaty because we cannot get a better treaty than other nations are willing to accept."

Not a week ago Mr. Borah was for standing out and refusing to ratify the Italian debt settlement, which we are assured is the best that can be secured. But of course we have no oil concessions in Italy.

Perhaps Mr. Borah does not know that the non-Christian nations with whom we have diplomatic and trade relations have not made a practice of evicting and murdering Christian minorities.

Mr. Borah says that he knows but two ways of exerting our humanizing influence: "either by force of arms—which I wholly reject." But during the debate on the World Court last January Mr. Borah admitted that there were times when even he felt that force was justified.

AN ARMENIAN VIEW.

To the Editor of The New York Times:

In connection with the protest of the 110 Bishops against the ratification of the Lausanne Treaty and the answer given them by Senator Borah, I feel that it is quite pertinent to consider for a moment what an Armenian thinks of the imminent decision in favor of or against ratification.

Now what have we as a basis for our claims? We have long passed that stage where a plea for justice will be considered on its own merits if there is no material advantage to be gained by a favorable decision. This is quite evident when we recall the words of Senator Borah in the letter addressed to Bishop Manning, wherein he says that "our religious, educational and business interests combine in asking that the treaty be ratified," and again that "whatever there is in this treaty is wholly to our advantage and in no respect to our disadvantage."

Against such a potent argument what do the lives of a million or so massacred Armenians count? A nightmare certainly gets on one's nerves when it repeatedly intrudes itself upon one's carefully laid out plans, and the best way to settle such disagreeable occurrences is to lay the ghost once for all. What advantage is there in supporting a supposedly lost cause? Why should not the United States follow the example of the other great powers, who, after using the Armenians unscrupulously to further their own aims, and dazzling them with promises, deserted them in the hour of settlement? What advantage would there be in carrying out the solemn promises of two Presidents, promises made solely in the interests of justice?

Let material interests for once bow before the interests of justice. Let the millions of drops of Armenian blood which has been shed outweigh the millions of drops of oil and other petty advantages which are to be gained by ratifying the treaty.

APRIL WALK.

"Softly," said the juniper;
"Careful," said the pointed fir;
White birches swayed as if to say,
"This way, this way."
Young ferns were close against the rocks,
And ground the color of a fox.
Underneath, the pine tree
Was smelling very pleasantly.

"Come," said the brown brook;
"Come," said the wind that shook
Ribbon willow boughs and slim
Alders by the water's brim.
Cold water purled around the stone:
A single bit of color shone
Where one dandelion came
To burn a golden April flame.

Now I remembered bitter days,
Cold and dark and barred ways;
And though I heard the stream call.
At first I would not go at all.
But I saw a robin there,
And then a spotted fish leaped where
The dark pool lies above the rack
Of rocks that hold the water back.

And the dandelion said "Come!"
And the willow boughs had some Small, insistent magic, so
I went where they told me to go.
I'd like to tell you what I heard
From stream and willow bough and bird,
But only their own speech will do
For things they have to tell to you.

Yet you may learn it any day
This time of year. Just put away
The weight of Winter, bend your ear
To any growing thing and hear
The clear instruction it will give—
Wisdom, rare and fugitive.
Life that broke and overflowed
Will lead you on an April road.

MILLER'S BODY LIES IN STATE TONIGHT

Tribute Will Be Paid to Actor in Little Church Around the Corner.

FUNERAL SERVICES TUESDAY

Members of Lotos Club and the Players to Be at Bier—The Honorary Pallbearers.

Funeral services for Henry Miller, the actor and producer, who died on Friday night, will be held Tuesday morning at 11 o'clock at the Little Church Around the Corner, in East Twenty-ninth Street. The time was fixed to permit Mr. Miller's daughter, Mrs. T. J. McCoy, to reach New York from Wyoming, her home.

The actor's body will lie in state at the church after 7 o'clock this evening. Members of the Lotos Club, the Players Club and the New York Athletic Club, to all of which the actor belonged, will participate in the funeral services, which will be conducted by Dr. Randolph Ray. Honorary pallbearers will be A. L. Erlanger, Otis Skinner, David Belasco, John Drew, Holbrook Blinn, Arthur Richman, A. E. Thomas, Arthur Hornblow Jr. and Paul Allen.

Interment will be in Greenwood Cemetery. Pending the arrival of Mrs. Miller, who is now in Europe, the body will be placed in a receiving vault.

HENRY MILLER JR. TALKS.

Expresses Belief That His Own Disgrace Hastened Father's Death.

SANTA ANA, Cal., April 10 (AP).—Henry Miller Jr., son of the noted actor who died last night in New York, expressed the belief from a cell in the county jail here today that his own disgrace had hastened his father's death.

Miller, who prior to being sentenced to Los Angeles to ten months in jail for narcotic law violations, pleaded that his father be spared the shame that would follow a sentence in the penitentiary, wept as he related to visitors how his first escapade had brought grief to his parents.

"It is a singular thing," Miller said, "that on the same day that I entered this jail I received a telegram from my father's agent advising me that he would not be able to open his new play, 'A Stranger in the House.' What a ghastly coincidence it is that the play should have such a name. I am the stranger in my father's house, but he never cast me out, despite long years of my social disgrace. God bless his soul!

"Father has not written me in many years, but he never lost interest in me, for his remittances reached me every month. He told me once he felt like turning on the gas for being responsible for my coming into the world. Because of the remorse I had brought him, I decided to kill myself. I tried, but surgeons saved me. It would have been better for all concerned had I succeeded. I failed and here I am in jail. I am sure that my plight hastened the death of my father."

Miller declared he did not know whether his mother was living, but if she was he would approach her "with his soul reborn" at the conclusion of his jail sentence.

FINANCIAL MARKETS

Prices Drift Idly in Narrow and Unimportant Trading—Bank Loans Decrease Sharply.

Market fluctuations yesterday were little changed from those which have been the rule all week. That is, trading was dull on an extremely light and unimportant scale, representing merely the ebb and flow of such small measure of speculative interest as remains. Strength in the railroad issues, particularly the shares of corporations possessing "merger possibilities," was one bright spot in the two hours of trading. As an instance of how the cross-currents are running, however, several units of the motor group were weak, two of them falling more than three points. Possibly when the month's market history is summed up, such days as yesterday in the stock market will have no place of importance at all. After such wild gyrations as took place in the market last month, however, such a period of calm and quiet is welcome if for no other reason than to give the country an opportunity to regain its normal perspective of security prices.

The excitement occasioned in Cuba by the run on several banks there had no effect whatever upon the market here and did not even cause weakness in the sugar shares, which might conceivably be most affected in case of the development of a serious situation. Bankers here express the opinion that the situation will be well in hand by the opening of business tomorrow and that there is no particular cause for alarm regarding conditions in that country.

An event of more than passing interest in Wall Street, although it had no direct effect upon the market, but rather indicated in a substantial manner one phase of the recent drastic liquidation, was the return of the Associated Banks to a surplus reserve after these institutions had in the previous week reported the largest deficit in actual reserve since the first week of March, 1925. This was evidently accomplished by the recalling of loans, as well as by the passing of the influence of monthly and quarterly settlements. Loans decreased by $119,776,000. The reserve item now stands at $19,691,700 through an increase during the week of $53,851,200 in reserve, which effectively wiped out the previous week's deficit of $34,159,500.

The continued falling off in unfilled orders of the United States Steel Corporation for the third successive month, as announced yesterday, doubtless forecasts a moderate decline, at least, in ratios of operation by plants. The month's decline was 236,000 tons, just about in line with expectations. This continued decrease in new business in hand serves to emphasize two outstanding developments which are characteristic of the iron and steel trade at the moment. First, that forward buying is on a moderate scale; second, that the insistence on early Spring deliveries of these heavy materials has speeded up the ratios of operation to what may be considered a somewhat abnormal pace, and that some let-down from this pace is imminent.

TOPICS IN WALL STREET.

Prices on the Stock Exchange were irregular during the two-hour session yesterday morning and trading was again on a small scale. The railroad shares held firm under leadership of carriers likely to figure in pending consolidations, and where declines were reported in this group they were generally fractional. Among the industrials the automobile stocks were weakest. Declines of 1 to 3 points or more were recorded in the motors, and some of these issues were within striking distance of the low levels touched during the market collapse last month. Hudson Motors reacted to 70¾ and closed with a net loss of 3¾ points for the day. Jordan was off 3⅝ points, having sold as low as 37. General Motors, Chrysler and Studebaker also were lower. Steel and equipment stocks were heavy, the decline in the former being due to reports of a further drop in unfilled orders, which was confirmed after the close of the market. At no time during the morning, however, was there any pressure to sell stocks, but a steady sagging tendency prevailed from the opening of business.

Steel Tonnage Reduction.

The United States Steel Corporation, soon after the close of the stock market yesterday, reported a reduction of 236,887 tons in forward orders at the close of March. This was about in line with expectations, predictions earlier in the week having been for a reduction of between 225,000 and 250,000 tons. Total orders carried on the books on March 31 aggregated 4,379,935 tons, still a comfortable margin, and compared with 5,033,364 tons at the close of 1925. The current total is the smallest since Oct. 31, and is approximately 500,000 tons less than the total at the close of the first quarter last year. The reduction is not considered surprising in view of the record breaking activity in the steel industry last month. Considering the production and shipment record last month, trade leaders are of the belief that new buying during March, based upon the daily average, was slightly larger than in February.

Week of Strength in Bonds.

With scarcely an exception domestic and foreign bonds moved up fractionally yesterday, closing a week marked by an almost uninterrupted advance. Trading was brisk for a short session and at the close many issues stood at their highest levels of the present year. With money cheap and the investment demand augmented by the recent heavy liquidation in the stock market it was apparent that the supply of high-grade investment bonds was less than the demand. This situation was accentuated by the comparatively small offerings of new bonds in the low-yield class. It was mostly in this type of security that the demand concentrated, though strength was shown throughout the list. The absorptive powers of the market were demonstrated by the prompt sale of a $65,000,000 public utility issue during the week and of a $25,000,000 City of Philadelphia issue. The available supply of United States Government obligations showed further signs of diminishing, and prices were firm all week.

Railroad Income and Wages.

Spokesmen for the Brotherhood of Railway Trainmen and the Order of Railway Conductors, which have wage demands pending on virtually all the railroads of the country with the exception of the Southern Railway, declare that the carriers are enjoying the most prosperous time of their 100 years of service and are well able to pay increased wages. Railroad executives are refuting the arguments with figures which show that the five years since the resumption of private control have yielded relatively smaller net returns than any other five years in the last quarter-century. Meanwhile the wage conference of the western roads and the employe representatives in Chicago has broken up without reaching any agreement and adjourned until May 3.

Valuation of the Carriers.

Two important cases are now pending in the Federal courts which have a definite bearing upon the future earnings of the railroads. The first, that of the Los Angeles & Salt Lake, in which the Federal District Court of California has ruled that the Interstate Commerce Commission can not appraise a railroad "for rate making purposes only," is now on its way to the United States Supreme Court. The other which is the suit brought by the Kansas City Southern in the Federal Court of the Western District of Missouri to enjoin the final valuation of its property made by the commission, was heard on March 29 and 30. The ruling of the courts in these cases, it is believed by railroad men, will substantially influence the income possibilities and credit position of the carriers.

Fate of Florida East Coast.

Railroad men feel that when consolidation of the carriers gets actively under way the Florida East Coast Railway will be added to the Atlantic Coast Line system which is now awaiting the clearing up of the unification question by Congress. Union of the Atlantic Coast Line and the Louisville & Nashville will be, as someone has said, merely the joining of two properties already one. Operating policies are essentially the same now and the physical union will be even stronger if the Commission approves a petition for the construction of a connection with the Carolina, Clinchfield & Ohio, jointly operated by the two roads. Addition of the Florida East Coast would make the system not only the richest in the country, but one of the largest.

Last Week's Movements of Gold.

Imports of gold last week, as reported by the Federal Bank of New York, were $24,000, and exports were $117,000. The exports went chiefly to Mexico.

You May Profit By This Suggestion

If you own bonds exempt from Federal Income Tax yielding around 4.00% to 4.50%, and derive little or no compensation from such exemption, the substitution of other conservative investments would increase your income substantially.

Public utility bonds and preferred stocks, which we recommend, evidence this fact. They yield from

5.00% to 7.00%

They are held by private investors, trustees and institutional investors.

236,887-TON DROP IN U. S. STEEL ORDERS

Announcement of Decrease in Unfilled Orders Precedes Fall in Common Stock.

SLUMP HAD BEEN EXPECTED

After Record Production in Industry in March, Recession From High Pace Was Foreseen.

A reduction of 236,887 tons in the volume of unfilled orders carried on the books of the United States Steel Corporation as of March 31 was announced shortly after the close of business on the New York Stock Exchange yesterday. This reduction is in line with estimates made earlier in the week which called for a drop of between 225,000 to 250,000 tons. The common stock of the corporation dropped to around 120 yesterday, probably in connection with discounting the reduction in orders reported yesterday.

A total of 4,379,935 tons of forward orders was carried on the corporation's books at the close of March. This is the smallest total reported for any month since last October and compares with forward orders aggregating 5,033,364 reported on Dec. 31, 1925. Compared with March last year the current total is smaller by approximately 500,000 tons.

According to opinion expressed in the steel trade yesterday the amount of orders carried on the company's books is still a comfortable margin and assures active operations for some time to come. Attention was called to the fact that all production records for the steel industry were broken last month when new high records were established. It is expected that operations will continue on a large scale in the immediate future, but trade leaders declare it is natural to expect some reduction in activity in the near future, as the pace set last month cannot be maintained indefinitely.

No figures were available yesterday as to the estimated amount of shipments from the corporation's mills last month or as to the amount of new business placed with the company. In view of the figures published by the American Iron and Steel Institute earlier in the week, showing that the production of steel ingots in March broke all previous records, it was assumed that production figures for the Steel Corporation also established a new high monthly record. In connection with this the opinion was expressed that the reduction of only 236,887 tons in the Steel Corporation's orders, compared with record-breaking activity last month, indicates that new buying for March, based upon a daily average, was larger than the new buying reported for February.

The following table shows the unfilled orders reported by the United States Steel Corporation at the close of each month for three years:

	1926.	1925.	1924.
March	4,379,935	4,863,564	4,782,807
February	4,616,822	5,284,771	4,912,901
January	4,882,759	5,037,323	4,798,429
	1925.	1924.	1923.
December	5,033,364	4,816,676	4,445,230
November	4,581,780	4,631,969	4,368,584
October	4,109,182	3,925,270	4,672,825
September	3,717,297	3,473,780	5,053,750
August	3,512,803	3,289,577	5,414,663
July	3,539,467	3,187,972	5,910,763
June	3,710,458	3,262,505	6,380,261
May	4,049,800	3,528,089	6,981,351
April	4,446,568	4,208,447	7,288,569

The high record for forward business was 12,180,000 tons at the close of April, 1917, soon after the United States entered the war.

COPPER OUTPUT FOR MARCH.

Lake Smelters Approach Spring With No Surplus.

Special to The New York Times.

BOSTON, April 10.—March production of refined copper in the Michigan district was 13,885,000 pounds; Calumet and Hecla Consolidated and its subsidiary, Isle Royale, produced 9,050,000 of this total.

Production of new Cornelia for March was 7,231,560 pounds against 5,972,400 in February and 6,489 in March, 1925.

Output of Calumet and Arizona for March was 4,020,000 pounds against 3,590,000 in February and 3,416,000 in March a year ago.

The copper produced by the East Butte Mining Co. in the year 1925 was 6,481,165 pounds at a cost of 14.35 cents per pound.

A rich seam, found originally in the Mohawk, extends through the Seneca property and this area is about to be reached on the fifth level.

For the first time in history, save for the war period, the lake smelters are approaching Spring with no surplus copper on hand.

The Tennessee Copper and Chemical Company reports for the year 1925, production of 13,625,707 pounds of copper.

March output of the Katanga Copper Company of Africa totalled 14,452,480 pounds of copper, which compares with 13,574,560 pounds in February and 16,175,040 pounds in March, 1925.

Shipments of ore to the mill of Seneca Copper Company in March averaged 896 tons daily against 689 in February and 686 in January.

BROKERS TO DINE APRIL 16.

Association of Stock Exchange Firms to Meet at Hotel Astor.

More than 1,000 members of the Association of Stock Exchange Firms and their guests will attend the annual meting of the body at the Hotel Astor, Friday night, April 16. Attendance is limited to members of firms of Stock Exchange houses, who will have as their guests officers of banks, trust companies and corporations.

United States Senator Irvine L. Lenroot and Attorney General Albert R. Ottinger, of New York, will be the guests of honor. Every Stock Exchange house and financial institution in Wall Street will be represented, as well as many out-of-town exchange houses.

Colonel Henry Rogers Winthrop, President of the Association, will preside at the dinner.

Missouri Offers $7,500,000 Bonds.

State and municipal financing scheduled for the coming week is led by the State of Missouri, which is offering a block of $7,500,000 of road bonds. Among the cities issuing loans is Louisville, Ky., whose offering consists of two issues, totaling $3,500,000. Other cities and counties offering issues during the week are Cincinnati, $990,000; East Baton Rouge, La., $500,000; Mitchell, Neb., $150,000; Muscogee County, Ga., $660,000; Manatee County, Fla., $1,050,000, and Stephens County, Ga., $100,000.

Insurance Organization to Dine.

The first annual dinner of the General Brokers' Association of the Metropolitan District, an organization formed for the advancement of interests of the insurance business, will be given next Thursday night at the Hotel Astor. Terence F. Cunneen will be the chief speaker.

FOREIGN EXCHANGE.

French and Belgian Francs Rally as the Continent Reverses Its Position—Sterling Firm.

Where there had been pressure on Friday by European operators, yesterday witnessed a reversal in the position of the Continent toward the French and Belgian francs, and both rose sharply on the basis of higher cables from abroad. Short covering was said to account in part for the rally, while another reason advanced was a better feeling with regard to the granting of a Belgian loan. At the day's top the French franc showed a gain of 3½ points, at 3.44½ cents, while the Belgian unit was 11 points up, at 3.56⅝ cents.

Sterling was firm around $4.85⅞, around which it moved narrowly last week. Italian lire also ruled steady and unchanged. Spanish, Swiss, Holland and the Scandinavians were dull. New lows were reached in the Chinese exchanges, but the Japanese yen improved to 46.25 cents, notwithstanding the publication of the foreign trade statement for the first ten days of the month, which showed a big increase in import balance. South Americans were lower.

NOSTRAND BANK ELECTS.

James P. Kelly Heads New Brooklyn Financial Institution.

The incorporators of the new Nostrand Bank, to be located at Avenue U and East Fifteenth Street, Brooklyn, elected the following permanent executives yesterday: President, James P. Kelly; Vice Presidents, Philip J. Termini and William F. Heide; Vice President and cashier, William S. Germain.

Mr. Kelly has been a large real estate operator in Flatbush. He has also been active in banking affairs, having been until recently a director and Vice President of the West End Bank of Brooklyn. He is a member of the Advisory Committee of the Greenwich Bank and has also served as a director of the Old Colony State Bank.

Mr. Termini is a lawyer and Mr. Heide is one of the owners and managing directors of Henry Heide, Inc., candy manufacturers. Mr. Germain was one of the organizers of the West End Bank of Brooklyn and until recently served as its cashier. It had been intended to open the bank April 15, but owing to delays in the completion of the premises the opening has been deferred to May 15.

American Trust Leases Office Site.

The American Trust Company acquired a lease yesterday on property at 57 Bay Street, St. George, S. I., from the Staten Island Edison Company to be opened about July 1 as a temporary office until permanent offices are opened at 30 Bay Street. A twelve-story building on the latter site will house the trust company and the New York Title and Mortgage Company, with which it is affiliated.

$1,000,000,000 BANK MERGER NOW READY

Consolidation of Chase National and Mechanics and Metals in Effect Tomorrow.

TO OPEN A NEW BRANCH

Park Avenue Chase Office to Take Over M. & M. Madison Avenue Accounts and Staff.

The merger of the Chase National Bank and the Mechanics and Metals National Bank will go into effect tomorrow, creating an institutions with total resources of more than a billion dollars and a capital structure of more than $90,000,000. Coincident with the formal completion of the merger, a new branch of the Chase National Bank will be opened tomorrow morning, at 510 Park Avenue.

The Advisory Committee of the new branch is composed of A. J. Biddle Jr., Mrs. Jonathan Bulkley, Edward L. Burrill Jr., Middleton S. Burrill, Harry C. Cushing 3d, V. Everit Macy, Mrs. Charles E. F. McCann, Miss Anne Morgan, Mrs. John T. Pratt, Noah C. Rogers, Miss Mary Vail Andress, Robert L. Clarkson, Gates W. McGarrah, John McHugh, Reeve Schley, Carl J. Schmidlapp and Albert H. Wiggin.

The branch will contain a women's department, under the direction of a woman. The safe deposit facilities will be among the most complete outside of the Wall Street district, the vault having a capacity of 5,000 boxes. In addition to its general banking facilities, the branch will offer complete service in its trust, investment and foreign departments. There will be a ticker service to keep customers informed during the day of important financial and business events.

The business of the Merchanics and Metals National Bank branch at Madison Avenue and Sixtieth Street will be transferred to the new branch and the entire staff will be taken over. This will be the only branch of the Mechanics and Metals bank to change its location in connection with the merger.

The merger of the banks was announced Feb. 12, and was ratified by the stockholders last month. The enlarged board of directors of the combined institution, which will be known as the Chase National Bank of New York, will represent a wide range of business interests and experience. Albert H. Wiggin, now Chairman of the board and President of the Chase National, will be Chairman of the board of the consolidated bank; Gates W. McGarah, Chairman of the board of the Mechanics and Metals, will be Chairman of the Executive Committee, and John McHugh, President of the Mechanics and Metals, will be President of the combined institution. The present principal offices of both banks will be retained at 57 Broadway and 20 Nassau Street and the branch system throughout Manhattan and Brooklyn will be continued.

The New York State Banking Department announced yesterday approval of a change in location of the principal office of the Chase Safe Deposit Company from 320 Broadway to 25 Broadway and for the location of branch offices of the safe deposit company throughout Manhattan.

The Mechanics and Metals National Bank, which now bears its name, was one of the oldest banks in New York, having been founded in 1810. Since its formation its capital has been increased from $1,500,000 to $10,000,000. It had twelve branches in the city. The Chase National was established in 1877, since when its capital has increased from $300,000 to $20,000,000 and its deposits from $14,738 to $564,608,785. The consolidated bank is second in resources only to the National City Bank among the banks of the United States.

BANK DEPARTMENT RULINGS.

Corn Exchange and Manhattan Company Branches Authorized.

The weekly bulletin of the Banking Department of the State of New York issued yesterday says that the Corn Exchange Safe Deposit Company, 13 William Street, has been authorized to open a branch office on or after May 16 in the New York Telephone Building, Barclay and West Streets.

An authorization certificate was issued to the Goldwyn Investmnet Corporation on April 8 to do business in this city. The company has a capital of $100,000. The Grocers' Credit Union, 1673 Lexington Avenue, received approval to change its place of business from 1,673 Lexington Avenue to 1,429 Fifth Avenue and the Chattle Loan Society from 289 Fourth Avenue to 45 East Seventeenth Street.

The Manhattan Company, 40 Wall Street, applied on April 5 for permission to establish a branch office at 190-02 Jamaica Avenue, Hollis, in the borough of Queens.

Individual Debits Lower for the Week But Exceed 1925 Week by $2,374,000,000

Special to The New York Times.

WASHINGTON, April 10.—Debits to individual accounts, as reported to the Federal Reserve Board for banks in leading cities for the week ending April 7 aggregated $13,368,000,000 or about one-half of 1 per cent. less than the total of $13,437,000,000 reported for the preceding week.

New York City reported a reduction of $536,000,000, Chicago of $76,000,000 and Philadelphia of $19,000,000.

The principal increases were: Boston, $103,000,000; New Orleans, $47,000,000; Cleveland, $42,000,000; Los Angeles, $23,000,000 and St. Louis $20,000,000.

As compared with the week ending April 8, 1925, the debits are larger by $2,374,000,000 or 21.6 per cent. Increases are shown for most of the more important centres, the largest increases being as follows:

New York City, $1,614,000,000; Boston, $151,000,000; Chicago, $86,000,000; Cleveland, $66,000,000; San Francisco, $53,000,000; New Orleans, $46,000,000; Detroit, $43,000,000; Los Angeles, $25,000,000 and Newark and Philadelphia, $22,000,000 each.

Aggregate debits for 141 centres for which figures have been published weekly since January, 1919, amounted to $12,557,120,000, as compared with $12,742,794,000 for the preceding week and $10,290,229,000 for the week ending April 8, 1925.

Debits to individual accounts were reported to the Federal Reserve Board for banks in 258 centres, all of which are included in this summary by Federal Reserve districts:

94 CORPORATIONS IN $10,000,000 CLASS

Five Earned Over $90,000,000 Last Year—A. T. & T. Leads All, Bank Journal Writer Says.

Reports of earnings for 1925 of $10,000,000 or more have been made by ninety-four American corporations, with five corporations leading the group placing their income from $90,000,000 to well over $100,000,000, according to an article on "The Big Money Makers of America," by Reuben A. Lewis Jr., in the American Bankers' Association Journal.

The five corporations which head the group are, according to the article, The American Telephone and Telegraph Company with $107,000,000; General Motors Corporation, $106,000,000; the Ford Motor Company, whose earnings are not published, but estimates of $100,000,000 to $115,000,000 for 1924 suggest its position for 1925 (the estimated earnings of Ford were given as $94,560,397 last week); the United States Steel Corporation, $90,000,000, and Standard Oil of New Jersey, whose profits are not yet given out but which is ranked with the leaders.

"There never has been a time," writes Mr. Lewis, "when there were so many corporations of the United States in the $10,000,000-a-year-or-better class. Since 1921, memorable for losses, the ranks have grown larger. That year there were thirty-two, in 1922, fifty-one; in 1923, sixty-nine, and in 1924, seventy-five.

"With business moving along more briskly during 1925, the earnings of representative corporations were nearly a third larger than for the preceding year."

Mr. Lewis pointed out that Federal statistics show not more than two-thirds of all corporate enterprises in the country, large and small, have made anything in the best years. On the average 60 per cent. report a net profit, the remaining 40 per cent. report net loss. However, the article stated, a new record was set for 1925, when twenty-seven corporations cleared the $20,000,000 mark, as compared with twenty for 1924 and 1923, nineteen for 1922 and fourteen for 1921. Twenty corporations entered the $10,000,000-or-better class during last year.

The big money-making group of 1925 contained no bank, Mr. Lewis showed, but this fact is not unusual, as not more than two banks out of 28,000 make as much as $10,000,000 a year. Also in ten other major industrial groups no one cleared the necessary amount to place it within the chosen group. Nine automobile companies were in the group, as were fifteen or more oil companies. One automobile body manufacturer reported a profit of $15,000,000.

GENERAL MOTORS EXHIBIT.

Will Open Permanent Show of All Products at Atlantic City in July.

A permanent exhibit of all the products of the General Motors Corporation will be open to the public on the Steel Pier at Atlantic City in July, according to Alfred P. Sloan Jr., President of the corporation. This is the first time in the history of the concern that a permanent display of all its products will be made.

The display will be contained in 22,000 square feet of space and will include six lines of General Motors passenger cars, Chevrolet, Pontiac, Oldsmobile, Oakland, Buick and Cadillac. Further than these will be shown the GMC truck, the products of the Yellow Truck and Coach Manufacturing Company, the Fisher Body Company, the Frigidaire Company, Delco Farm Lighting Systems and Power Plants and numerous General Motors parts and accessories. At night the exhibit will be illuminated by an animated electric sign 65 feet in length and also by a fixed electric sign 290 feet long.

MUSIC MASTER CO. RECEIVER

Radio Concern Files Petition of Involuntary Bankruptcy.

PHILADELPHIA, April 10 (AP).—Temporary receivers were appointed by Federal Judge Thompson today for the Music Master Corporation, manufacturers of radio receivers and loud speakers. The action was taken after a petition of involuntary bankruptcy had been filed by creditors with claims aggregating $21,771.

Directors of the corporation admitted its insolvency, giving "general depression" in the radio industry as the cause. Counsel for the concern estimated its liabilities at $1,200,000 and assets between $300,000 and $400,000.

Melville G. Baker, President of the Penn National Bank, and David S. Ludlow, former President of the Auto Tire Sales Company, were appointed temporary receivers under a joint bond of $50,000. Application for permanent receivers will be made later.

BARNSDALL QUARTERLY NET.

$1,500,000 Thus Far This Year Equaled $1.30 a Common Share.

Net earnings of the Barnsdall Corporation for the first quarter of this year were $1,500,000, after depreciation, depletion and federal taxes, equivalent to $1.30 a share on the 1,148,536 shares of combined A and B common stock outstanding.

According to the balance sheet as of Feb. 28, cash on hand exceeded $5,300,000, while working capital totaled $9,312,000, the ratio of quick assets to quick liabilities being better than six for one. The corporation's cash alone was more than enough to cover its liabilities, with the exception of the fifteen-year 6 per cent. debentures and the capital stock.

AGAINST FRENCH OIL PLAN.

Russian Magnate Declares Government Monopoly Impossible.

Copyright, 1926, by The New York Times Company.
Special Cable to THE NEW YORK TIMES.

PARIS, April 10.—The Russian oil king, M. Goukassoff, who is attending the Russian National Congress in Paris, although he has not studied the French Chamber's discussion of the proposed import monopoly on crude oil and derived products, says that he does not see how it is possible to put such a scheme into operation, because of the technical and other difficulties.

"The oil game is a delicate and intricate game," he said today, "and its organization is so individualistic compared with other forms of production that it cannot be interfered with without everything going wrong.

"At any rate, it would be entirely impossible for the Soviets to become the sole suppliers of the French monopoly, and American oil would be continuously needed. Therefore, it would be dangerous to try to modify the existing organizations.

"Far from being cheaper, or a source of revenue, gasoline would increase in price, and the officials at the head of the monopoly would face a heavy deficit and the distribution system would be paralyzed."

M. Goukassoff was the principal oil magnate in the Baku field until the Russian revolution.

NEW BANK PERMITS ASKED.

Woodside National In Queens Is Among the Applicants.

Special to The New York Times.

WASHINGTON, April 10.—Applications to organize have been received by the Controller of the Currency from the Seaford National Bank of Seaford, N. Y., capital $25,000, through Frank W. Raynor of Seaford, and the Woodside National Bank of New York City, capital $200,000, through R. Leslie Smith of 209 Steinway Avenue, Long Island City.

Formal announcement was made that the Chase National Bank of New York, capital $20,000,000, and the Mechanics and Metals National Bank of New York, capital $10,000,000, have consolidated under the corporate title of the Chase National Bank of the City of New York, with a capital stock of $40,000,000, and the National Bank of Charlottesville, Va., capital $400,000, and the Farmers and Merchants National Bank of Charlottesville, capital $100,000, have consolidated under the title of the National Bank of Charlottesville, with a capital stock of $500,000.

LOOK FOR INCREASED QUARTER'S EARNINGS

Wall Street Expects the Leading Industrials to Report Good Gains.

INDICATIONS ARE FAVORABLE

Steel, Copper, Motors and Carriers Among Industries Believed to Have Done Well.

The earnings statements of many leading industrial and railroad corporations will be published within the next few weeks. These reports are awaited with keen interest in the financial district, because of the recent sharp breaks in the stock market, accompanied by reports that business was slowing down in many lines.

Judging from predictions made in the financial district during the last few days, however, the forthcoming statements are expected to make a more favorable showing than during the corresponding period last year, and in some instances new high records are looked for. In the steel, copper and automobile industries the earnings are expected to be favorable, and the weekly car loadings figures indicate a good showing by the railroads.

The United States Steel Corporation and the leading independent organizations in the steel industry will issue their quarterly statements before the end of the month. Although new buying in the steel industry since the turn of the current year has not been up to expectations, the quarter's production by the leading companies will establish a new high record.

The profits of most of the companies are expected to be considerably larger than in the corresponding period last year. This, notwithstanding the selling prices of steel, is substantially below the average. The increased profits, however, result from improvements installed recently which have resulted in a material reduction in the cost of producing finished steel.

No reliable estimate has thus far appeared concerning the Steel Corporation's report on its common stock, but the corporation's profits for the quarter are expected to be larger than for any similar period in some time.

The Republic Iron and Steel Company is expected to show earnings of $3 a share on the common stock.

The Bethlehem Steel Corporation is expecting earnings of about $2.75 a share on the common stock. This would compare with about $1.67 a share in the first quarter of last year. If the earnings of these two companies continue on the present scale it is expected that both will resume dividend payments on the common stock before the end of the year.

It has been predicted that the net profits of the General Motors Corporation for the first quarter would establish a new high quarterly record. If this prediction materializes it will be recorded as remarkable in financial circles, in view of the many pessimistic statements concerning conditions in the automobile industry.

Favorable reports also are expected from the copper industry. Several of the smaller companies have already resumed dividends.

The American Smelting and Refining Company, the largest unit in the industry, does not issue quarterly statements, its reports being released only half yearly. This company surprised the industry with earnings of approximately $20 a share on its common stock in 1925, but according to recent information the 1926 earnings are running ahead of last year and during the first quarter were better than $6 a share on its common.

The statements of the leading mail order houses and chain store companies for the first quarter are much in line with the reports coming from the manufacturing industries. It was reported during the recent stock market collapse that the sales of these organizations had fallen off sharply compared with last year. The statements of sales during the first week of the current month, however, did not bear out these reports.

TELLS HOW FLORIDA FREIGHT WAS MOVED

Car Service Division Executive Details Methods Used to Ease Congestion.

RUSH CAME TOO QUICKLY

Carriers' Expansion Program Not Far Enough Along to Cope With the Demand.

It is now possible for the first time, according to M. J. Gormley, Chairman of the Car Service Division of the American Railway Association, to give a complete picture of the measures taken to relieve the Florida freight congestion which resulted from an unprecedented demand in the latter part of 1925 upon the railroads which serve that State.

Although the Florida carriers adopted a large expansion program three years ago in anticipation of a greatly increased demand upon their facilities, they were unable to increase their capacity fast enough to meet the Florida growth.

There were three distinct phases, Mr. Gormley said, which presented themselves at the peak of congestion. These were the need for definite control over the volume of freight traffic moving into Florida, organization on the part of the public and the carriers to divide the available transportation equally and the necessity of improving the transportation capacity for the current handling of additional business.

The necessary transportation control was brought about by the so-called State-wide embargo, effective Oct. 29, and applying to all carload commodities except foodstuffs. The distribution of available transportation called for a definite reorganization on the part of the shipping public and receivers of the State, and was brought about by the organization of the Florida Division of the Southeast Shippers' Advisory Board. The increase in transportation capacity is being brought about now by the completion of the improvement programs begun by Florida railroads.

The Florida division of the Southeast Advisory Board, Mr. Gormley said, was organized so as to represent not only the production and shipment of commodities from that State but also to create and interpret a definite plan for handling of business moving into Florida under the embargo. This organization was headed by R. Hudson Burr, Chairman of the Florida Railroad Commission.

The Director of the Bureau of Service of the Interstate Commerce Commission and his representatives devoted several weeks in cooperation with the railroads and receivers of freight to bring about prompter unloading by receivers and more satisfactory handling by the railroads in the various terminals. In an endeavor to make available all existing routes, the Commission issued an order which permitted, if necessary, the disregarding of shippers routings and the diversion of freight from a line that might be congested to an open route if one were available.

Fourteen commodity committees were established representing producers and shippers of Florida, similar to the committees in all shippers' advisory boards. From a receiver's standpoint the State was divided into ten terminal districts, each under a chairman.

As a result of the improvement in the situation that followed the organization of the various interests the American Railway Association was able to announce two substantial modifications of the embargo.

The first was on Feb. 22, when it was announced that only building material, automobiles and trucks, and household goods would be subject to the embargo. The second, on March 26, removed the restrictions on carload shipments entering Jacksonville. The embargo was also modified on all commodities consigned to points south of Jacksonville, with the exception of brick, cement and building material.

BUSES REPLACE CAR LINE.

Hackensack-to-Fairview Change Approved—Stock Permits Issued.

Special to The New York Times.

TRENTON, N. J., April 10.—The Public Utility Commission authorized the Public Service Railroad Company today to abandon trolley car service between Hackensack and Fairview. The board approved the operation of twelve motor buses over the same route.

The commission fixed April 22 as the date for a hearing in Newark on whether the Jersey Central Power and Light Company or the Eastern New Jersey Power Company shall serve consumers in the territory around Baileys Corner, in Monmouth County.

Several applications for permission to issue stock were approved. The Jersey Central Power and Light Company will issue $1,400,000 in preferred stock and $328,500 in gold bonds.

Other applications were approved, as follows: New Jersey Water Company, $200,000 first mortgage bonds; $30,000 preferred stock and $20,000 common stock; Easton Gas Works, $310,000 second mortgage bonds; New Jersey Power and Light Company and the Boston Gas Light and Improvement Company sale to the Pitkin Utilities, Inc., of all of the capital stock and $79,000 of the principal amount of bonds of the Boston Company. Laurel Springs Water Supply Company, $40,000 first mortgage bonds and $1,800 of capital stock.

BUSINESS CONDITIONS BETTER IN AUSTRIA

Drop in Unemployment Seems to Mark a Turning of the Economic Tide.

VIENNA RUSHES BUILDING

Construction of City Tenements Furnishes Jobs and Also Relieves the Housing Shortage.

The economic tide, aided by seasonal developments, seems to have turned in Austria and the moderately optimistic predictions for 1926 sent out from Vienna by American correspondents during Christmas week appear to have been justified. Judging from reports in late copies of Austrian and German newspapers, the republic is capable of standing on its own financial legs and the League of Nations need have no fear that when it withdraws Dr. Alfred Zimmermann from his job as Austria's financial dictator next July, the canny Dutchman's return to Holland will be followed by a crash.

One of the most encouraging signs of improvement was a drop during the latter half of February of about 6,000 in the number of persons receiving unemployment benefits, reducing the total to some 225,000. For some time the army of the unemployed had been increasing at the rate of from 30,000 to 45,000 a month. In the first half of February the increase fell to 7,000 and then it ceased. An important factor in haltin , the increase in unemployment and turning the tide in Vienna, where the decline in the number of jobless workers was 2,125 during the last two weeks of February, reducing the total in the capital to 97,295 was the resumption of building operations on a large scale, due both to better weather and the anxiety of the city administration to get its home and public building construction program for 1926 under way.

The decline in unemployment was still faster during the first half of March, the total being reduced to 207,-975, of whom 93,293 were in Vienna.

For the double purpose of relieving the housing shortage and providing work for the unemployed, the city has speeded up its home building so effectively that the 25,000 dwellings scheduled to be completed in 1928, under the terms of the resolution voted by the Board of Aldermen in September, 1923, will be finished at least a year sooner. It is expected that the 5,894 dwellings in municipal tenements and the 500 homes in one and two-family house developments in the suburbs still remaining to be constructed will all be begun this year and completed early in 1927. The city's budget for 1926 calls for the expenditure of about 162,-000,000 schillings (worth 14 cents each) in construction work of all kinds and the purchase of supplies. Most of this money will be spent in ways calculated to diminish unemployment and be of service to the community. Parks, streets and schools are especially favored by the Vienna City fathers.

Immigration Barred, Emigration Aided

Other recent steps toward cutting down unemployment were the enactment of a law by the Austrian National Assembly, effective since Jan. 1, barring the importation of foreign workers of any sort unless it can be shown that there is no domestic labor of the kind required available, and the promotion by the National Government and the City of Vienna of systematic emigration to Russia and South America.

Foreign wage-earners already working in Austria are not affected by the ban on employment of foreigners and aliens residing in the republic since Jan. 1, 1923, and enjoy the same working status as citizens. Despite sharp opposition by the Socialist Deputies, the Clerical and Agrarian elements managed to attach an amendment to the bill allowing the Government to exempt agricultural laborers from the ban, but a similar provision exempting domestic servants was blocked. To appease the Social Democrats, the Government has promised not to apply the clause admitting farm workers to the Burgenland Province, from which many such workers have to emigrate every season to seek employment abroad.

Under the emigration promoting regulations the National Government is to give to the cooperative association of ex-service men handling the transfer of jobless Austrians and their families to the concession granted to them in the Kirghiz Republic 800 schillings for every emigrant who is now drawing unemployment benefits. The City of Vienna is adding a like sum in the case of emigrants living in the capital and, furthermore, is giving an additional 1,000 schillings to the cooperative for every apartment (of at least two rooms) released by the departure of these emigrants and placed at the disposition of the municipal housing office.

The first batch of emigrants, 205 in number, left for the "promised land" the first week of March and another group is due to depart in April. The land granted to the emigrants is to be theirs for twenty years on a lease, and $125 is to be deposited by the cooperative for each member of the colony. The National Government has appropriated 600,000 schillings to facilitate emigration to Brazil, despite the somewhat gloomy stories about working conditions in that country occasionally received in Austria and Germany from would-be settlers.

Adverse Trade Balance Reduced.

Austria's adverse trade balance in 1925 was $134,000,000, against $208,000,-000 the year before, according to a report by United States Commercial Attaché Groves of Vienna. The recent commercial agreement concluded with Hungary is expected to help reduce the unfavorable balance still further this year and the ever-increasing use of water power to generate electricity for the Austrian railroads is also playing an important part by cutting down coal imports. In 1925 the cut in coal consumption was 13 per cent., despite an increase in the freight traffic of 14 per cent.

Total imports last year amounted to $412,000,000, against $488,000,000 in 1924, while exports totaled $278,000,000, a slight decrease from the previous year in value, but a 20 per cent. increase in volume. There was a material gain in exports of manufactured articles. Imports of American cotton last year were double those of 1924 and amounted to 28,000 metric tons, valued at $17,-000,000.

Vienna hotels did a little less business last year than in 1924, the number of registered guests having dropped about 4 per cent. to 483,786, of whom 171,063 were Austrians and the others foreigners.

While a number of Vienna theatres have announced that they will have to decline to renew their contracts with their actors which expire in June, owing to lack of funds and general bad conditions, the numerous dance halls are reported as doing more business than usual. Despite the undoubted hardships of the economic situation, the number of public dances given during the seventy-six days after Dec. 1 was 6,762, an increase of 885 over the figures for the same period in 1924-25.

The Vienna Arbeiter-Zeitung points out that these data only covered regular balls and festivities, to which the amusement tax was applied because of the dancing feature. There were many other thousands of couples dancing in restaurants, hotels and cafés upon which no special dancing control was exercised. The Socialist paper remarks that the great redeeming feature of the dance craze is that fact that the revenue collected from that source goes principally to the house building fund, thus helping furnish work to the unemployed and homes to persons in need of them.

OIL STOCK FRAUDS WARNING IN FLORIDA

Miami Bureau, Aroused by Fakers, Calls State's Possibilities in This Line Remote.

Unscrupulous promoters of oil securities have invaded Florida for the purpose of gathering in some of the dollars which the natives and others have accumulated as a result of the land and business boom which has been in progress in that section of the country during the past few years. As a result the Miami Better Business Bureau, Inc., has broadcast a warning to the public, not to give credence to the claims which these fakers present regarding Florida oil possibilities.

According to the Bureau, literature advising the purchase of oil leases or land about to be drilled is making its appearance, together with "new bait for suckers." Ballyhoo advertisements concerning the oil possibilities of Florida are being released. The untrained investor, it is pointed out, may fail to notice that such literature is being distributed by organizations which are offering the land for sale.

Herman Gunter, Florida State Geologist, also has issued a warning on this matter. "Prospecting for oil and gas, even in a State which is classed as productive," Mr. Gunter says, "is a very hazardous undertaking; and in a State like Florida it must be considered as wild-catting of the wildest type, which should be undertaken only by those who can afford to lose money so invested."

The oil possibilities of Florida says the Better Business Bureau, are remote as revealed by tests. In 1924 a well was sunk about 10 miles south of Tallahassee and abandoned at approximately 3,500 feet without a showing of either gas or oil.

The Florida law on the regulation of promotions is unique, says the Bureau. Under the law stock sales may be launched in the county where the well is being drilled provided the company maintains its principal office in the county.

PAPER OUTPUT INCREASED.

International Company Produced 504,000 Tons During 1925.

The International Paper Company during 1925 produced 504,000 tons of paper, 60 per cent. of which, or 310,000 tons, was newsprint paper, it was announced yesterday. The 1925 figure compares with 434,000 tons in the preceding year.

Production of high-grade paper during 1925 was increased approximately 11,000 tons, due chiefly to the acquisition of the Ticonderoga mill during the year. A total of 69,000 tons of bleached sulphite pulp and viscose were produced, and represented an increase over 1924, because these commodities are produced in the Kipawa and Hawkesbury Mills of the Riordan Company, which were purchased by International in 1925. The International expects, in view of its enlarged capacity and newly acquired properties, to produce a daily average of 2,300 tons of all grades of paper, with a total productoon of about 600,000 tons yearly.

ALPINE OUTPUT $1,229,000.

Vienna Company Shipped 34,000 Tons of Coal in March.

Shipments of products of the Alpine Montana Steel Corporation of Vienna for March totaled $1,229,000. For the first three months they were $3,402,000.

During the month 34,300 tons of coal were shipped to customers other than subsidiaries and 4,900 tons of pig iron and 28,100 tons of rolled iron left the plant. Total shipments of these three products for the quarter were 188,400 tons.

Production for March was 299,500 tons; for the quarter, 901,200 tons. Included for the month were 95,100 tons of coal, 103,300 tons of raw iron ore, 34,500 tons of pig iron, 35,500 tons of steel ingots, 29,600 tons of rolled iron and 1,500 tons of workshop manufactures.

HOME USE OF GAS DECLINES, HE SAYS

H. L. Doherty & Co. Manager Blames Bad Selling Methods for Drop in Electricity Also.

SEES UTILITY TRADE HURT

Many Stores Sell Appliances, Fail to Give Repair Service and Cause Complaints, He Asserts.

Bakeries, laundries and food stores are decreasing the amount of gas and electricity formerly consumed in the home, it was said recently by Thomas F. Kennedy, manager of the new business departments of Henry L. Doherty & Co., in a speech before the Middle West Division of the National Electric Light Association of Des Moines. The domestic consumption of the output of public utilities has, therefore, been curtailed, according to Mr. Kennedy, who recommended that the sales of domestic appliances be increased to meet this condition. He said, too, that the activities of steam and Diesel engine makers also were providing competition for utilities in the industrial field.

"Our industry must prepare to offer lower and lower rates," said Mr. Kennedy. "The public has bestowed on us monopolies and franchises with the expectation that the cost of our commodities would be decreased in a direct ratio to business added. Any delays by us in fulfilling these expectations will react in a most unfavorable way to our industry. The great modern fortunes of Woolworth, Kresge and Ford were founded on the basis of low cost, large volume and decreased selling price.

"Merchandising departments of the general run of central stations are inadequate to meet successfully the new conditions. We are limping along with an under manned and underpaid sales personnel trying to operate for a merchandising profit or a self supporting basis. The sales department of a central station functioning in the proper manner in which it was designed, should not be expected to operate at a merchandise profit, no more than the fire department of a municipality should be expected to turn in a profit.

"I believe that a large number of central station companies are leaving the sales of current consuming appliances to others who at the best can only be partially interested in the work entrusted to them. The druggist, the department store, the furniture dealer have only a minor interest in the sale of these devices, and only establish a department for their sale with a view of deriving a merchandise profit.

"In the case of these merchants the important question of servicing the appliance is entirely lost sight of. They refer all service and repair complaints to the central station, and I believe that this has a most unfavorable reaction to all concerned; the customer feels he has not been fairly treated, the dealer will doubtless lose other business from this customer for having sold an unsatisfactory appliance. The central station suffers the brunt of the entire transaction; the customer thinking that the power company should quickly repair and put in order appliances used on their lines. Appliances not thoroughly sold cause the customer to lose interest in all appliances.

"Central stations not merchandising appliances, I feel, are overlooking a most valuable asset; that of establishing favorable contact with customers through the sale, demonstration and maintenance of appliances. The industry needs standards of salesmanship equal to those of its engineering and finance. You can help your sales department by seeing that it receives tolerant and enthusiastic support.

"The first step in reorganizing the sales department of the central station is to elevate it to a point where it will at least equal any other department in your company. Interference from the non-selling or negative influences in the company should be eliminated. An unhampered sales department will be able properly to carry out company policies and sell services and appliances."

ELECTRICAL MARKET SLACK.

Prospects, However, are Good, Says Publications' Report.

Activity in the electrical industry was only moderate last week, but inquiries continued in good volume and no indication was noted of the abandonment of projects for which quotations were requested, according to Electrical World. A more or less marked decline in buying by central-station companies has been reported.

"The New England district reports a temporary lull in general market activity," Electrical World states. "Industrial electric heating continues to attract interest and negotiations for a number of installations are under way. Small motor sales are active. Business placed in the New York district has decreased somewhat, though the receipt of numerous inquiries is noted. Holding companies are steady buyers of line construction material.

"The electrification of textile mills in Northern and Western Georgia has contributed largely to the volume of business in the Southeast. The construction of a 66,000-volt transmission line for South Georgia will involve the purchase of material for more than 150 miles of line. Business in the Middle West is in good volume, while on the Pacific Coast many inquiries have been received, but few orders placed."

PEERLESS SALES A RECORD.

Auto Output Now 15,000 a Year—Durant Production Gains.

Sales and production of Peerless cars established a new high record in the history of the company, according to a statement issued yesterday by Edward Ver Linden, President of the Peerless Motor Car Corporation. "The company," he said, "is producing and selling cars at the rate of 15,000 per year. The profits for the first quarter were made in March. In the slow selling months, January and February, the company broke even. The profits for March aggregated $180,000."

Colin Campbell, Vice President of Durant Motors, Inc., announced yesterday that Star car factory sales for the first quarter of 1926 aggregated 31,695 cars, against 20,197 in the same period last year, a gain of 11,498 cars, or 57 per cent.

COSTS OF RAILROAD FUEL.

$29,126,599 in January for Coal and Oil of Class I Roads.

Class I railroads of the United States consumed 8,155,429 tons of fuel coal in January in operating freight and passenger service, at an average cost of $3.61 per ton, the Interstate Commerce Commission reports.

In January of last year the carriers used 9,209,430 tons, at an average cost of $2.81 per ton. The roads also used 180,621,590 gallons of fuel oil, at an average cost of $2.83 a gallon, as against 185,217,432 gallons in January, 1925, at an average cost of $2.57 cents. The total cost of coal and fuel oil in January was $29,126,599, as compared with $31,307,576 in January, 1925. The cost of coal per net ton in January ranged from $1.75 in the Pocahontas region to $4.59 in the New England region.

DENIAL BY STANDARD OIL.

Government Has Not Approved General Petroleum Merger.

Executives of the Standard Oil Company of New York yesterday said that "there is no truth in the rumor that acquisition of the properties of General Petroleum Corporation by Standard Oil Company of New York has been approved, officially or otherwise, by Government officials."

Opinion to the above effect was expressed in oil trade circles following reports that confirmation by Standard Oil executives was being held in abeyance pending some information from Government quarters. When it was learned that Standard Oil had approved the terms of the merger, which had been previously approved by General Petroleum Corporation officials, it was assumed that the consolidation had received the necessary approval.

TO ELECTRIFY IRELAND.

Siemens-Schuckert Co. of Germany Submits Plan to Free State.

A project to electrify the territory under its jurisdiction has been undertaken by the Free State Government of Ireland. The proposed system would extend from Sligo in the north to Cork in the south and from Killarney in the west to Dublin in the east. Power is to be generated on the Shannon River at Limerick.

The plan was submitted by the Siemens-Schuckert Company of Germany. It calls for a plant which would use Loughs Allen, Ree and Derg as storage and regulating reservoirs. Embankments would be built to prevent floods, and the capacity of the development would depend on the height of these embankments. Initial output would be 75,000 horsepower and ultimate output from 165,000 to 195,000 horsepower.

From Limerick a main transmission line will run through Maryborough to Dublin and another to Cork. Subsidiary lines will run along the southern coast from Cork to Dublin and others will extend to Foxford in the west and to points on the Ulster frontier on the north.

Foshay Acquires Midland Power.

The W. B. Foshay Company has purchased for about $90,000 all the properties of the Midland Power Company, which are in northwestern Minnesota, and supply the towns of Brooks, Mentor, McIntosh and Fosston. The properties are already connected with the Minnesota Electric Light and Power Company, a Foshay subsidiary. The entire Foshay system now serves 175 towns.

CAR AND ENGINE ORDERS.

Baldwin Gets Orders for 12 in South America—Roads in Market.

The Railway Age reports the following locomotive and car orders in the past week:

The Baldwin Locomotive Works has received orders for ten Mountain type locomotives from the Sorocabana Railway of Brazil and two Mikado type engines from F. C. del Guso y Santa Ana. An order for one 100-ton oil-electric locomotive has been placed by the Great Northern with the Ingersoll-Rand, General Electric and American Locomotive companies which cooperate in its manufacture.

An order for five combination passenger and baggage gas-electric motor cars has been place with the Electric-Motive Company by the Missouri Pacific. An inquiry is in the market from the Green Bay & Western for two Mogul and four consolidation type locomotives. Car inquiries include 100 cane cars by the South Porto Rico Sugar Company, thirty-five Ingoldsby dump cars from the Utah Copper Company, six flat cars from the General Electric Company, four flat cars for export from the Chile Exploration Company and four air-dump cars from the Missouri Pacific.

Rand Kardex Sales Up 16 Per Cent.

The Rand Kardex Bureau reports that sales in the January quarter were 16 per cent. in excess of the same quarter last year and that cash balance at the end of the quarter was $2,300,000. The company has no bank loans. The report for the year ended March 31 will show redemption of $350,000 of 7 per cent. debenture bonds of the Rand Kardex Company and of $450,000 of 5½ per cent. notes issued last January.

Are Stocks Discounting Bad Business?

There is talk of a collapse in Florida, of trouble with Mexico, the end of the building boom, the dangers of instalment buying, a slump in automobile sales, European uncertainties, and an impending business depression.

Has the decline in the stock market been due to these causes; is there unknown calamity ahead, or does the reason for the slump lie in an entirely different direction?

Answered in two bulletins just issued FREE

ARE STOCKS A BUY AGAIN?

A year ago, in March, 1925, the stock market lost over 11 points on the average. This collapse resulted in extraordinary buying opportunities.

Last month, March, 1926, the stock market again collapsed, losing over 15 points on the average. Individual declines have been substantially larger.

A BUY NOW?

Has this collapse brought sound bargain opportunities, like the collapse of a year ago? Can we look for a general substantial upward movement, into the Summer months of 1926?

The entire stock market situation is analyzed from the standpoint of answering these and other questions of equal import to investors, specific recommendations to take advantage of conditions ahead are made, in a new analysis just prepared to our clients.

HEAVY RAINS CREATE RECOVERY IN COTTON

Predictions of Unsettled Weather in Southwest Over Sunday Add Firm Tone.

ADVANCE OF 6 TO 11 POINTS

Week-End Realizing in July and October Eradicates Part of Improvement.

Heavy rains over the important producing sections of the Southwest brought a further recovery in the cotton market yesterday and prices closed at a net advance of 6 to 11 points. Active covering of outstanding obligations in the May position was again a feature of trading, and, as a result, that month gained more than later deliveries. With predictions of unsettled weather over Sunday, a firm tone ruled throughout the session, but week-end realizing in July and October at the close wiped out part of the earlier improvement.

News that over 50 stations in Texas, Oklahoma and Arkansas had received from an inch to over three inches precipitation the previous 24 hours reached foreign cotton circles before the local opening and Liverpool prices gained nearly a dollar a bale. This stimulated covering of May contracts which has become a daily feature of trading in the local market and May advanced to within a few points of 19 cents, highest levels of the week.

For a time both near and distant months rose equally but demand for May contracts later in the session coincident with scattered realizing on new crop months bought during the decline earlier in the week, served to widen the May premium. May sold about 60 points over July in closing dealings, after holding around 57 points throughout the morning.

The delegates to the second annual convention of the American Cotton Shippers Association at Atlanta voted against the adoption of a Southern warehouse system. Four recommendations were unanimously adopted for the broadening of the existing contract and improving the marketing machinery generally. First, the inclusion of seven grades as being of the value of low middling and properly deliverable on contract under the Lever law. Second, premiums for staple on cotton measuring 15-16ths of an inch and an inch in length. Third, certification by Government agents at the ten Southern spot markets upon which the Department of Agriculture bases New York differences, and, fourth, the appointment by both the New York and New Orleans Cotton Exchanges of a general control or business conduct committee.

FREIGHT CAR EXCHANGE SAVES $1,500,000,000

Cuts Rolling Stock Needs in Two and Reduces Many Other Investments.

The interchange of freight cars among railroads is estimated by railroad men to effect an annual saving of $1,500,000,000.

The handling of double the present rolling stock, which it is believed would be necessary if interchange were not in effect, would necessitate an increase of approximately 50 per cent. in motive power, requiring an investment of $670,000,000, with annual interest charges of $33,500,000. The increased cost of transporting these cars, it is estimated, would reached $1,000,000,000 a year, allowing $800,000,000 for wages and $200,000,000 for other transportation items.

Increased terminal facilities, it is said, and expansion of locomotive and car shop facilities would involve an additional expenditure of at least $3,500,000,000, which would bear an annual interest charge of $175,000,000, and the 50 per cent. additional rolling stock would represent an investment of at least $3,600,000,000, on which the interest charges would amount to $180,000,000 a year.

These items of extra expense aggregate $1,588,500,000, which would leave $111,500,000 of the $1,500,000,000 to care for the increased loss and damage, increased taxes and repair charges.

Official records show interchange of cars by railroads as far back as 1876. The actual date on which this arrangement started does not appear in the records, but it was evidently some time between the close of the Civil War and the year 1876. This interchange is now under the direction of the Car Service Division of the American Railway Association, the main office being located in Washington.

The United States is divided into fourteen districts for this purpose. Each one is in charge of a transportation specialist, who acts as manager of the territory assigned to him.

In addition to the Car Service Division the country is again divided into twelve districts. In each district there is a Regional Advisory Board composed of the leading shippers of every commodity in the territory. Through these boards the Car Service Division receives information three months in advance covering car requirements.

CRUDE RUBBER PRICES CONTINUE DOWNWARD

Losses Run to 50 Points for Early Dates and to 150 for More Distant Positions.

Reaction continued in the crude rubber market again yesterday, some of the more active deliveries going to the lowest prices thus far this year. Losses for the nearby positions ran from 40 to 50 points and the distant months from 30 to 150 points. It was a record-breaking Saturday, 150 contracts changing hands in the half-session.

May and July led the decline, the former selling down to 50 cents and the latter going through that figure. Factory buying came into the market just before the close, attracted by the low prices, and caused a slight recovery from the earlier lows. It was noted that the December option sold off to 47 cents, which was 3 cents under the London parity.

Range of prices for the more active deliveries follow:

	High.	Low.	Close.	Friday's Close.
May	52.00	50.00	52.00	52.40
June	51.40	51.50	51.50	51.90
July	50.90	49.50	50.00	51.40
Dec.	48.60	47.00	48.80	50.00

Other months closed: April 52.50, August 50.50, September 50.00, October 49.50, November 49.00, January 48.50, February 48.00. Spots were quoted at 53.00 nominal.

Prices pointed off in the Street trading as well, the leading grades reacting 1½ cents a pound for both spot and contracts. At present levels the market is scraping the bottom for the year to date, and brokers and dealers expressed the opinion that it will be difficult to restrain a further headlong plunge lower unless factory and trade buying shows a spurt.

Range of prices for the leading grades, spot and futures, follow:

WHEAT RESUMES ITS UPWARD MOVE

May Hard to Buy and Removal of Hedges Gives All Deliveries a Boost.

SEABOARD DEMAND SLOW

Elevator Buying Sends July Corn to a 4-Cent Premium—Oats Suffer Slight Loss.

Special to The New York Times.

CHICAGO, April 10.—May wheat is becoming harder to buy without affecting values and the removal of hedges against cash grain today advanced values readily to a new high for the week. The gain was 1⅞ cents, while the deferred deliveries were 1¼ to 1⅝ cents higher, July leading.

The buying by a broker, who usually acts for a number of the leading professionals, was responsible for the late strength.

A decidedly bullish construction was placed on the Argentine Government report which indicated an exportable surplus of around 85,000,000 bushels, after allowing for the quantity that will not be cleared on account of the poor quality. This figure is somewhat lower than estimated by American crop experts months ago.

On the basis of the world's takings up to April 3 importers' requirements for the balance of the season are estimated at about 210,000,000 bushels, of which exporting countries other than the United States are estimated to be able to furnish around 170,000,000 bushels.

Demand at the seaboard during the day was slow, with sales of 200,000 to 300,000 bushels in all positions.

Trading is working more into the July and September and out of the May. There is a large short interest in May by foreigners and hedgers, the latter against wheat in various positions throughout the world, which cannot be delivered in Chicago.

Crop reports from Northern Central Illinois were less favorable and Illinois, Missouri, Southern Indiana and Ohio prospects are none too good, with conditions ranging from 71 to 76, according to the Government reports.

The Kansas State report says that the condition of 87, as given by the Government report, is the same as in 1924, and with an acreage this year somewhat larger than two years ago, Kansas raised 159,000,000 bushels of wheat. This would indicate that it is possible to raise that much or more this year. Hessian fly prevails in a good many sections of Kansas.

Primary arrivals today were 619,000 bushels; week ago, 800,000; last year, 784,000. Shipments were 420,000 bushels; week ago, 525,000; last year, 560,000.

Shorts in elevator interests were the best buyers of corn, the latter taking May and selling July at 3⅞ cents to 4 cents premium for the July. Elevator interests bought May oats and sold July at ½ cent premium for the latter.

Corn closed ⅝@⅞ cent higher, while oats were unchanged to ⅛ cent lower.

The Government report on rye was taken as bullish. Foreigners have taken considerable rye of late without attracting attention.

The short interest in grains is heavy, particularly in the new crop and wheat futures, and the season for seeding spring wheat and oats is getting late.

HUGHES BACKS McKINLEY.

Ex-Secretary of State Lauds World Court and Senator's Stand On It.

CHICAGO, April 10 (AP).—Managers of the Senatorial primary campaign of Senator William B. McKinley made public tonight a statement by former Secretary Hughes commending the Senator's record and defending the World Court.

Mr. Hughes said:

"There is no reason for confusion or apprehension over the action of our Government in expressing its willingness to support the World Court. This action is in line with long established American policy.

"The interests of the United States as a practical matter will be safer in supporting and resorting to such a tribunal than in depending upon arbitration under our present agreements or under The Hague convention.

"The real question is whether we desire judicial settlement of our disputes, open to such settlement, which we are unable to adjust by methods of diplomacy. We cannot establish a permanent court of our own. It must be established by the nations of the world.

"Senator McKinley deserves commendation for his action in the Senate and for the support he has given the Administration in this and other matters."

FRANCO FLEES FRIENDS, DISAPPEARS IN MADRID

Hero of Seville-Buenos Aires Flight Finds the Homage of People a Martyrdom.

Copyright, 1926, by The New York Times Company. By Wireless to THE NEW YORK TIMES.

MADRID, April 10.—Commander Franco, the hero of the Seville-Buenos Aires flight, has disappeared, voluntarily fleeing many invitations to banquets.

After receiving at Huelva and Seville homage from the King and Government, almost all other Spanish cities announced new honors and began to plan banquets, fêtes and other outlets to the enthusiasm of the people, which finally became martyrdom for Commander Franco.

Fleeing such glories, he yesterday borrowed an airplane from an aviator friend and flew to Madrid, arriving in the early morning. His wife awaited him at Quatrovientos airdome, but nobody else was advised of his arrival.

In Madrid Commander Franco disappeared entirely and nobody knows his whereabouts.

Newspapermen and photographers, aviators and patriotic organizations of Spain and America, and other people are seeking him everywhere, but without success. It is believed he is desirous of resting and also fears becoming ill after his long round of vigorous receptions, and thus has put a cloudbank between himself and his well wishers.

It is understood he will turn up at Quatrovientos airdome at a dinner to be given by his aviator friends, and that he will then disappear for a month's vacation. Later he will return to Africa to resume his post as commander of a squadron there.

His companions are likewise resuming their posts. Mechanic Rada, however, is leaving the army to become an automobile salesman, having managed to reap a fortune of over a million pesetas from his trip—the only person who obtained a real profit from the flight.

FIND NEW METHODS OF JOINING METALS

General Electric Announces Results of Research in Two Laboratories.

Two new methods of producing ductile welds were announced recently by research scientists of the General Electric Company. One was developed in the Schenectady research laboratory by Dr. Irving Langmuir, and the other in the Thomson laboratory at Lynn, Mass., by Peter Alexander.

In both processes air is excluded from the metal by a stream of hydrogen or other gas. Thus the formation of oxides and nitrides in the metal through contact with the oxygen or nitrogen in the air is prevented and the fused metal is said to be as strong and ductile as the original metal.

In the process developed by Dr. Langmuir a stream of hydrogen is passed between two electrodes. The heat of the arc breaks the hydrogen molecules into atoms. The latter, in resuming the condition of molecules a short distance in front of the arc, liberate an enormous amount of heat, which makes the process more efficent than the usual welding methods. Since atomic hydrogen is a powerful reducing agent, it absorbs any oxides that otherwise might form and weaken the metal. It also makes possible the welding of alloys containing chromium, aluminum, silicon or manganese without fluxing or surface oxidation.

The process developed by Mr. Alexander utilizes the chemical and physical properties of hydrogen and other gases in their molecular state. This process embodies the same chemical advantages as in Dr. Langmuir's. In it the arc is struck between the metallic wire or carbon used as one electrode and the plate or object to be welded as another electrode. The crater of the arc is always on the object to be welded. Gaseous atmosphere is supplied in a stream around the arc, and for this purpose pure hydrogen, water gas, hydrogen-nitrogen mixtures or other gases may be used, depending on the nature of the work. This process makes arc welding more efficient in the welding of low-carbon steel, alloy steels and most of the nonferrous metals and alloys.

MRS. DENNES DEAD; AN ENGINEERING EXPERT

Widowed Grandmother Learned to Estimate Costs and Was Admitted to Firm.

Mrs. Minna N. Dennes, member of the engineering firm of L. Copleston, Inc., 120 Liberty Street, was buried on Friday in Flushing Cemetery. She died on Tuesday at her home, 15 Butler Place, Brooklyn, after a stroke of paralysis.

Mrs. Dennes had occupied a position unique in the field of stationary engineering. Born in Germany fifty-six years ago, she was brought to this country while still a baby, by her parents, who settled in Brookfield, Mass. There Mrs. Dennes was married.

After the death of her husband Mrs. Dennes studied shorthand and obtained a position as stenographer. She always had been interested in engineering work, so, on learning of a vacancy in the Copleston concern's clerical force, she applied for the position and was accepted.

That was twenty-two years ago, when Mrs. Dennes already was a grandmother. But she set to work to learn the business thoroughly, spending her leisure time in the Public Library studying standard engineering works. Her remarkable memory and her mathematical ability quickly brought rapid promotion. She soon became an expert in estimating construction costs and eventually was admitted to the firm.

BUSINESS COURSES ALTERED AT N. Y. U.

New Students Must Spend Four Years at Commerce School Instead of Three as Now.

TWO DEGREES ARE OFFERED

In September the School Will Move Into 11-Story Building Just Acquired Near Washington Square.

Dean John T. Madden of the School of Commerce, Accounts and Finance of New York University announced yesterday an important change in requirements for degrees. Becoming effective in September of this year candidates for degrees will be required to spend four years instead of three. The plan was submitted and approved by the University Council.

With the opening of the academic year the School of Commerce will be housed in the eleven-story building recently acquired for it on Wooster Street, between Third and Fourth, adjoining the Washington Square property of New York University. Renovation of the building is now under way.

Organization of the new curriculum on the four-year basis will be made for students devoting all their time to the work of the school, according to Dean Madden's statement. A corresponding increase in the length of time will be required for night students who are candidates for the degree or certificate of proficiency.

Beginning in the Fall, the School of Commerce will offer a four-year course leading to the degree of Bachelor of Commercial Science. A four-year course in cooperation with Washington Square College will be offered, which will lead to the degree of Bachelor of Science. This course is to meet the needs of students who plan to enter the Law School. It will also permit graduates who wish to teach to comply with the requirements of the State Department of Education.

For students who cannot meet the entrance requirements of the School of Commerce a four-year course will be given leading to the certificate of proficiency for those who complete the requirements for the Bachelor of Commercial Science Course. Short two-year day courses, or a three-year evening courses, will be offered for students who wish to specialize.

With the increased requirements for degrees stricter entrance conditions also will go into effect.

"The increase in the time requirement for the School of Commerce degree reflects two changeed factors," Dean Madden said.

"One is the lowering of the average age of the students. The second factor is the altered character of business itself. We know much more about business today than we did twenty-six years ago. The facts of business have been gathered together and subjected to the laboratory process and there has been built up a veritable science of business—an organized body of knowledge.

The course of study in the School of Commerce has kept pace with developments in the world of affairs, and the significant epochs of commercial life are reflected in the adjustments in our course of study. Our school has always been free to develop its own program. There were no traditions of long standing which offered resistance to innovation and change as has too often been the case in institutions of learning."

Founded in 1900, the School of Commerce is now the largest school of its kind in the United States. The total enrolment at the Washington Square and Wall Street centres is now 8,615. While the school is not the oldest in the United States, it is the first to establish association and contact with the actual laboratory of practical business.

COMMODITY PRICES.

Cash Grains Continue Higher—Cotton Up—Rubber Declines—Other Articles Firm.

Higher prices were again reported in the cash grains yesterday, the strength in the primary markets lifting the spot options. Wheat, corn and rye all improved upon Friday's values. Spot cotton also rallied after several days' steadiness. Rubber yielded to 5⅛ cents for spot sheets. Groceries, dairy products, provisions and metals were firm.

Yesterday's closing wholesale cash prices for commodities, in the New York market unless otherwise noted, were:

SALE ON AMSTERDAM AV.

New Law Building Near 166th Street Changes Hands—Silver Buys Lester Hall.

A. H. Healy sold the property at 834-836 Riverside Drive, a six-story apartment house, 54 by 147 feet, containing two, three, four and five room apartments. The brokers were Moore, Schutte & Co.

The Houghton Company, in conjunction with G. Tuoti & Co., sold for John Ruege the six-story new law apartment, 25 by 100 feet, at 2,142 Amsterdam Avenue, adjoining the northwest corner of 166th Street. The property rents for $9,000.

J. Klein sold to Samuel Silver Lester Hall, known as 570-576 West 190th Street, 50 feet east of St. Nicholas Avenue, a five-story apartment house, 75 by 90 feet, which rents for $24,000. The seller acquired this property through the same broker, Carl Davis, about two years ago.

The Parmar Realty Corporation bought the property at 356 East Fifty-seventh Street from Samuel J. Flash. Mr. Flash purchased this property about six months ago from Shanley estate, which had held it for the past thirty years. Douglas L. Elliman & Co. were the brokers.

Albert Meyrowitz, represented by A. Fred Silverstone, sold to F. J. Kelly 2,403 Second Avenue, a five-story tenement. Samuel Weiss and F. J. Kelly were the brokers in the transaction.

McClarey Bros., in conjunction with Arthur G. Muhlker, sold for Minnie Geist 420 East Eighty-fifth Street, a four-story single, 20 by 100 feet, between First and Second Avenues, to an investor.

Mrs. Mary A. Grasso purchased 223 East Fiftieth Street from Louisa Belland, a plot 20 by 100 feet, and 225 East Fiftieth Street from Michael Heffernan, a plot 20 by 100 feet. Mrs. Grasso also purchased, with Antonio Lopez, 1,148 Second Avenue from Stephen Massas.

Benjamin W. Levitan, architect, has purchased from the United Cigar Stores Company the two business buildings at 127-129 West 125th Street, near Lenox Avenue, on a plot 38 by 100 feet. The purchaser proposes at the expiration of present leases to erect a modern building and lease the building for a long term for retail purposes. Mark Rafalsky & Co. negotiated the transaction.

Mr. Levitan is the architect and engineer for the lighthouse and monument to Columbus, being erected in Santo Domingo, which will be the tallest structure in the world, to be 1,100 feet high. He has just returned from Egypt on research work in this connection. At present he is constructing a twelve-story fireproof bar building at White Plains, N. Y.

Alba Realty Company resold for Charles R. Halpin, operator, 316 East Nineteenth Street, a three and one-half story private dwelling.

Estate of Samuel W. Korn bought 349 and 351 East Seventeenth Street, a six-story new law house, on plot 42 by 92 feet, in the Stuyvesant Park section. The property rents for $15,000. Irving Schlesinger was the broker in the transaction.

Ames & Co. sold for the Stuart-Smith Corporation 264 and 266 First Avenue to the Leading Properties, Inc., D. Bersin, President. The holding consists of two four-story tenements with stores, having a frontage of 51 by 94 feet in depth, and was held at $60,000. The buyers have under consideration several offers of a resale.

Louis H. Low and Charles W. Wynne resold the five and one-half story apartment house on the southwest corner of Sherman Avenue and Isham Street, on a plot 50 by 100 feet. It brings in an annual rental of $18,000. The purchaser, Max Glober, is an investing client of Leo H. Aronds Company, the brokers who negotiated the transaction.

The Merchant's Point of View

MERCANTILE business has been rather slow in striking its accustomed stride. It harks back to the reluctance of consumers to stock up while weather conditions are unsettled or are still reminiscent of Winter, as they have been lately over so large a portion of the country. While there is yet plenty of time for these retarding circumstances to be removed, the intervening period is one of some little strain. Following Easter there has been somewhat better and more diversified buying at retail by the general public which was not influenced by the fact that the stores are not making concessions. To do so when so much of necessary purchases still remain to be made is not considered good business. It may come later as the real season draws to a close. There is quite a margin of time yet before the actual selling of Summer goods is to begin, and much is expected to happen meanwhile. Wholesalers in all lines are displaying the same reluctance that is shown by consumers, and retailers and are content to draw on producers for supplies as they are needed. Aside from the other reasons mentioned as incentives to cautious buying, many have the added one of the belief that prices of many things are likely to be reduced before long. Some reductions have already shown themselves in the textile lines, affecting cotton and wool fabrics, rugs and carpets. It is not so unnatural under the circumstances for the belief to be entertained that the downward trend will be manifested in other directions.

Raw Silk Prices Continue Moderate.

Among the foreign monopolies which Secretary of Commerce Hoover recently pinned up for public contemplation was that in raw silk, the bulk of which is supplied to this country by Japan. It was hinted that something should be done in the matter, but nothing practical was suggested. Other countries, notably China, may offer very substantial competition one of these days, and there has lately been an attempt to produce raw silk on a large scale in California. But there is nothing to indicate that Japan's position in the industry will be seriously threatened for some years to come. So it happens, raw silk is the first among the imports of this country in point of value, and five-sixths of such imports come from Japan. It is the principal export of that country and the United States is its main customer. On a number of occasions the Japanese Government has come to the aid of its silk producers when the price of raw silk was abnormally low and helped them to hold the material for higher values. On the whole, however, the price has been mainly dependent on the demand from this country. Taking all things together, it cannot be said that the Japanese have been especially oppressive in their monopoly. When some of the speculators in Japan try to hoist prices the buying stops in this country or is curtailed. Then prices begin to come down again. Latterly the prices have been quite reasonable, but even this has not served to stimulate purchases. Imports and deliveries to domestic mills in March both showed a decided drop. It is fairly evident that not much is to be feared from the raw silk monopoly.

Flexible Tariff Provision Decision.

Ever since the passage of the Fordney-McCumber Tariff act the constitutionality of the flexible feature in it has been the subject of question. It was originally put forward as a method for making duties on imports adjust themselves to the shifts in economic conditions abroad caused by the aftermath of the war and to the variance in values of foreign currencies. As at first designed, it was to be merely a temporary measure to meet an extraordinary condition. But before the enactment of the Tariff bill the temporary feature was struck out because the protected interests saw in it a chance to get higher duties without having to bring matters up in Congress for an open discussion. In theory, the proceeding under the flexible provision is quite simple. An application for the raising or lowering of a duty is made to the Tariff Commission, which is supposed to find out the difference in production costs of an article in this country and that of its principal competitor. Then a report is made to the President of the United States, who thereupon issues his proclamation declaring the new duty. Actually, the commission has rarely, if ever, been able to find out the difference in the production costs. The constitutional question involved is simple. It is whether Congress has the power to delegate to the President legislative authority or the power to impose duties. Several test cases were gotten up, and one of these, involving the change in duty of barium dioxide, was finally argued before Board 1 of the Board of General Appraisers. A divided decision was handed down in this last week, two members upholding the law and one holding it void. The matter will now be appealed and will, in due course, reach the United States Supreme Court. It is barely possible, however, that the flexible provision will be repealed before a hearing can be had in the court of last resort.

An Inside View of the Tariff Commission.

Very illuminative was the testimony given before the Senate Tariff Commission investigating committee last week by A. P. Dennis, one of the Commissioners. Mr. Dennis was, for a number of years, one of the most capable of the Department of Commerce representatives in Europe, and his reports on economic and other conditions were thorough and authoritative. He expressed the conviction that the efforts to obtain the difference in production costs here and abroad were futile in the manner in which they were attempted, that is, by having agents in foreign countries try to obtain such costs from producers. The waste of time and money in such efforts was only one of the criticisms. Then, too, the attitude of the Commissioners was another factor. Two of them, the Chairman and Commissioner Glassie, always voted the same way on any question, and they were joined by the other two Republican members, leaving Mr. Dennis as a hopeless minority of one. Another thing that was made evident by the testimony was the disposition to report in favor of raising a duty but not to lower one. This is not to be wondered at when it is considered that the dominating influence in the commission is that of the Chairman, Thomas O. Marvin, who before his appointment had been for years the paid propagandist of the tariff beggars known as the Home Market Club and who had appeared before Congress committees as an advocate of higher duties on textiles. The time of the commission also appears to have been taken up by irrelevant and long-winded debates which simply obscured whatever issues were before the body. Altogether, a pretty fair case seems to have been made up for changing the personnel of the commission, if not for its absolute abolition.

British Try to Mark Origin of Imports.

Great Britain's commercial progress has been, in the past, mainly on the lines of manufacturing goods for others and shipping them to their customers in foreign countries. Perhaps the last thing thought of was the home market. Circumstances since the war, and especially in the last two or three years, have made it advisable to pay a little more attention to the home trade. To impress this on the dwellers in the United Kingdom the cancellation stamps on the letters sent out have impressed the motto "Buy British goods" as an advertisement. The next thing was to have marks on goods showing their country of origin so that no one would be deceived as to where they were made. To accomplish this a long time was taken in preparing a bill for submission to Parliament. This would turn over the execution of the measure to two committees, the one to deal with agricultural produce and fish and the other to handle manufactured articles. Some form of marking or branding is to be gone through with to distinguish things that are of British or "empire" origin from those which are foreign, so that the latter shall not be palmed off for the former. The methods proposed in the bill under consideration, however, have come in for a great deal of criticism and doubt is expressed whether it could accomplish its avowed purpose if enacted. It is something of a job to try and follow foods of one kind or another until they reach the consumer. It is also no small task to make distinctions in the case of articles, one process of which is performed abroad. On this last point the bill, it is true, states that imported goods are to be deemed manufactured in the country in which they last underwent before importation a "substantial" change by a manufacturing process, but no definition of "substantial" is given. What has been stated gives only an inkling of the many snags in the proposed legislation. It is of value at the moment because a somewhat similar measure is before Congress.

Conditions in Cotton and Cotton Goods.

More attention is now being paid to conditions affecting the new cotton crop. The size of it will be most important in determining future prices for the material, as it is already pretty well conceded that the carryover of the existing stocks will be quite large. One estimate of this surplus made during the past week put it at about 5,500,000 bales. The exports are about 500,000 bales less than last year, while domestic consumption shows a tendency to lessen. Some Southern mills are contemplating shutting down on Fridays and Saturdays so as not to accumulate stocks of cotton goods, although it is said they have so far been able to dispose of what they have been turning out, but the profit margin has been too slight to make it attractive. They are looking forward to lower prices for cotton to help them out later on. So far as the outlook for the new crop is concerned, there are many opinions. But these really amount only to guesses. It is pretty generally conceded that there will be no material reduction in acreage planted. What have to be reckoned with are the weather and the weevil. No one knows what the former is to be during the growing season, while the influence of the latter is still mere conjecture. Buyers of cotton goods are showing no eagerness to venture ahead of immediate requirements. Prices of gray goods, especially printcloths, have shown further weakness, as have those of the heavier cottons, including denims, tickings, &c. Certain printed cotton fabrics are maintaining their popularity. All kinds of knit goods are very dull, although much of the Spring requirement is still to be met. A few days of warmer weather will help out to put some vim in this branch of trade.

Sales of Wool and Woolens.

Few foreign wool sales of note occurred during the past week. At the recent auctions in London it appears that 14,500 bales remained unsold out of a total offering of 109,300 bales of Australian, New Zealand, Tasmania and South Africa consignments. Whether any, and if so how much, was bid in is not reported. There has been no slacking up in the imports here of foreign wools, those for the week ended with April 3 having totaled over 14,000,000 pounds. From recent reports of wool consumption by domestic mills, it seems that about two-thirds of the wools used are of foreign origin. There has been lately a little more activity by buyers of Western and Southwestern wool, mostly of the new clip. The mills have not been very keen about buying because orders in hand do not yet seem to warrant it. Their preparations are all for the Fall season, which has just about started. Manufacturing clothiers have opened their lines and their salesmen are on the road showing samples. Some responses have been had, but the bulk of the buying by retail clothiers is yet to come. In general, prices show a slight decline, not enough to cut much of a figure when it comes to resale prices. Lines of women's wear fabrics which have been opened have brought more inquiries than orders in most instances, although there are some notable exceptions. There is, however, no inclination to hurry things. The remainder of the mills specializing in women's wear fabrics will be opened in a few days. The carpet and rug auction which was in progress during the past week was quite successful, but the prices obtained showed a reduction of 10 per cent. or so. Other carpet and rug lines opened for Fall were also at reduced prices.

SLACKING UP OF RETAILER BUYING

Unseasonable Weather Has Had Its Effect in Checking Purchases of Dry Goods.

A period of general quiet prevailed in the local dry goods market during the week just closed, according to the special review of Claflins Incorporated.

"While there were a few more buyers in the house than during the preceding week," the review goes on, "the number was smaller than we anticipated would come after the Easter holiday. A good many of those present sought merchandise for special sales, in order to induce consumer buying. To the severe and unseasonable weather throughout the country was attributed in large measure the general dullness in business. Most retailers reported small stocks, and were of the opinion that, when some good Spring weather has been experienced, consumer buying would become active enough to require merchandise replacements.

"English printed pongees were still among the best sellers in our wash goods department, and quite some activity was also shown by printed alpacas, printed silk and cotton crepes, and rayons of all description. From certain sections of the country there was a good demand for plain and printed voiles. Percales in all grades of English effects sold in large quantity. Bungalow cretonnes, principally in small effects, were taken in good quantity for smocks. A constant improvement is being shown in ginghams of solid colors and checks, as well as some plaids.

"Orders received in our silk department for immediate delivery from road men, as well as by mail, showed a marked increase over the preceding week. Prints at a price found a ready market, with polka dot patterns receiving considerable attention. In the staple silk flat crêpes, georgettes and rayon sport satins were very much in demand. A new sheer, popular-priced fabric, introduced to the trade recently in pastel shades and white has proved very desirable for dresses. It is also good for lingerie, due to its firmness in construction and its guaranteed washable qualities.

"Lace business received from travelers and by mail showed considerable improvement over the previous week. Val. in white and ochre shades appeared to be the strong items, but a fairly good business continued in Venises; filet crochets, cluny and art laces. Quite a few buyers who visited our lace department this week were very optimistic about the lace business for April, May and June.

"Sales of drapery fabrics fell off a little on some lines, but many orders have been booked for staples in cretonnes and ruffle curtains. One of the big sellers has been a popular-priced plain rayon marquisette ruffle curtain with valance. A number of buyers from Canada who visited the house during the week left orders particularly for scrims and cretonnes. One of the favorite 'numbers' was a double-bordered scrim, which was taken in good quantity."

PARIS MILLINERY TYPES.

A Stocking Shape and a Stove Pipe Sailor Are Among Them.

Innovations submitted during the past few weeks in the Paris millinery showings stress Reboux's stocking shape hat. This novelty is an exact replica of the old-time toboggan cap, and in its introductory showing is made of an exotic knitted straw or grosgrain ribbon. It is modeled closely to the head, with the crown gathered or pleated into the top. The three hats which inaugurated this style are named "Printanier," "Chouquette" and "Mon Copain" and are already regarded as extraordinary successes, according to a special bulletin issued yesterday by the Retail Millinery Association of America.

Reboux's new sailor in black Milan carries a brim slightly rolled at the left, the bulletin adds. It has a high stovepipe crown with a black ribbon crown band held by a jeweled buckle. Agnes also introduces the black Milan stovepipe sailor, banded in black and pink grosgrain, and accompanies it with a scarf of black and pink satin ribbon to match. This scarf is new in that it is composed of nine-inch ribbon in two-yard lengths. In general the scarf is holding over well in its effective Ascot handling, with the wide Victorian bow tied with short ends a close second. The printed scarf has lost place to a large degree, with the exception of polka dots. However, these patterns, with a few of the small tailored print designs, are effectively adjusted to the Spanish sailor brim for careless placement about the neck, or mark the returning vogue of the once overwhelming Deauville kerchief.

"Although for the present the beret and casquette are established successes in felt, belting fabric, straw and varied combinations," the bulletin goes on, "with the coming of Raquel Meller, the Spanish sailor is sure to lead off in early Summer styles.

"A motif now gathering momentum for evening wear is the cobweb executed in metal embroidery, jeweled, crystal and pearl effects. This theme has been applied to the casquette in ribbons, and in embroidered, painted and appliqué work.

"Of rising importance is the consideration of the medium-sized scoop and its modifications, as created by Le Monnier. In view of the earlier condemnation of this brim line in favor of the almost brimless flat-crown types and cartwheels, the advancement of this model is a matter of current interest."

TO SHOW MAKING OF WOMEN'S WEAR

Exposition Urged to Show Present Ways and Help "Pride-in-Industry" Movement.

As a means of stimulating the "Pride-in-Industry" movement that has recently got under way in the women's ready-to-wear trades, and at the same time of showing the women of the metropolitan district how far removed modern manufacturing conditions are from those of the old "sweat-shop" days, it was suggested yesterday by A. E. Lefcourt that all branches of the garment industry unite in staging a gigantic trade exposition.

Mr. Lefcourt, who was formerly a manufacturer of women's apparel, is now known chiefly for his activities in erecting huge buildings to house the production of that merchandise. It is his suggestion that the proposed exposition, which can be made one of the most unusual ever held in this city, should be "of the industry, for the industry and by the industry." Its sole purpose would be to "sell" the garment industry to the women of New York and adjacent territory.

"The entire cost of conducting the suggested exposition," Mr. Lefcourt said yesterday, "should be underwritten by men in the apparel industry through voluntary contributions. The industry itself, through its various trade associations, should conduct the exposition with no idea of money-making in mind. To this end no use should be made of the usual professional promoter.

"It is my belief that an exposition like the one proposed should embrace, among other things, style shows of women's and misses' garments, children's garments, underthings, &c. It should show, by illustrative and easily understood data of one kind or another, all of the facts pertaining to the industry. It should show the women who attend it—and every effort should be made to make it worth while for women to come—that the women's apparel business of this city is of great magnitude. Most of them now have little or no conception of the tremendousness of the industry here.

"It is my further suggestion that one of the features of such an exposition should be the construction of a replica of the modern type of 'skyscraper' in which the apparel industries are housed. There should also be in operation plants actually making merchandise for sale to consumers through the retail shops and stores. These plants should operate under exactly the same conditions under which they are run in modern business buildings. By way of contrast, it might be well to have a shop of the old 'sweating' type portrayed, the machinery being replicas of the kinds formerly used—but not in operation—and the workers replaced by dummy figures.

"The great contrast between a modern shop, with its abundance of light and air and its comfortable working conditions, with the old-time shop suggested might well be one of the most powerful 'preachments' of the whole exposition, so far as consumers are concerned. Further than this, it would be an education for many women to see how the garments they wear are put together nowadays."

Mr. Lefcourt further suggested that, as an incentive to bring about a maximum attendance at the proposed exposition, only a nominal entrance fee should be charged and that every cent of the proceeds should be turned over to the charities of all creeds.

"It is my thought," Mr. Lefcourt continued, "that on one night the entire proceeds should be turned over to the Catholic charities designated by Cardinal Hayes or some official of the Church appointed by him for that purpose. On another night the proceeds should go to worthy Protestant charities, which would be selected by the proper authorities in the various denominations. On a third night the receipts could go to Jewish charities, and on succeeding nights to various city institutions named by Commissioner of Public Welfare Coler.

"I believe, in order to obtain the maximum of good-will for the industry, the proposed exposition should run at least two weeks. Some worthy charity should benefit from the proceeds each night, and the participating charities should have their own representatives in the box office on the night designated for their obtaining the revenue.

"There should be no deduction for overhead, nor should there be any deduction for special expenses. The entire cost of every phase of the enterprise should be underwritten by sterling men in the trade who have risen from the ranks. There is no question in my mind that many such men will be happy to play some part in driving home to the people of this city and vicinity that they are engaged in an industry that is not only progressive but which is actually responsible for making American women, as a whole, the best dressed in the world.

"I believe these men will be happy to aid in showing that 98 per cent. of all the women's garments sold throughout the United States, as well as in fourteen or more foreign countries, are designed, manufactured and sold in the city of New York. Even if the cost of an exposition like the one suggested should run to $250,000 or more, I believe that there would be no difficulty in raising the required funds in order to demonstrate the entire truth about manufacturing conditions in the industry and to show why those engaged in it should be proud that they are."

It is Mr. Lefcourt's further belief that the Merchants' Association, the Chamber of Commerce of the State of New York and other important organizations of business men in all branches of industry would be glad to cooperate in carrying out a program for such an exposition, even if that cooperation should consist of no more than their official approval of the project and what it would hope to accomplish. He further feels that officials of the City and State Governments would also do their best to further such a project and its aims, because both the city and the State have reason to feel proud of their biggest industry. Above all, Mr. Lefcourt believes that the time has come for the public to learn the truth about the women's apparel industry, its personnel, its standing and its great development in recent years.

"The time has come," he concluded, "for members of the industry to drive home to the public the fact that the production standards governing the manufacture of all kinds of women's apparel nowadays are safer, more progressive and better than those governing the manufacture of any other single commodity. Not only should the suggested exposition awaken pride in official city and State circles in what the industry has accomplished but it should awaken a great measure of pride in the public and in members of the industry itself."

RAW SILK MARKETS.

Trading Slow in Japan, With Difficulty in Holding Prices.

Trading in raw silk during the week at Yokohama was very quiet. Sales in the open market only amounted to 1,430 bales, while those on the Bourse were 7,495 bales, the latter rather large figure indicating by comparison the dearth of real buying. The real feature of the week was the attempt of the resters to stabilize prices. They claim that they are losing money under present market conditions. The final outcome on Friday was the establishment of a settlement price of 1,650 yen for double extra A cracks, which, however, is interpreted as more favorable to buyers than otherwise. It is difficult to see, moreover, how long stabilized prices can be maintained, owing to the state of the market here. Yen exchange fluctuated between 46⅝ and 46¾ cents for ninety days' sight draft, New York, closing yesterday at the latter figure.

There was another decline at Canton, according to A. P. Villa & Bros., Inc., who report 14-16s quoted at $4.30 to $4.35 and the coarser sizes around $4. Nothing new developed at Shanghai, where the market for the most part is sold out. Tussahs were a shade easier, being available at $2.65 to $2.70.

The level of prices at Milan is still too high, and very little trading for American account is taking place.

In the local market double extra A cracks are quoted at $6.30. The demand here continues to be very quiet. Broad silk manufacturers have yet to get the later season demand they were expecting, although warmer weather may work a notable change during the next few weeks. While there is a general feeling that it would be wise to hold off openings of Fall silk lines, there are some firms which will make their showings during the next ten days. Road men in some instances will show three lines at once—Spring, Summer and Fall goods.

WOULD AVOID COMPETITION.

Czechoslovakian Glass Factories Are Cautious About Visitors.

So jealously guarded is the quality of the glass turned out by the industry in Czechoslovakia that the Glass Institute of that country has decided to establish a uniform trade mark to distinguish glass of the proper quality that is exported in considerable quantities to foreign countries. Extensive action will also be taken by the institute in favor of the Gablons glass industry, which, according to Vice Consul J. K. Angell, Prague, is at present undergoing a serious crisis in the manufacture of cut glass on account of overproduction of pressed glass. The Bohemian cut glass industry is being especially hurt by the improvement of German pressed glass, with the result that Czechoslovak factories have been obliged to pay increased attention to the manufacture of pressed stuff.

The pre-eminence of Czechoslovakia in the manufacture of plate glass, of which it is one of the largest producers in the world, has caused representatives of other countries to investigate the methods used in its production. The attitude of the manufacturers of plate glass toward visitors from foreign countries, therefore, has been one of great caution. This was shown recently, according to Mr. Angell, when some Japanese visitors were refused admittance to the plate glass factories. This action was taken on the understanding that a certain Japanese company is planning to establish a large plant for the manufacture of plate glass by the Fourcault system.

Notes on Trade and Industry Abroad

Raise Duty on Sugar.

The Bulgarian import duty on unrefined sugar has been increased from 22.50 gold leva to 40 gold leva per 100 kilos, and the duty on refined sugar has been increased from 27 gold leva to 49 gold leva per 100 kilos.

Kapok From Java.

Exports of kapok from Java to the United States showed a large increase during 1925, amounting to 8,000 tons worth $4,600,000 in 1925, as compared to 1,700 tons valued at $3,900,000 in 1924. Practically all of these exports were shipped to the United States through the Soerabaya consular district.

Japanese Foreign Trade.

Japan's foreign trade continues to show marked improvement over last year, according to the weekly cable from Acting Commercial Attaché A. B. Calder, Tokyo. Preliminary returns for the first 20 days of March show exports of 117,800,000 yen and imports of 181,700,000—a slight increase in exports and a sharp drop in imports compared with the corresponding period of 1925.

Italian Rayon Prices.

The problem of maintaining a strong export position in the Italian textile industries has been under consideration for many months. The most recent development in this connection is a reported agreement among all Italian rayon manufacturers to fix prices. Under this scheme all sales must be reported to the central organization.

Not to Ship Russian Rye.

The Russian contract with Latvian millers regarding the shipment of 60,000 tons of rye from Russia to Latvia has been canceled by mutual agreement between the principal millers of Latvia and the Russian trade delegation. Both parties benefit by the cancelation, as the crops in Latvia and Lithuania have proved to be larger than anticipated and the Russian crop yield had been overestimated.

Argentina's Coal Imports.

The total imports of coal into Argentina during 1925 are reported as 2,973,852 tons, compared with 3,299,392 tons in 1924 and 2,579,466 in 1923. Of the 1925 imports, 2,610,045 tons, or about 89 per cent., were supplied by Great Britain, 186,933 came from Germany, 124,950 from the United States, 47,922 from the Netherlands, and the remainder from Chile and Brazil.

To Build Port of Durazzo.

The Albanian Consulate in Salonikl, Greece, advises that its Government has decided on the construction of the Port of Durazzo and the draining of Durazzo Lake, an area of fifty square kilometers, according to a report from Consul F. Fernald, Salonikl, Greece. The survey must be completed quickly in order to commence the construction of the port within a few months.

Want Duty on Periodicals.

A delegation from the Magazine Publishers' Association of Canada has petitioned the Prime Minister, members of the Cabinet and party leaders, urging the imposition of a duty of 10 cents per pound on all periodicals and week-end magazines imported into Canada, as a measure of protection to publishers in Canada. Publishers' associations and certain newspapers are urging Parliamentary support of the present proposal.

English Raise Angora Rabbits.

The raising of Angora rabbits for fur purposes is proving profitable and is being followed on a commercial scale in England. Some of the farmers pluck the fibres, while others clip the wool from the rabbit. The fibre most practical for spinning is that which has attained a length of about four or five inches. Rabbit fur is not generally used in the manufacture of garments as a whole, but is more generally used as trimming on sweaters or like goods.

How Belgians Pack Glass.

One of the reasons why Belgium has been so long able to exercise such a strong influence in oversea glass trade is the extreme care taken in packing. Insurance against breakage is extremely rare, as perfected containers for almost every sort of transportation encountered in the export markets have been designed. Cases are sometimes of two-inch material, strongly pressed and cleated, and the glass is packed in straw with paper leaves between the sheets. In many cases where particular risk of breakage is involved, a strong inner case is placed inside the outer one with a compressed straw deadener between.

Poland's Industry Depressed.

Depression in Polish industry continues, with the metallurgical and mining industries suffering most, especially in Polish Silesia, where more than half of the workers are idle. The number of unemployed in the country in general continues to grow, except in the textile industry, in which, in preparation for the Summer season, over 3,000 workers have returned to the factories. Difficult conditions in the retail trade, coupled with lack of operating capital and credits, resulted in the failure of the two largest department stores in Warsaw.

Denim Mill for Mexico.

Plans are being prepared for the erection of a textile mill in the City of Ciudad Juarez, Mexico, the actual construction of which will commence in the near future, according to Vice Consul James C. Powell Jr., Ciudad, Juarez. Orders for machinery and equipment will be placed with American concerns at an early date. The machinery to be installed includes 150 looms for the manufacture of denim cloth with the necessary operating equipment. The mill, representing a total expenditure of 125,000 pesos (present value of the peso is $0.43), will be ready for operation on or about the first of May, 1926.

The Canadian House of Commons has approved the adoption, for the whole Dominion, of the egg-marks act of British Columbia. The section of the act dealing with the marking of imported eggs, which is the principal feature of the act, reads as follows:

"Every egg dealer who keeps or has in his possession or under his control any eggs which have been imported into the Dominion and which have not been marked, shall mark each egg with the words 'Produce of' followed by the name of the country of origin of the egg."

NEW ACTIVITIES OF THE TRADE BODIES

They Have Ceased to Be Merely Conducted for the Sole Benefit of Their Members.

Trade association activities in recent years have taken on a new and broader importance, functioning more definitely as a part of business and assuming a greater degree of administrational contact with its various phases, according to David N. Mosessohn, Executive Chairman of the Associated Dress Industries of America. Trade associations, he said yesterday, were formerly likened to the old type of trade papers—following the industry of which it was supposed to be a part and living by virtue of its ability to please those who favored it by its patronage. Today, he added, the trade organization leads the industry by virtue of its power as such a body and its strength through cooperation.

"A new angle in association work in several trades," he continued, "is the method of administration and the selection of an administrator. It has been found that the former type of secretary, who took orders from everybody, and who reported and recorded the formal meetings of the members, was merely a clerk. He possessed no power of decision or direction. An association under his nominal charge was unable to cope with the big matters pertaining to industry. As members grew in importance they became the wielders of power in the organization and directed the association's activities. Their interests were paramount to those of the industry. Under the old form of administration, industries progressed despite themselves rather than through any preconceived plans of orderly procedure.

"Well-organized trade bodies today are not supervised by any one, or a few, of its members who may, by virtue of their individual strength, hold a dominating position in an industry. Such members now are really no more of a factor than the less important ones from the standpoint of volume or size. Their opinions are still sought, but nowadays the opinions of the smaller members are also sought. Many times the smaller member produces more ideas and plans for development than the big one. The smaller member is aways looking forward, while the big one often looks back upon accomplishment and is satisfied.

"In the hands of the new day trade association lies the direction of an industry involving millions, and sometimes billions, of dollars in merchandise production. Industries, therefore, seek a man to direct this work who is a combination of organizer, promoter, administrator, arbitrator and business adviser. Many times, the less he knows about the intricate details of the business of his members the better is his service as their director. He can render decisions of importance impartially after weighing evidence in disputed questions. He does not consider first the interests of a member and then those of the industry.

"In our own industry we aim to work constructively at all times. One of our outstanding accomplishments, of which we are proud, is the large number of retailers in every section of the country who are today respected merchants as the result of being rehabilitated through the efforts of this organization to keep them out of bankruptcy or liquidation. Our records are replete with evidence of dealers who have placed their affairs in our hands. They are honest merchants, temporarily financially embarrassed, but with a desire to pay up and continue in business. By keeping them on their feet, by extending credit, and sometimes cash, and by directing them in the conduct of their business in such a way that they overcame obstacles through knowledge, we have put them on the road to success. In each instance these merchants have been retained as good customers for members of the association.

"Dishonest merchants, however, are prosecuted to the fullest extent. Thousands of dollars annually are saved for members and for those with whom our members do business through the arbitration of their differences by the arbitration board of the association. Costly litigation is avoided, and prompt settlements, satisfactory to both sides, are reached at no cost to the parties concerned. Members are afforded excellent credit protection through the checking system in the association office, where the records of more than thirty thousand retailers throughout the country are on file. More than $1,000,000 was saved for members during 1925 through the efforts of our collection department, covering both delinquent debtors and express claims for loss or shortage. An association of the old type would have been unable to render this broad service to the industry and to its members."

EXACTIONS BY RETAILERS.

Some of the Queer Requests They Make on Garment Houses.

Three typical instances of the unusual demands made by retailers upon manufacturers of ready-to-wear garments for women were cited yesterday by M. Mosessohn, Executive Chairman of the United Women's Wear League of America. In the past, he said, such demands have been for the most part confined to requests for special prices on merchandise for anniversary sales, for sales marking the opening of new buildings or annexes, or for advertising in some local publication. Lately, however, the requests are covering a wider range of what he termed "philanthropy."

Mr. Mosessohn brought out the difference in the character of the three cases in question and cited them as examples of hundreds of others. The most recent was a request from an out-of-town retailer for assistance in putting over an anniversary sale, but the original letter was couched in such terms as to make it appear that cash assistance was wanted. It said: "As we have been buying of you for the past year we are writing to ask you if you would care to enter with us into the spirit of the thing, allowing us something with which to advertise your merchandise."

"In a subsequent letter, in answer to a protest from the league against such a demand," Mr. Mosessohn said, "the retail firm disclaimed any request for a contribution of money, and said that only special prices on odd lots of merchandise were asked. However, the firm in question tacitly admitted that its request was generally misunderstood by manufacturers, and said further that it was explaining to all who received the original letter that it had been misunderstood. The text of the original letter, however, did not agree with that of the second, thereby showing that the firm had altered its request upon receiving refusals of it.

"The second instance was a request from a local retail firm for a subscription for an employes' entertainment and dance. This request, needless to say, was bolder and less justified than the usual ones. Manufacturers naturally have no interest in the social diversions of retail employes, with most of whom they haven't the slightest business or social contact.

"The third case concerned a demand for contributions toward the building of a religious edifice in a town in Alabama. The retailer who made this request is Chairman of the congregation, and he addressed himself to manufacturers who, in his opinion, owed him some help.

"If New York manufacturers are to be called upon to support purely local enterprises in distant towns they might as well retire from business and become philanthropists. Most localities erect and support their own buildings and maintain their own charitable enterprises, but there seems to be no limit to the attempts to force manufacturers to contribute to any cause in which their customers are interested."

DISTINCT SUMMER SEASON.

Cloak and Suit Men Are Now Making Preparations for It.

Many cloak and suit style creators now are busy preparing new models for the Summer season, which is being fostered by the National Garment Retailers' Association. A wide range of types of merchandise will be on display for the first time at the fashion show which is now only a little more than a week off.

"This Summer season idea is a merchandising venture which should commend itself to the cloak and suit trade, and all of the ready-to-wear trades, for that matter, which believe in progress in production and distribution of women's apparel, according to Maxwell Copelof, President of the National Wholesale Women's Wear Association.

"If there be any among the retail or wholesale trade who are reluctant to support the Summer season movement," he said yesterday, "they should consider that it has been proposed with the idea of stimulating activity during the comparatively long and dull period which affects ready-to-wear lines after the Spring season has run its course and before Fall season demand can be developed. For a great many years manufacturers, wholesalers and retail stores have bemoaned the fact that, while their overhead expenses go on during the Summer months, they have not been in a position to secure an adequate amount of business on which to pro-rate their expenses.

"Perhaps it is not to be supposed that this situation can be changed in one season, but it does seem reasonable that in time such a constructive movement as the Summer season conceived by the organized retailers should commence to bear fruit. There is much more style consciousness among women in warm weather as well as cold weather, than there ever was before, and there is every reason to believe that with a little bit of systematic cultivation Summer season business may be built up to substantial proportions."

BUSINESS NOTES.

Edwin & Louis Bry, Inc., manufacturers of novelty woolens and tweeds, have appointed Bernhard Hyman, formerly of the B. Hyman & Shevell Co., as exclusive sales agent to the cap industry. The new sales office of the Bry firm is located at the northwest corner of Broadway and Washington Place.

The Klamet Manufacturing Company, makers of shawls and scarfs, 1,182 Broadway, will remove to 70 Madison Avenue about May 1.

STYLE TRENDS THAT APPEAL TO RETAILERS

As Are Shown in Tailored and Sports Dresses, Coats and Children's Garments.

In his special market report covering the buying activities of retailers and the style trends in new merchandise, Alfred Fantl, resident buyers, says: "There is a growing call for tailored dresses of navy georgette or Romaine and black flat crêpe. Cape effects, touches of lace on the collar and cuffs and silk vestees of white or dragee pink are distinctive details found in many of these dresses selling for $39.50 up. Afternoon dresses of georgette combined with lace dyed to match are wanted in the new sunset shade, the strawberry and raspberry tones, wood rose, Lanvin green and gray. One outstanding georgette model features a full-length jabot of lace in a matching shade.

"Manufacturers are now making up new styles in the three colors which are to be prominently emphasized during the Summer season campaign, namely 'Sunni yellow,' coral sands and June rose. It is expected that after the Summer fashion show to be held at the Hotel Astor on April 20, retailers throughout the country will feature these Summery shades in window displays of new merchandise.

"With the approach of warm weather there is an increased call for sports dresses of washable crêpe de chine in white, green, maize and flesh. A number of requests are being received for short-sleeve models in both the one- and two-piece styles. Bright colored polka-dotted silks are highly favored mediums for sports dresses. Many of the orders for dinner dresses stress black lace over flesh or nude colored chiffon. White, rose petal pink, Nile green and Chanel red are colors frequently called for in chiffon dance frocks. The robe de style of taffeta or tulle continues to figure prominently in youthful evening modes.

"Black silk coats retailing from $39.50 to $69.50 are the leading items called for by coat departments in every section of the country. While satin is the most popular fabric, there is also some call for coats of mirror crêpe and ribbed silks. In the higher priced coats the vogue for black and white is reflected in black satin models with full collars of white ermine and linings of white kasha. A slightly bloused back and rippling jabot revers edged with fur are distinguishing features of one smart satin coat inspired by Lanvin.

"Moire in shades of black, gray or beige is finding increased favor in the dressier type of coat trimmed with novelty Summer furs. In these fancier styles, coats with three-quarter capes bordered with deep silk fringe are among the numbers shown. The full-length caps of moire trimmed with fringe is also prominently featured. Coats of flat crêpe lined with dotted silk may be had with scarfs to match the lining.

"Novelty sports coats are being bought in such fabrics as jacquard kasha, worsted Ottoman and plaids in ombre effects. There is also a limited call for dressy coats of a well-known lustrous worsted trimmed with embroidery. Tailored coats of tweed and novelty woolen mixtures are wanted to sell at popular prices. From California and the South orders are beginning to come in for sports coats of flannel in white and pastel shades. A steady reorder business continues on navy twill suits selling for $25 up.

"Children's departments yield a steady demand for cape coats of navy poiret and tailored tweeds retailing from $8.95 to $19.75. A number of orders has also come in for girls' ensembles consisting of a tweed, kasha or twill coat lined with silk to match the dress. Girls' dresses are wanted chiefly in printed silks, taffeta and georgette combinations and flat crepe in high shades. Children's party dresses are being ordered in printed sateen, voile and washable silks to sell for $1.95 to $5.95.

"Calls are beginning to come in for women's bathing suits. Most of the orders are for the one-piece suits of knitted worsted with the skirt effect. These are being purchased in plain high shades or in black with bright colored stripes on the top or around the border of the skirt. An athletic type which is attracting attention is a two-piece suit having a white knitted worsted top and separate trunks of striped or plain flannel in contrasting color, with a white web belt. Higher priced swimming costumes of a dressier type are developed in black satin, taffeta, printed rajah and gay polka-dotted silks."

TENDENCIES IN DRESSES.

Features of Some Models for Mid-Summer and the Fall.

Reports in style circles indicate the probable importance of fur-trimmed tailored dresses and coat-dresses for Fall. Pleated details are stressed as the outstanding features of this mode, according to a bulletin issued yesterday by the fashion service department of the Botany Worsted Mills. Pleated models, adds the bulletin, have been submitted recently by the couturiers Chanel and Bernard, both of whom feature the tiered principle for the skirt section, the upper section being bloused and belted low about the hips. The bloused-back dress, although freely predicted for Fall, the bulletin continues, is modified in the midsummer adaptations. In the Chanel frock there is a blouse under-arm fullness, with a flat front and back worked up in pin-tuck festoon. This type of dress is successor to the coat-dress for Spring town wear, although the latter model is submitted by leading houses both in silk and wool crêpes in more formal guise than in recent seasons. Cashmeres, fine reps and the important twills continue to be shown as fabrics best adapted to these styles of smart practicality. But the new note which will bear close watching is the recently advocated open-weave type of material which suggests the quadruple georgettes.

Newer details which add interest to the semi-transparent Summer wrap developed in double georgette, Roma or Elizabeth crêpes, are the effects adopted for finishing hems and neck-lines. The vogue continues for knotted-in fringes upon these models, which follow deeply curving decorative lines across the back and sides, applied in tiers to the point midway between knee and hip line.

Considerable interest attaches to the development of gros de Londres as a successor to taffeta for the formal midsummer evening wrap. Various houses now completing their mid-summer collections express marked satisfaction with this medium. For the model of youthful styling the loose upper section is adopted by one designer, who places three wide full-gathered puffs in tiers from the hem to a point just below the hip line.

UNION OF ALL SLAVS IS URGED BY BENES

Czechoslovak Minister Calls On Youth to Win for Nations Higher Place in Europe.

WANTS CULTURE ESTEEMED

Cooperation, Easier Now Than Before World War, Must Be Guided by Democratic Ideals, He Insists.

Special Correspondence THE NEW YORK TIMES.

PRAGUE, March 30.—In an interesting and significant article on the "Political Cooperation of the Slavic Nations," published in the magazine Slovensky Prehled, Dr. Eduard Benes, the Czechoslovak Minister of Foreign Affairs, says that now it will be easier for the Slavic nations to work together than before the war.

"Yugoslavia of today and Poland can make an agreement to establish a friendly union. Serious differences in this direction do not now exist. Soon Bulgaria and Russia will also be able to join such a compact," writes Dr. Benes, who continues:

"Political cooperation between the Slavic countries will differ from the Slavic policies before the war. It will not be a policy connecting States that are not free. This is a most significant factor, for the people of each country will no longer come into conflict with their own State, a condition which makes the present problem enormously easier.

"The program of political cooperation by the Slavic States must rest exclusively on democracy. All undemocratic nationalism on the part of any of the Slavic peoples at the very outset excludes a true Slavic policy. Only the democrats can formulate a real Slavic policy, and not the Chauvinists.

Says Youth Must Lead.

"Absolute Czarism or orthodox reaction would have to return to the prewar conception to initiate again the old imperialism, through which one part of the people worked to the disadvantage of the other.

"Therefore, the new Slavic policy can be created only by the young generation, which is not burdened by the old Slavic ideas and knows fully what the revolution means to the Slavic peoples.

"With regard to the relation of the Slavs to the Germans, the new democracy must accept without reservation the ideas of the League of Nations and on this basis establish its relations with Germany and other nations of Europe. The relation of the Slavs and Germans must be based on the following considerations:

"1. The individual Slav nations have an interest in the creation of a strong League of Nations.

"2. Each Slavic nation must establish a proper relation with the Germans in their own countries (minority elements in the individual States) on the basis of modern democratic League of Nations policies.

"With regard to the Germans, the Slavs must establish a positive program in place of a negative point of view. Because of neglect of this the Slav in the past has been placed at a disadvantage.

Aims at Higher Esteem.

"The great purpose of a practical Slavic policy will be to win for all Slav nations and cultures a new place in Europe. The Slavs as a whole and as individual nations are not so fully appreciated as they should be.

"In some measure this is the natural cause of the former economic, political and cultural conditions of Slavism in general. The concrete purpose, therefore, of Slavic cooperation must be to change this situation.

"I recognize as justifiable only an expansion that is founded on a cultural basis. Therein we must seek to distinguish ourselves, and in this direction all Slavs can have a mutual aim. This expansion is demanded by a modern democratic ideal, and in this nations should find their greatness and glory. Also this is an ideal which is based on humanity. For all great Slavs democracy means, above all, humanity."

ITALIAN ART ON VIEW.

Many Rare Paintings and Other Objects Will Later Be Sold.

Parts II and III of the Achillito Chiesa collection of early Italian primitives and Renaissance paintings, early Italian majolicas, textiles, Gothic ivories, Renaissance textiles and other objects are now on view at the American Art Galleries and will be sold there this week. The paintings will be offered Friday evening, and the other objects Friday and Saturday afternoons.

There are fifty-nine paintings. Correggio is presented by a Madonna and Child and Filippino Lippi is seen in two paintings of the Legend of Perseus. Da Messina's portrait of a Sicilian Patrician in Ecclesiastical Costume is probably the outstanding number of the collection. Lorenzo Lotto's portrait of the red-bearded poet Meldolla; del Conti's portrait of a man; the Crespi Madonna, attributed to Michaelangelo Buonarroti; a decorative Flight into Egypt by Giulio Campi and Lorenzetti's Saint Mary Magdelene are also prominent features. There is a Crucifixion by Simone da Bologna, and others by Pietro Lorenzetti and Luini, and a unique, large pala by Andrea Orcagna, representing the legend of St. John the Baptist.

In Part IIb there are lovely old velvets in many colors and rare brocades and Milanese and Venetian laces. There are also several rare old Venetian brocade coverlets.

The sculptured Florentine wood busts and figures, the Gothic and other rare carved ivories are all good, as are the French ivories and a group of sixteenth century Limoges and Italian enamels and early Pisan wood carvings.

The furniture contains several carved and gilded cassoni, a stipo à Bambocci and a Byzantine round table, a collection of Carthusian coffrets, a Norman Sicilian inlaid ivory casket, circa 1,200, and a Certosina casket.

A gorgeously illuminated Persian manuscript in different colors and elaborately decorated in gold, from the library of Ardebil, is one of the finest works of its kind ever offered here.

KLAN CAUSES CHURCH PANIC

Cincinnati Negroes Flee When the Knights Appear to Offer Purse.

Special to The New York Times.

CINCINNATI, Ohio, April 10.—When fifty-one hooded and gowned Knights of the Ku Klux Klan filed into the People's Missionary Baptist Church here last Sunday a panic occurred among the negroes who made up the congregation, it was learned today, when members of the congregation held an indignation meeting against the Klan and against their pastor for being on friendly terms with the Knights.

When the Klansmen appeared on Sunday men and women ducked under pews and some of the worshippers fled to their homes and barricaded their doors and windows.

In the midst of the disturbance the pastor, the Rev. J. E. Zellers, raised his hands and bade those who still remained in the church to be calm. He asked that the spokesman for the Knights come forward and explain. The leader stepped up to the altar and handed Mr. Zeller $21.45, saying the Klansmen wished to aid the church.

MURDER TRIAL FOR BOY, 17.

To Be Tried for Slaying in Which Koerber Was Convicted.

Following the conviction of 18-year-old Herbert Koerber of 3,816 Third Avenue for the murder of Angelo Mahairis, a Jamaica restaurant proprietor, Richard Daunt, 17, of 235 East Eighty-ninth Street, will be placed on trial in the Queens County Court tomorrow morning for complicity in the same crime.

Early yesterday morning Mrs. Annie Fitzgibbons, 3,816 Third Avenue, the Bronx, grandmother of the convicted youth, visited Queens Jail and tried to see Koerber. As her visit conflicted with the regular visiting hours arranged by Warden George W. Fox, she was unable to see him.

$8,500,000 LAWSUIT DISMISSED BY COURT

Justice May Throws Out Action Against 20 Defendants by Charles Bright, Engineer.

An action by Charles Bright, an engineer, of 99 John Street, Manhattan, to recover $8,500,000 damages from twenty or more corporations and individuals, including John D. Rockefeller Jr. and four Federal Judges, was dismissed yesterday by Justice Mitchell May in the Brooklyn Supreme Court for failure to try the case within a reasonable time. This decision by the Court was upon a motion made two months ago by Murray, Aldrich & Roberts, attorneys for John D. Rockefeller Jr.

At that time, Bright, who acted as his own attorney, told the Court that part of his delay was due to his difficulty in trying to serve legal papers upon some of the prominent men he had named as defendants. He said he had never been able to get a legal paper to John D. Rockefeller at his home at Tarrytown.

It was alleged by Bright that he had been defrauded out of concessions obtained in Uruguay and elsewhere, relating to colonization, privileges, railways, lands and ports. These concessions purported to include a railway link of the Pan-American Railway system to unite the capitals of North and South America, in which the late Andrew Carnegie was interested.

The suit had been through some of the Federal and State courts, and the names of Federal Judges Augustus N. Hand, Charles M. Hough, Julius W. Mack and the late Julius M. Mayer had been added as defendants, it was said, because the plaintiff was dissatisfied with their decisions.

Justice May said that "while the complaint, in rambling and oftimes incoherent allegations covering many pages, charges the defendants with having conspired during a long period of years, commencing in 1907, to cheat and defraud the plaintiff, the application now made to dismiss the complaint is based solely on the failure of the plaintiff to prosecute the action diligently."

INFORMER GETS OFF EASY.

Yonkers Merchant Sentenced to Six Months to a Year for Forgery.

Special to The New York Times.

WHITE PLAINS, N. Y., April 10.—Because August Roder, Yonkers merchant and Lions Club member, caused seven men to be sent to Sing Sing on burglary charges last Fall, Supreme Court Justice Arthur S. Tompkins, before Roder was convicted of first degree forgery last week, sentenced Roder today to from six months to a year in the penitentiary. Roder faced a ten to twenty years' term in Sing Sing until he informed the Court it would be "living hell" for him to have to live in Sing Sing with the men whom he had been responsible for sending there.

Justice Tompkins had the District Attorney investigate. The Court learned that Roder gave information to the New York police that led to the arrest of seven men in the act of holding up a jewelry store. The men were all sent to Sing Sing.

Roder was convicted of defrauding the Yonkers National Bank out of $5,000 on fraudulent stock certificates purporting to be of the Cuban-American Sugar Company, but which the jury found to be forgeries.

Rutgers Alumni Choose Candidates.

Special to The New York Times.

NEW BRUNSWICK, N. J., April 10.—At the semi-annual meeting of the Alumni Council of Rutgers University Charles M. Mason, Dean of the New Jersey Law School of Newark, and Charles E. Pattison of Colonia, N. J., were nominated to run for the office of alumni trustee to succeed George S. Hobart, former State Assemblyman, whose term expires in June.

"Blizzard Class" Celebrates.

Members of the "Blizzard Class" of the Bellevue Hospital Medical College, now part of New York University held their thirty-eighth anniversary dinner last night at the Hotel McAlpin. The class is so named because the members got their diplomas on March 12, 1888, the day of the city's great blizzard.

$201,710 IN TEXTILE SALE.

Vitall and Benguiat Collections Auctioned at Art Gallery.

The third and final session yesterday of the Vitall and Leopold Benguiat collection of textiles at the American Art Galleries brought $123,605, the grand total being $201,710. There were thirty items that ranged in price from $1,000 to $13,000. The latter price was paid by William J. Wentworth for about 122 yards of jardiniere velvet divided into eight curtains 8 feet wide by 15 feet 3 inches long. Its ivory-white satin ground is patterned in rose and emerald velvet with many intermediate tones. Mr. Wentworth also paid $1,100 for an olive-green Italian velvet cape.

Sam Scheppi, Inc., paid $4,800 for a Louis XI millefleurs tapestry and $4,300 for a Brussels tapestry. That firm also paid $1,950 for a Rhodian portiere of silk-embroidered linen with the characteristic Rhodian designs based on scrolling leaves and the tulip, in soft red, blue and green picked out in ivory on natural colored linen.

Keller & Funaro paid $6,000 for six seventeenth century Italian royal jardiniere velvet curtains.

RARE FURNITURE SOLD.

Old English Collection Up for Auction at American Galleries.

Old English furniture and decorative objects collected by Frank Bevan of 142 Fleet Street, London, with additions from other sources, will be sold at the American Art Galleries Thursday afternoon.

Oak, walnut and mahogany pieces, painted and lacquered pieces, a carved pine mantel and two carved pine corner cupboards, a Georgian three-part dining table, Queen Anne spoon-back walnut chairs; English pottery and china, Wedgewood, Lowestoft and lustre, with mirrors, paintings and other objects are included in the 174 lots.

Two old Georgian mahogany doors have carved pine casements. The doors are a fine grain panelled brown mahogany and the pine jambs and cornices are carved in the Sir William Kent manner. A pine overmantel from Lichfield House has swags of floral sprays and leaves and is centred by a quaint painting on canvas of pigeons, parrots and a goose.

O. HENRY MSS. IN SALE.

Autographed Originals to Be Auctioned on April 26.

Original autograph manuscripts of three stories by O. Henry, including one of his most famous tales, "An Unfinished Story," are to be sold at the Anderson Galleries on April 26, according to an announcement yesterday. The manuscripts have been found by Witter Bynner, the poet, who was associate editor of McClure's Magazine when O. Henry first came to New York.

The manuscript of "An Unfinished Story" differs from the story as finally published. The first eight pages of the manuscripts—with the exception of a few words—do not appear at all in printed form. The manuscripts will be included in the sale of books and autographs from the libraries of Isidore Braggiotti, Brookline, Mass.; Emanuel Hertz, New York, the late Colonel James H. Manning, Albany, and other private collectors.

Garden Furniture Up for Auction.

English garden furniture, collected by Thomas Crowther of Fulham, London, will be sold on Wednesday at the American Art Galleries. Lead bird baths, wrought iron and copper jardinieres, lead and stone wall fountains, a Spanish wrought iron and bronze temple bell, an early lead garden tank and iron seats are among the 136 articles listed.

'ZIP, THE WHAT IS IT?' TO QUIT THE CIRCUS

He's 83 Now and Convalescing at Bellevue—Feels He Needs a Rest.

They're missing "Zip, the what-is-it?" in the freaks' room at the new Madison Square Garden these days. But they'll have to get accustomed to his absence. For he told a doctor in Bellevue Hospital last night that he plans to quit the circus.

Forty-six years is a long time to spend in a side show, and "Zip" is 83 now. Traveling with a show is no snap at that age, and half a century spent in the company of bearded ladies and other freaks takes the glamour out of circus life.

"Zip" has thought many times of retiring since the days when he and Tom Thumb were headliners in old P. T. Barnum's circus. But he never could quite break away. And, then, last Wednesday they took him to Bellevue with acute bronchitis and the doctors shook their heads. He had a temperature of 106 and he was a real wild man. Many a patient in Bellevue spent a sleepless night Wednesday as the result of "Zip's" blood-curdling circus yells.

Last night the ward doctor approached his cot to take the temperature reading. It was down to 100. "You're all right now," he observed. "Zip" smiled and grew confidential. "I'll get well," he said. "But, Doc, I'm not going back to the circus. I've had enough."

In private life "Zip" is William Johnson. And though most people think he came from an African jungle, his real home is Bound Brook, N. J. He expects to go back there when he retires.

TO SELL WASHINGTON CANE.

Anderson Galleries Will Auction Authenticated Walking Stick.

A gold-headed cane, engraved with the arms of George Washington, accompanied by a sheaf of authenticating documents, bequeathed by the first President to his childhood friend, Robert Washington of Chotanck, is to be sold at auction on April 26 at the Anderson Galleries.

The cane is made of light-colored wood. It is 46½ inches long and its gold head is considerably dented.

Accompanying the authenticating papers and affidavits, covering every step of its descent, is a certified copy of the clause in the will bequeathing the cane to Robert Washington, "acquaintance and friend of my juvenile years." The sale was ordered by William Curran and the Safe Deposit and Trust Company of Baltimore, executors of the estate of the late William H. H. Raleigh.

BECOMES FIDDLE CHAMPION.

James Claffey, Winner in Maine, Once Played in Boston Symphony.

LEWISTON, Me., April 10 (AP).—James F. Claffey of Boston tonight won the world-wide fiddling championship in the finals which ended a week's competition among about 100 entrants. He will receive a silver loving cup and $1,000 in gold.

Claffey, who played the violin in the Boston Symphony Orchestra years ago is in his sixty-seventh year.

Edwin Minnin of Lakeport, N. H., was second; John McKenney of Farmington, Me., third and John Boivin of St. George, Quebec, fourth.

LEITER REAL ESTATE SOLD.

A Half-Block in Chicago Said to Have Brought $4,000,000.

CHICAGO, April 10 (AP).—A half block in the Chicago Loop, between Clark, Adams and Quincy Streets, has been sold by the estate of Levi Z. Leiter, it was announced today. The consideration was reported as $4,000,000.

The purchasers, the bond house of P. W. Chapman & Co., and Ernest Jackson, a broker, plan erection on the site of a forty-one-story building 484 feet tall. It will be taller than any building in Chicago except the Morrison Hotel, close by, which is 506 feet high.

FLOURISH IN CHINA WITHOUT WRITINGS

Standard Oil and Rockefeller Foundation Have Only Verbal Agreements With Guilds.

NEW DOCTRINE OF TREATIES

Dr. Sze Propounds Chinese View That If Pacts Become Burdens They Should Be Discarded.

By FREDERICK CUNLIFFE OWEN, C. B. E.

The word of a Chinaman throughout the vast empire of nearly 400,000,000 always has been accounted everywhere as being as good as his bond, and in all commercial dealings with him written contracts were regarded as superfluous. That was one of the time-honored principles of the Chinese people, and the ancient doctrine which was the original basis of international trade with China, and in fact, to a great extent, with Central Asia. But foreign universities, and especially those of the United States, have modified these views, and there is little to distinguish the historic "scrap of paper" of the German Chancellor von Bethman-Hollweg in August, 1914, from the new doctrine of "Rebus Sic Stantibus" propounded by his Excellency, Dr. Sze, the Chinese Minister Plenipotentiary at Washington, and incidentally one of the most distinguished graduates of Columbia University in New York.

He recently insisted that "a proposition today recognized by all international jurists is that all treaties, whatever their character, lose their binding force and are subject to unilateral denunciation if the conditions under which they were entered into so change that they have no longer a reasonable or rational basis. This is known," declares his Excellency, "as the doctrine of 'Rebus Sic Stantibus.'" It means that "a State is justified in releasing itself from an agreement into which it has entered upon the simple ground that it finds its undertakings irksome and burdensome and that the conditions have so changed that a limitation which when agreed to was not of so serious a character as to endanger the life or the essentially vital interests of the obligated State, becomes so by reason of changes in political, economic or other conditions. In such cases as these the limitations and the treaty which contain them may be denounced."

Dr. Sze points out that the agreements entered into more than half a century ago whereby it was provided that China should not levy upon exports or imports, custom dues greater than 5 per cent. "ad valorem" constituted today a restriction upon her fiscal freedom so seriously prejudicial to her existence and to her prosperity as to warrant her in denouncing the former treaty limitations on the ground of the principle of Rebus Sic Stantibus.

It is stated that Silas Strawn, the American delegate on the Extraterritoriality Commission at Peking, is disposed to take a similar view, in the light of modern jurisprudence, differing in this respect from nearly all his foreign colleagues.

These Three Flourish.

It is a peculiar fact that the three greatest foreign interests in China which have all along been working without let or hindrance, are based entirely upon mutual interests, and unwritten contracts or treaties. They are the American Standard Oil Company, the British-American Tobacco Company and the great Hospital and Scientific Research Institute managed jointly by Chinese and American scientists, but which China owes to the munificent generosity of John D. Rockefeller Jr. and his father.

The Standard Oil Company, whose products are to be found in the most remote confines of the former Chinese Empire, has no trouble with China or with the Chinese. That is because it works "with them" instead of at their expense. Almost everywhere the American and the Chinese are working hand in hand as a mutually productive business, which comprises all the by-products of oil, even to the extent of the tin containers and also the film pictures portraying the various phases of the vast industry, inaugurated by John D. Rockefeller.

The British-American Tobacco Company has initiated, during the past twenty years, the Chinaman in the use of the cigarette, which has almost completely supplanted opium, that nowadays is restricted almost wholly to the very rich. The cigarette, sold for a nominal price, is today within the reach of the humblest coolie. The cigarettes are produced from the cheapest form of American tobacco by thousands of subsidiary Chinese companies of the parent British-American concern. In order to advertise their wares all these Chinese companies, like those of the Standard Oil people, take the trouble to show, even in the remote portions of China, moving pictures, sometimes for a nominal price, and sometimes free of cost, demonstrating not only the various features of the tobacco industry and machinery, but also other economic and political pictures.

The British-American Tobacco Company, which draws the major portion of its supplies in the rough from the United States, derives its most enormous revenues from its Chinese business, and for the year 1925 was able to show a net profit of $25,000,000, while the Chairman of the concern, Sir Hugo Cunliffe-Owen, did not hesitate to proclaim in London that of all the people associated with the parent company, there was none with whom it would sooner do business—honest, clean and profitable business—than with the Chinese.

The Rockefeller Hospital.

The huge Rockefeller Chinese Hospital and Institute for Scientific Research owes its inception to the enlightened generosity of the Rockefeller Foundation. But the investigators, the members of the various faculties, the bacteriologists, &c., are pretty equally divided between Chinese scientists of the most modern type and Americans, who work hand in hand for the benefit primarily of China and indirectly of all mankind.

Their labors, although of more recent origin than the Standard Oil and the British-American Tobacco Company, are becoming known throughout the length and breadth of China, and in all the various wars between the different provincial military chieftains, their operations direct and indirect, have been left without the slightest degree of molestation, even by the banditry and the river and coast pirates who infest the country.

This association of the best elements of the United States and of Great Britain, with the best and most receptive people in China, thus far has worked miracles, both from an economic and political point of view. There has been no molestation of any kind between the various races, nothing but the closest kind of friendly and trustful intercourse, which is certain to develop by leaps and bounds as time goes by, regardless of civil wars, and of treaties between the various governments.

It must not be forgotten that there are vast conservative forces in China, forces controlling some of the biggest industries and trade of the nation, namely the great Guilds, whose power generally exercised in the most unobtrusive and one might almost say secret manner is wide reaching, extending far beyond the national borders. These Guilds have been in existence for hundreds of years. Few know their actual leaders. They almost always work in the dark, so as to be beyond the reach of any influence that might prove detrimental to the best interests of their organization.

How the Guilds Work.

As a general rule, these great guilds operate independently of one another. But on rare occasions, when they combine with one another, their force is well nigh irresistible. And in this connection it is worthy of note that none of the great provincial Tchuns, or Governors, no matter how strong, not even the Manchu Emperors and Empresses in the days of their most despotic sway and tyranny, have ever sought to control and dominate these Guilds, either individually or collectively. They know by experience that the Guild has the means of paralyzing almost over night any particular trade and industry with which it is concerned, and of thus arresting the economic machinery of the nation. In the absence of any central authority at Peking they abstain as far as possible from any participation in public life, intent on preserving their property from spoilation by the leaders of the various revolutionary movements or provincial uprisings that may achieve more or less momentary supremacy.

They are the great conservative forces of the nation, who helped Sir Robert Hart to build up that magnificent Imperial Chinese Custom Service, the foreign staff of which, ruled with a rod of iron by their amazing Irish chieftain, was composed of picked men of almost every nation, among its American members having been former Secretary of the United States Navy Edwin Denby. It was an organization which commanded the most complete confidence of the Chinese Government and nation, and above all of the great Guilds, and the respect of every foreign power and with which neither Emperor nor Empress, nor Prime Minister or Grand Eunuch or President of the Republic ever attempted to tamper or interfere.

At the present moment the Treasury of the Chinese Government at Peking is empty. The only resources available are those of the Chinese Custom Service of which an Irishman, Sir Francis Aglen, has supreme control, and who last year successfully opposed a vigorous refusal to turn over to the Peking Government the $25,000,000 of surplus over and above the amount of security pledged for foreign loans.

That Chinese Custom Service, which has now been in existence since 1854, is the one permanent and stable institution in China, and its existence is based not on any contract or treaty but on a mere verbal understanding between the great Guilds and Sir Robert Hart. It is the powerful that when the other day the great Southern metropolis and seaport of Canton, dominated by Chinese Bolshevists attempted to boycott British shipping, the representative of Sir Francis Aglen decreed over night the close of Canton to all foreign shipping. And within twenty-four hours the measure had proved effective and the boycott was lifted.

The Chinese Custom Service under Sir Francis Aglen, like the Standard Oil Company of New York, like the British-American Tobacco Company and like the Rockefeller Institute for Research and general hospital service near Peking, are all of them dependent upon mere verbal agreement but not in written understandings or treaties with the ancient Guilds of China, upon which the future of the greatest nation of the world may be said to depend.

Lake Navigation to Open Late.

DULUTH, Minn., April 10 (AP).—The opening of the lake navigation season this year will be very late, say lake men, who predict there is no chance of traffice on the lakes before May 1. The average date of opening inter-lake navigation at the Duluth Superior harbor is April 21. There is more ice in the Duluth harbor today than there has been in many years and there is no sign of a break-up.

CHINESE HAD LEAGUE IDEA.

Two States Held Out and Prevented Anti-War Covenant.

LONDON, April 10 (AP).—Those who have been concerned over the placing of the honor of having first conceived the idea of a League of Nations have been astonished by the suggestion of Professor H. A. Giles of Cambridge, noted student of the culture and history of China, that China made an attempt to create a league of States with a similar purpose 546 years before Christ.

What is now China was then divided into a number of separate independent States, several of which were larger than France or Germany of today. A covenant was actually signed by representatives of various States with a view to putting an end to war. But two States held out and the league failed to come into existence. Three hundred years later the States were brought together by warlike methods under the Ch'in dynasty.

Own Conrad in this new edition—and save $140.75

MOST bookish people have heard of the famous Sun Dial Edition of Joseph Conrad. The great novelist autographed it, and wrote a special preface to each one of the twenty-four volumes. The sets sold for $175.75 each. It was an edition designed for wealthy book-collectors, 735 of whom paid a total sum of $129,176.25 for this edition.

The new Kent Edition, offered here, is printed from the same style and size of type as the famous Sun Dial Edition. It contains the same fascinating special prefaces by Conrad—telling how he came to write each one of his great books, who the original characters were in many cases, and how he himself regarded them. Moreover, it contains two additional volumes, Tales of Hearsay and Suspense.

This new Kent Edition is a rare set of books in every respect; but, instead of selling for $175.75 cash, like the autographed Sun Dial Edition, its price is only $35 and even this sum may be paid in convenient small amounts, if desired. No doubt there will be later editions of Conrad, for his works will live; but certainly no edition of like workmanship at so low a price. For those who want to own Conrad complete—and what intelligent book-lover does not?—this is the best opportunity ever presented. Mail the coupon below and examine the Kent Edition at our expense.

JOSEPH CONRAD

The whole literary world recommends Conrad—why postpone reading his works?

A few out of hundreds of opinions of well-known writers:

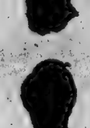
Those who haven't read Conrad are not well read. Those who don't intend to read him are of a foolish and slovenly mental habit. As for those who are engaged in reading him for the first time—how I envy them! —Gouverneur Morris

There is no one like him; there is no one remotely like him. He sees and describes not merely this man's love or that woman's inspiration, but the blind sweep and devastation of universal forces.
—H. L. Mencken

One of my chief claims to distinction in the world is that I wrote the first long appreciative review of Joseph Conrad's work. —H. G. Wells

Here, surely, if ever, is genius—the possession by a divine spirit of man's earthly clay.
—Hugh Walpole

The only writing of the last twelve years that will enrich the English language to any extent.
—John Galsworthy



One comes to Conrad with unspeakable relief—with the feeling that here, at last, is a novelist who understands as the poets do.
—Christopher Morley

To stand in a Summer-stifled, man-smelling city street and to feel suddenly a fresh salt wind from the far-off pastures of the sea—this is the sensation when one comes upon a book by Joseph Conrad.
—Mary Austin

I know of no contemporary author who can build a scene before the eye as vividly as Conrad, or who can push a character through the door and leave him to speak for himself as Conrad does.
—Meredith Nicholson

"The finest and deepest effects of Conrad's art are always found when, in the process of the story, some solitary man and woman encounter each other far from civilization, and tearing off, as it were, the mask of each other's souls, are confronted by a deeper and more inveterate mystery—the eternal mystery of difference."

Examine at our expense the new Kent Edition.

THE new Kent Edition of Conrad—pictured above—is the only twenty-six volume edition of Conrad ever published. It is a "popular" edition only in one sense—that of price. While it compares favorably in every respect with the Sun Dial Edition, it represents a saving to the booklover of moderate means of $140.75 over that now-famous set. Because of this, the demand for it has been extraordinary, and without doubt the edition will soon be oversubscribed. If you are interested, you are therefore advised to send the examination coupon or a letter at once. The twenty-six volumes will be sent for examination for a week. If they do not in every respect meet with your expectation, they may be returned and your order will be cancelled.

FARFOROVAYA KUKLA (The Porcelain Doll). By Leo Tolstoy, in "Rul," Berlin, 1926, No. 1575.

By ALEXANDER I. NAZAROFF

RUSSIAN literature has been enriched in the course of recent months by the publication of a series of hitherto unknown works by Leo Tolstoy which have at last emerged from the thick portfolio of "Zadrugha," the publishing company that was entrusted fifteen years ago, after the death of the great writer, with the investigation and publication of his manuscripts and archives. These works are fifteen in number. They comprise an unfinished novel, four short (and comparatively unimportant) plays, a few short stories, and three or four philosophic excerpts and fairy tales. Chronologically they spread over a period of sixty years (from 1851 to 1910) and present their author in all his mental transformations. His happy, restless and life-asserting youth overloaded with talents and passions, his exuberant maturity and his equally restless, but unhappy and life-denying senility, preaching tolerance and chilling the atmosphere by its apostolic intolerance, deprecating all philosophy and yet philosophizing day and night—all these epochs and moods are mirrored in them. These works are not, however, a mere addition of so many new—and smaller—diamonds to the royal diadem of immortal novels and stories bequeathed to us by the anachorite of the Yassnaya Polyana. His post-mortem apparition discloses to us also new, hitherto unperceived, facets of his complex genius and gives us new glimpses of that peculiar combination of unsurpassed artistic greatness and of naïveté, perhaps even of ridiculous naïveté, in the realm of abstract philosophizing which can find room only in minds of extra normal size, in minds which are, as it were, a miniature cosmos within the cosmos.

The most important of these works is the unfinished novel "Hundred Years." The history of this conceived but unborn masterpiece is typical of its author. Having completed "War and Peace" in 1869 Tolstoy passed with his usual energy to another novel, "The Decembrists," in which he wanted to depict the abortive revolution which had been attempted in 1825 by radical-minded Russian aristocrats. This led him to general meditation on Russian history with its originalities and peculiarities which seemed unexplainable to him. Thinking and studying, "untangling the thread" (as he himself put it), he finally arrived at the epoch of Peter the Great and understood that "it was there that lay the solution of all Russian problems." "What an epoch for an artist (he wrote to Strakhov)! Whatever one glances at, problems and riddles arise. And they can be solved only by artistic methods. The very knot of Russia's national life lies there!" Indeed, the birth, at the dawn of the eighteenth century, of modern, imperial Russia out of the secluded and somnolent Czardom and the titanic personality of Peter were subjects worthy of Tolstoy's brush. "The Decembrists" was given up at once; "Hundred Years" took its place.

For ten years (1870-80) Tolstoy dug in the archives, studied old documents, imbibed the spirit of the epoch and of the old, obsolete language, wrote separate scenes and chapters, gave up the work for months (for it was during these very years that he wrote a number of other masterpieces, such as "Anna Karenina") and took it up again with renewed zeal. The heroes of the novel had crystallized in his mind by 1873. Their rôles were distributed. "They are all clothed, shaped and seated (wrote Countess Tolstoy). But they have not yet begun to breathe; perhaps they will soon begin." Indeed, a few more touches, and they began. Throbbing with Tolstoy's full-blooded vitality they moved in gorgeous mass scenes and lived unmistakably genuine lives. It was, however, at this moment that their author began to lose interest in them. A year or two later he tossed the whole thing away into a remote drawer and forgot it for good.

All that is left of this vast conception are thirty-two excerpts (not to speak of numerous notes, remarks, &c.), of which three, or even four, are complete chapters. Wading through them one has a strange feeling: one would probably feel about the same way looking at a world abandoned by the Creator on the third or fourth day of creation. The opening of the novel is unforgetable. A few quick strokes of the brush depicting the coup by which Peter, then a youth, was made the ruler of Russia, the trial of the "Strieltzy" (shooters) who sided against him with his ambitious sister, Czarina Sofia, the torture-wheel on which their bodies shrank and shuddered during the trial and the dignified,

Count Leo Tolstoy.

From the Portrait by N. N. Ge in the Tolstoy Museum in Leningrad.

old-fashioned boyars of the Czar listening to their testimonies combine into a dynamic canvas of rare beauty and power. It is a sample of Tolstoy at his best. This applies also to a few paragraphs in which he gives the reader a glimpse of the young Peter:

The Czar, a long, enormous body, folded in three, was bending over a piece of wood which he held between his knees and carved with a knife; with every violent movement his head and lips jerked from right to left.

To this Tolstoy adds but a few sentences scattered here and there; but they suffice to convey to the reader such an impression of concentrated will, strength and young, unbalanced power as no writer portraying Peter, from Mereshkovsky to Klabund, has ever succeeded in conveying.

Why did Tolstoy abandon the creation of this gorgeous world? Did he forsake the novel because he could not find a good opening paragraph for it, as had been the case with some other unfinished works of his? Or was he sidetracked by other interests, by a new paroxysm of educational fever, for instance? No; in this case the cause seems to have lain deeper. At that time Tolstoy the moralist was already attempting to strangle Tolstoy the artist. He was already forcing his own gigantic self and the world around him into the Procrustean bed of a theory. From the viewpoint of that vegetarian theory the great Tolstoy come to despise, almost to hate, the great Peter, as he came to despise, almost to hate, nearly all great men. "The violent, drunken beast"—it is in such words that he characterised the man who, though with a wine bottle in one hand, had pushed Russia with the other about a hundred years ahead of the epoch in which he had found it. The days were near when Tolstoy would register in his diary that he had finally cured himself of the vice of bicycling, when he would reproach himself for yielding to another "desire," that is to say for dipping a piece of bread into the thick gravy of a roast, when he would be deeply angered by those who did not bend to the truths discovered by him, when the little pedantic Tolstoyist would enslave further and further the titanic Tolstoy.

In the volume of Tolstoy's hitherto unpublished short stories and plays there is one that contains a real revelation to the students of the great writer. This plotless story of some thirty pages entitled "The History of Yesterday" is the earliest fiction work by Tolstoy that we know of. It was written in March, 1851, when he was 22 years old. If we did not know that its author was Tolstoy we would ascribe it to Marcel Proust. It is true that, reading it, one comes, here and there, across an expression, a grammatical peculiarity, a thought typical of Tolstoy, but the esthetic method and the construction are certainly those of the famous Frenchman. The story is a deliberate attempt to tell in all detail the thoughts, impressions and feelings that have passed through the author's mind in the course of one evening (is the subject itself not Proustean?). It consists of such a lace-work of fleeting psychological nuances and associations, of such vibrations of thought between the conscious and the unconscious, of such interplay of associations switching the attention from one subject to the other as are to be found only in Proust's inimitable (and almost unreadable) volumes. Take a passage like this:

Going to bed I thought: What a pleasure it would be to wrap myself up in the blanket and to fall asleep. But as soon as I began to forget myself I realised that it was a pleasure to forget oneself, and I at once awoke. All delights of our body are killed by consciousness. We should not realise; the trouble with me was that I realised that I was falling asleep and then I realised that I was realising it, and so it went on. * * *

Does it not read like a paragraph from "Du coté de chez Swann"! It is really a revelation that Tolstoy possessed at the age of 22 the secret of that analysis of spiritual infinitesimals by which the aged Proust won the admiration of the world seventy years later.

This is, however, Tolstoy's only sample of that kind of writing. (Continued on Page 14)

Symptoms of the Home Town Mind

Diagnoses of This and That by the Authors of Some New Volumes of Essays

THE HOME TOWN MIND. By Dan Aikman. 231 pp. New York: Minton, Balch & Co. $2.50.

DETOURS. By Philip S. Marden. 235 pp. Boston: Houghton Mifflin Company. $2.50.

THE HOMES' BOX. By Robert Lynd. 320 pp. New York: D. Appleton & Co. $2.

ESSAYS ON LIFE. By A. Clutton-Brock. 256 pp. New York: E. P. Dutton & Co. $2.

UNPOSTED LETTERS. By John C. Squire. 152 pp. New York: G. P. Putnam's Sons. $3.

By PERCY A. HUTCHISON.

THERE has been of late years no little increase in the popularity of the essay with American readers. If one seeks the cause of this change there will be temptation to find it in the war, when fact, so grossly crowded out fancy that one was a bit ashamed to be caught reading anything which did not, either directly or indirectly, lean upon fact. But a decade has passed since the war, and this preoccupation with the essay still persevered; moreover the essay, as it is now being met with in magazines, newspapers and books, is not generally the war-time "article," primarily informative in nature; it is more nearly an approach to what may be termed the "true essay," with which one associates before all others the names of Montaigne and Lamb. Hence it would seem doubtful whether the war did anything more than add impetus to a movement already discernible, a movement due primarily to a maturing of literary taste.

It may seem to many that there is something highly arbitrary in the implications of this final statement, for it will be retorted, and truly, that the essay has been present in American literature from the first. This is, of course, true; but it is true for the reason that American literature was, in its beginnings, merely an extension on the stem of English literature, and the essay was already an integral part of that body of letters. But the American essay, as the product of native literary industry—and it is of this we spoke primarily—is now taking on national characteristics to a degree not hitherto observable. Five volumes of essays furnish the object, as well as the subject, of this review; and, although it happens that only two of these volumes are from American pens, the other three being English, the distinction just made is in these two apparent. It may be that the reader will prefer the imported baskets of fruit to the home-grown variety; but that is beside the point. No invidious comparisons will be made here; the writer will confine himself to a few differentiating remarks and leave the choice to his readers.

To begin, then, with the collection of papers by Duncan Aikman to which he gives the name, "The Home Town Mind," the Americanism of which positively bellows in the title. All of the included essays have already made their appearance in print, some in The American Mercury, others in Harper's Magazine. There is one common temper of mind behind all of the studies, and thus Mr. Aikman fulfills the requirement Montaigne made of his own writings, namely, that they offer a portrait—a mental portrait, that is—of himself.

It was said that the Americanism of Mr. Aikman's title bellowed—and that is precisely what the author intended it to do. Mr. Aikman is most stanchly an American when he is condemning certain characteristics of his countrymen. And it is one of these characteristics to bellow when by so doing they can the more effectively and quickly put over one or another of the standardizing ideas with which they hope, or feign to hope, to make Americans all think and act and speak alike from Maine to California, from the Canadian border to the Rio Grande. Mr. Aikman is, as his readers will immediately discover, intensely individual, and individualism he finds to be the one thing not tolerated in the United States.

No one's home town is the exclusive hero of this collection [he writes]: * * * For the home-town mind is not the peculiar individuality—if any—of Pittsburgh or Vicksburg. We are a sociable and highly imitative race, incessantly eager to conform to new conventions. We are bound to each other and to each other's modes of thought and conduct by the most incessant communications, the most tireless habits of organization with which the race has yet been afflicted. Thus, despite a few rapidly declining sectional variations, the home-town mind functions no longer in a healthy isolation, but with something closely resembling mob psychology.

With this, from the author's introduction, it would be possible—even without any recollection of the essays on their initial appearance—to anticipate some of the subjects to which Mr. Aikman turns his attention. One would anticipate, not to particularize too extensively, that he would turn his fire on prohibition, on the Ku Klux Klan, on certain aspects of national politics, on religious differences and bigotry. But the mistake must not be made of supposing that Mr. Aikman is interested in any one of these several phenomena as a thing in itself; he is not. For Mr. Aikman each is but the symptom of a national disease—the disease of standardization, which is to say the itch to be one's brother's keeper, and, failing in that, the willingness to be subservient to one's brother. To continue in the author's own words:

So, whether it be prohibition, compulsory fundamentalism, compulsory political regularity, compulsory business nunneriams or intellectual interests, or compulsory sentimental history in schools, whatever the home town mind sets before itself as the symbol of conquest over nonconformity is pretty likely to be achieved.

From this it may be concluded that Mr. Aiken is fairly pessimistic over any change from this, and such a conclusion will come near being correct. He is too keen an observer not to perceive that standardization is becoming pretty much the order of the day the world over; in Europe there was fought a standardized war, and, despite the cry over the rights of small nations, the plan seems to be for a standardized peace. Yet Mr. Aiken does well to call to the attention of Americans what they are losing out of their lives in supinely giving up the fierce nonconformity which was so marked a trait of the founders; and if he is fighting in what must seem, to most a failing cause all will find that he slashes right lustily and with a cutting blade. There is much, too, of homely observation and humor in the pungent pages of "The Home Town Mind," and if wit directed on a situation is somewhat of a confession that the situation is already lost—and looking broadly over those who have sought to remold through the employment of irony this would seem at least an arguable thesis—if Mr. Aikman cannot, in a word, change us, we can at least find stimulating enjoyment in his diatribes. Probably it would be better for America if it would follow some of his precepts.

Philip S. Marden, author of "Detours," is also an American. Mr. Marden is a newspaper writer, and most if not all of the papers of the volume have received newspaper publication. The author begs some indulgence. "It is probable," he writes, "that the trail of the journalistic serpent is over them all, despite a conscientious effort to obliterate as far as possible his traces." But his excuse for offering these mental kittens is that some readers may find them mildly amusing, and when the reader finds them, as he will, not mildly but highly entertaining, the trail of the serpent (the obliterating process was not vastly successful) will be forgotten and forgiven.

It makes little difference what subject Mr. Marden elects to tackle—why should we not also fall into what is euphemistically called "newspaper ease"—the author's handling of the same will provoke more to laughter than to thought. And is there any reason why this should not be so? A laugh in time has probably saved far more than nine (persons) and Mr. Marden furnishes many life-savers. Do you "count your calories"—an occupation not now so general as once it threatened to become and this despite the fact that one chain of restaurants still prints the number of calories contained (supposedly) in each viand or dessert. Mr. Marden suggests that this policy be followed by hostesses when sending out invitations to dinner, appending the menu to the invitation, so that the prospective guest can see whether he will receive the proper amount of nourishment, and if not, decline. Just such absurdities as this make up the book, and as life is largely made up of absurdities the chief function of any book is thereby fulfilled. "Detours" is a mirroring of life.

In two of the volumes out of England, "The Money Box," by Robert Lynd, and "Essays on Life," by A. Clutton-Brock, the latter a posthumous publication, there is a truer approach to the essay as a lasting fragment of literature than is the case with the American volumes. And before one shall rise up to hurl innuendoes reflecting on patriotism this dictum shall be explained. Both Mr. Aikman and Mr Marden, possibly because of their close affiliation with the press, the very function of which is to capitalize the moment, "date" too absolutely to compass that timelessness which is essential to the essay. Because they insist on being modern they will soon be obsolete. Montaigne and Lamb, because they never "date," cannot perish. This is something which the Ameri-

Stuart Sherman Puts Away His Mortar-board

CRITICAL WOODCUTS. By Stuart Sherman. Illustrated with portraits engraved on wood by Bertrand Sadig. 348 pp. New York: Charles Scribner's Sons. $2.50.

WHATEVER may be the shortcomings of the American newspaper, its influence as a democratic leveler is not to be minimised. When he occupied a professional chair at the University of Illinois and wrote "The American Genius," "Americans," and so on, the author of these "Critical Woodcuts" was Stuart P. Sherman; but since coming to New York he has become plain Stuart Sherman.

Probably there is no relation between the simplifying of his cognomen and the change in manner one remarks in Mr. Sherman's critical work—and yet there may be. It is possible that both come from the same common cause—the change from an academic "chair" to a democratic "job." Professor Stuart P. Sherman, author of "The American Genius," and so forth, always made his gown and mortarboard just a little bit conspicuous. We have not seen Mr. Stuart Sherman at work in his office of The Herald-Tribune, but it is clear from "Critical Woodcuts," a collection of his published reviews of books, that the author writes with his sleeves rolled up and a bowler hat on the back of his head, if not in actuality, at least metaphorically. The metamorphosis of the professor into the newspaperman has been a good one for Sherman—he has learned to talk and not to preach.

And the promising part of this change is that in the transformation he has lost none of his critical acumen, or lessened his insistence on standards of taste and style. The first was less to be feared than the second; contact with a newspaper, even the semi-detached contact of a critic, should sharpen wits rather than dull them. But by the very same token, because the work of the newspaper writer is done by the clock, not only is style frequently sacrificed but sometimes taste as well. It is unfortunate that this should be so; but it is. And even the critic, enjoying a relationship semi-detached, has to have a care lest he fall under the influence. It is sustaining to the confidence he long ago inspired in his readers to find that Mr. Sherman has not succumbed, even to a slight degree. On the contrary, as the result of becoming more personal Mr. Sherman has achieved a warmth and color of style which is lacking in the books written during his academic sojourn.

Mr. Sherman calls these contributed papers neither "essays" nor "studies"; the term he uses is "critical impressions," from which it may be inferred that he wishes himself to be regarded as of the impressionistic school of criticism. But his work itself scarcely bears out such an inference. Mr. Sherman is nothing if not clear-cut in expression; and although he has all the sensitiveness of the impressionist he maintains a position, when once assumed, with a tenacity and a vigor not easily to be associated with that word. What, most probably, he is seeking to convey by this characterization of his work is his interest in the treatment of a subject as distinguishable from the subject itself. His words on this phase of the matter, as set forth in the introduction to the book, are important.

In the present state of criticism I fancy that most of my visitors (Mr. Sherman regards his book as a portrait gallery) will interest themselves in the subjects and not in the treatment, just as, to compare great things with small, the casual visitor at the Metropolitan standing before the portrait of an eminent American falls into a reverie on Mr. Rockefeller rather than on John Sargent.

It is one of his "virtues" (a favorite word) that Mr. Sherman, while keeping his study directed at an author's treatment does not neglect the author himself; yet he never intrudes biography for the sake of biography.

What one likes best in Stuart Sherman is his clarity of mind, his human sanity. And we place the adjective "human" before the word sanity for a specific reason; those who are most sane are seldom human. And we are moved to this by a passage in the final "impression" of the book, the one bearing the title "The Known Soldier." The occasion for this essay (if Mr. Sherman will pardon the word) was the compilation by Mr. Howe of Boston of the biographies of those graduates and undergraduates of Harvard who had lost their lives in the great war. It was a book concerning which one had to keep one's head; it presented a strong temptation to the emotional. At the same time it was—most obviously—not a book to be

Queries and Answers

March 21. (The Smart Set offices were unable to verify this information.)

"Watchers of the Skies"

MRS. HERBERT WING, Boise, Idaho—F. E. M. inquires in your issue of March 14 about a poem by Alfred Noyes. This poem is published in book form by the Frederick A. Stokes Company, New York, and is entitled, "Watchers of the Skies."

"There Is No Night"

ANONYMOUS (Stanford University), California—I think the following is the poem wanted by A. N. S., asked for in your issue of Feb. 28. The title and author were not given.

Dear Heart—
Stop planning for thyself tonight,
When darkness seems to hide the light,
For He who holds the universe
Has planned it all aright.

Dear Heart—
Rest in Love's plan for thee tonight
And when the morn in radiance bright
Reveals His face the source of light
'Twill prove there is no night.

"Service Rewarded"

LUELLA D. SMITH, Hudson, N. Y.—I note in your issue of March 21 that W. F. asks further information regarding the quotation from "A Drama of Exile," by Mrs. Elisabeth Barrett Browning. It is given completely in the Diamond Edition of Mrs. Browning's poems, or the Poetical Works of Elizabeth Barrett Browning, published in New York City at 647 Broadway by James Miller in 1875. Mr. Miller had received from Robert Browning the sole right to publish this book in the United States.

SALLIE H. ULRICH, Brooklyn, N. Y.—The information given in the issue of Feb. 28 asked for by W. F. is based on a clipping cut from a New York newspaper many years ago, and which gave the name of Elizabeth Barrett Browning as author of it. I gave a copy of the poem as I have it, adding nothing to and taking naught therefrom.

"Man's Extremity"

GEORGE W. LYON, Pittsburgh, Pa.—Answering S. J. W. in your issue of March 21, the quotation, "Man's extremity is God's opportunity," may be found in Hoyt's New Encyclopedia (page 570) as follows:

It is credited to John Hamilton (Lord Belhaven). In the Scottish Parliament, Nov. 3, 1706, protesting against the union of England and Scotland. It is also found in John Ray's "Faithful and Ancient Account of Some Late and Wonderful Sea Deliverances," published before 1691.

Otto Felton, Red Bank, N. J.; Frances Lowenthal, Brooklyn, N. Y., and Mrs. M. Y. Jonas, New York, write that this quotation is used by Mrs. Mary Baker Eddy in her "Science and Health" (page 266, line 14).

"My Elihu"

V. D. STOCKING (Principal), West New York, N. J.—A. H. F., in your issue of March 21, refers to the poem, "The Gray Swan," by Alice Cary, which is on page 365 of Swinton's Fourth Reader, published by the American Book Company, New York. The poem contains eight stanzas of nine lines each and is too long to publish here. A copy of it has been sent to our correspondent. The first two stanzas are:

"O, tell me, sailor, tell me true,
Is my little lad—my Elihu—
A-sailing in your ship?"
The sailor's eyes were dimmed with dew.
"Your little lad? your Elihu?"
He said with trembling lip;
"What little lad, what ship?"

"What little lad! as if there could be Another such a one as he!
What little lad, do you say?
Why, Elihu, that took to the sea
The moment I put him off my knee!
It was just the other day
The Gray Swan sailed away."

These stanzas have been copied from No. 7 of "One Hundred Choice Selections." The following persons contributed copies of the poem: Mrs. Ben Senake, New York; Madeline Neumann, New York; Eugene F. McKinley, White Plains, N. Y.; David A. Walsh, Utica, N. Y.; May Quinlan, Glens Falls, N. Y.; Mrs. A. Carr, New York; Fred T. Van Gorden, Meshoppen, Pa.; Florence L. Costello, New York, and A. M. Kennedy, Oiphant, Pa.

DORAN BOOKS

"My word, what a book—
"My word, what a nerve!"

TWENTY-FIVE

¶ Independent, reckless, sophisticated—this young English novelist discusses himself and others—the great of England and America, the near-great, and would-be great, all with unblinking candor.

¶ He has a large and cheerful manner, a slightly cynical and experienced air. His acquaintances number Nicholas Murray Butler and Michael Arlen; and all of them, says Noel Coward, will have to buy the book.

One Hundred Years of Mexican-American Relations

Professor Rippy Traces the Entire Diplomatic History of the Two Countries

THE UNITED STATES AND MEXICO. By J. Fred Rippy, Associate Professor of History, University of Chicago. New York: Alfred A. Knopf. $5.

By HENRY E. ARMSTRONG

THIS is a timely book. It explains why the political relations of these two countries have been broken by one war and have not been entirely free from friction for a hundred years. Mexico is a puzzle as well as a problem. President Wilson, in his Jackson Day address at Indianapolis in 1915, laid down as a fundamental principle "that every people has the right to determine its own form of Government." He declared himself for the 80 per cent. of the people of Mexico, who, until the end of "the Diaz reign" had never had the chance "of determining who should be their Governors or what their Government should be." "Now," he exclaimed, "I am for the 80 per cent.!" Mr. Wilson added: "It is none of my business, and it is none of your business, how long they take in determining it. It is none of my business, and it is none of yours, how they go about the business. The country is theirs. The Government is theirs." But to get along with what Government there was in Mexico has not been easy for the United States. Even the patience of Mr. Wilson was strained to the breaking point on two occasions, but in one case the Huerta Government had not been recognized by him, and in the other case the Carranza Government, to which he had given de facto recognition, proved impotent to prevent the raid upon Columbus, N. M.

Mediation of the A B C powers permitted Mr. Wilson to withdraw the American forces from Vera Cruz, which had been occupied because Huerta had obstinately refused to salute our flag; and Pershing's punitive expedition was recalled after he had chased Villa into the Chihuahua Mountains. Friendly and tolerant as Mr. Wilson was, he could not understand Mexico; so it is not strange that the average American wonders why Mexico has made such poor use of its independence and has never been able to get along with its great and good friend in the North. Of course, the average American does not know much about Mexico. He will get enlightenment by reading Professor Rippy's book, which is based upon public documents, proceedings in the Congresses, manuscripts in libraries, articles in magazines and newspapers, and an extensive bibliography. "The volume here presented," he says in his preface, "is the first general survey of the diplomatic relations of the United States and Mexico that has appeared in any language."

Before the reader has proceeded far he will see that Mexico has been suspicious of the intentions of the United States almost from the dawn of independence, and has often had cause for her misgivings. Just before independence the license of Long's filibusters along the Louisiana frontier provoked the Spanish Minister at Washington to charge that the Americans believed their dominion "was destined to extend now (this was after the Florida Treaty) to the Isthmus of Panama, and hereafter over all the regions of the New World." The yoke of Spain having been thrown off, Mexican envoys in the United States began to suspect this country of imperialism. They feared chiefly the occupation of Texas. Two weeks after his reception at Washington the first Mexican Minister declared in writing that the haughtiness of these Republicans will not allow them to look upon us as equals, but merely as inferiors; and in my judgment their vanity goes so far as to believe that their capital will be that of all the Americas.

The second Minister warned his Government on Aug. 21, 1823, not to permit the Anglo-Saxon element to become preponderant in Texas. Five months later he said that he would not be surprised if American troops then on the frontier were to advance into Texas. He quoted General Jackson as saying in his presence that the best way to acquire territory was to occupy it before negotiating, as in the case of Florida. However, he may have taken too seriously an outburst of the General, who did not become President until 1829. Pressure upon the United States for a settlement of the boundary issue was followed by a note in 1824 asking whether the United States was disposed to acknowledge Mexico's title to Texas. It remained unanswered for more than a year. The first American Minister did not arrive in Mexico until June, 1825. The author says:

Before Joel R. Poinsett, this first American Minister, had presented his credentials Mexico had come to look upon the United States as its natural rival and enemy.

civilized nations, and it is admitted by all fair-minded American citizens." That is Professor Rippy's judgment, and he does not spare Polk. The press in the late '40s rang the changes on "manifest destiny":

Even an anti-slavery organ like The National Era was in favor of the absorption of Mexico State by State as rapidly as, with free Constitutions, they should apply for admission into the Union.

In our day such vauntings of expansion as were uttered by American public men after the Mexican War and well into the '50s, both in Congress and at the banquet table—the author quotes them by the page—would excite only ridicule. But "the halls of Congress continued to resound with just as exaggerated expressions of destiny as could be found in the periodicals of the time." Manifest destiny almost prevailed after the Mexican War:

Mexico had been saved from annihilation by a very narrow margin—saved, it may well be, only by the Friat Treaty, the choice of members of the United States Congress more than a year before the beginning of their actual service, the uncompromising stand of Polk, and the timely patching up of difficulties by the belligerents in Yucatan.

Is it any wonder that the ruling class in Mexico, the military men, the publicists, the historians, the makers of newspapers, the politicians, conceived and handed down a distrust and fear of the United States that ever since have been a stumbling block to genuine amity, however benevolent and honorable the intentions of the Government at Washington might be. As late as 1858 President Buchanan said in a message to Congress: "It is beyond question the destiny of our race to spread themselves over the Continent of North America, and this at no distant day."

It is curious that almost the first liberal view of an independent and untrammeled Mexico came from a statesman who himself had roared as an expansionist with the most robustious of them all. Seward's attitude toward the French intervention was creditable to his heart and head. In 1846 he had written:

Our population is destined to roll its resistless waves to the icy barriers of the North, and to encounter Oriental civilization on the shores of the Pacific. The monarchs of Europe are to have no rest while they have a colony on this continent.

Imagine Charles E. Hughes freeing his bosom of such rodomontade! But Seward talked in this way again in 1850 and 1852. Touring the Western States, he said at Detroit in 1860 that the annexation of "New Brunswick, Nova Scotia and Canada, what remains of Mexico, all of the West Indies and Central America" would be "very desirable." Seward's son and biographer tells us that his imperious aire liked to converse about extending the States "up to the Pole and down to the tropics." And yet there were hundreds of thousands of square miles of the continental United States still to be assimilated and organized. However, Seward was moderate compared with Reuben Davis of Mississippi:

If we will leave all the subjects in which the people are directly interested to the States, then we may expand so as to include the whole world.

This corn-brake statesman thought that England and France might be annexed, "allowing them with their local Legislatures to regulate their local affairs in their own way." It was a period of delusions of grandeur and megalomania. The French intervention brought Seward to the side of Mexico as her friend, adviser and protector, although, as Professor Rippy says: "He did not hate slavery more than he loved expansion." How Seward handled negotiations with France and encouraged Mexico during the crisis of the Civil War is admirably told by the author. As the French troops were withdrawing in 1866-7, Seward recognised the Juarez Government, and in instructions to Lewis D. Campbell, his Minister Plenipotentiary, he pitched all his expansion notions into the discard and declared that the Mexicans must be "left in the enjoyment of perfect liberty" and be allowed to conduct their own Government "without dictation from any foreign country, and, of course, without dictation from the United States." Of this resolute, right-about-face Professor Rippy says:

It may be doubted whether any Administration since that of James Monroe could have made an honest disavowal of all desire to acquire Mexican territory, whether by purchase or by conquest; and no subsequent official document emanating from the Executive department was to be couched in language so friendly to Mexico until the days of Wilson.

Fully to understand the hostility of Mexicans in the main to the United States, Professor Rippy's chapter "Pacific Penetration" must be read. Pacific penetration may be described as absorption of lands and mineral and railroad rights by Americans and Europeans, but chiefly by Americans. It is true that Diaz played the British against our countrymen, scheming not to put his eggs all in one basket. A few extracts from this book will be illuminating:

By 1902 American holdings in Mexican railways were valued at well over $200,000,000. By the close of the year 1911 this amount had increased to almost $600,000,000.

By 1902 American mining properties in Mexico were valued at more than $95,000,000, and nine years later they had reached $250,000,000, including the smelting industry.

It is probable that American holdings in farms, ranches and timberlands reached some $50,000,000 to $90,000,000 by 1911.

According to the Mexican census (1910) the American owned in 1912 78 per cent. of the mines, 72 per cent. of the smelters, 58 per cent. of the oil and 67 per cent. of the rubber business in Mexico.

By 1910 the United States had acquired a larger portion of Mexican trade than all of the European nations combined, and in 1912-13 about 61 per cent. of Mexico's imports came from the United States and more than 70 per cent. of her exports went to the same country.

It is stated in a footnote: "A confidential est

About Books, More or Less: The Liberating Machine

By SIMEON STRUNSKY

NOT often does a book get itself read in a more appropriate setting than has been the fortune of at least one copy of J. L. Hammond and Barbara Hammond's "The Rise of Modern Industry" (Harcourt, Brace & Co.). Outside the window is a great steel framework which will some day be a moving-picture auditorium and skyscraper, but which for the moment seems to justify the worst fears of the author of "Erewhon." For the moment these two and a half million cubic feet of metallic skeleton constitute the central part of an organism engaged in sprouting cranes and derricks. They dip down into the unknown and emerge with 100-ton steel trusses. They pivot in great circles and swing iron matchsticks which are girders and faggots which are structural timber. On the booms of the crane, on the girders, on the timber fasces and everywhere between the legs of the steel skeleton may be observed singly or in groups the particles, which are men. And though these diminutive beings preside to go through the motions of directing the dip and swing of the cranes, one is inclined to think with Samuel Butler that it is the machines which are the masters and not the other way round. We stand in the midst of the Industrial Revolution, a thoroughly qualified Britten to tell the tale of how it came to be. In England some time in the eighteenth century, based upon a people [illegible] it to its own mind in the space of nearly a hundred years. The narrative stops, roughly, about the middle of the nineteenth century, when men began to realize what practically against the odds a struggle which is still going on and concerning the outcome of which a great many observers are still in doubt. To the specialist there is presumably little that is new in this latest account of the factory system. To the general reader it is a fascinating history and a [illegible]. But even for the specialist, the [illegible] there is the stimulus here for a re-examination of familiar facts as the starting point for possible revaluations.

In the main, I have said, the impression left by the book is of the ruthless domination of man by the Machine which he himself invented. The presentation, admirably clear throughout, is at its best in the chapters dealing with the sufficiently familiar picture of the sad human wastage that accompanied the triumph of mechanical efficiency. The fair skies of England blackened with the smoke of factory chimneys, the downs of England pockmarked with slums, the countryside gashed and riven for its treasures of coal and iron and clay—these things are portrayed by our authors, employing a minimum of indignation, with as much effectiveness as G. K. Chesterton has achieved in his bitterest moods. Nevertheless the authors have supplied the hint, if not the complete material, for another interpretation. It would not be a rebuttal of the case against the factory but a corrective of certain popular notions which corrective does amount to a partial plea in mitigation.

One common notion of which the book effectively disposes is the belief that the pall of industrialism descended without warning or preparation upon Merrie England. The steam engine came and immediately the yeomen of England were herded into the factories; the free craftsmen who sang over their work were manacled to the Machine; the young children of England were torn from their homes and cast into the mills and the mines and the potteries. That is not what happened. The Industrial Revolution was not an isolated phenomenon but the culmination of a long process; though a culmination, to be sure, which moved forward with catastrophic speed. The destruction of the English village was not the work of the steam engine. Peasant life began to be undermined as early as the sixteenth century, more than 200 years before James Watt. Oddly enough, if we seek an appropriate symbol for the proletarianization of the English people, it would not be the hideous factory chimney, but that most Arcadian of all implements, the shepherd's crook. The removal of the English people from ownership of the land took on speed in the later Middle Ages when the profits of England's woolen trade brought the substitution of grazing for tillage. Before that the economics of mass production had already made themselves felt. To feed the growing towns large-scale farming became an economic advantage. The enclosure movement set in. It was immensely stimulated when sheep pasture showed even greater profits than farming.

By acts of Parliament under landlord dictation the English peasant was ousted from his land. He became a wage laborer. Agriculture flourished, but only for the landlord and the farmer. During the French revolutionary wars, "the same process that made these classes richer turned the laborers into paupers." When the steam engine came to England it found a great landless and impoverished population, which was the product not of the Machine but of man. It was not Lancashire and Manchester and Cardiff that destroyed the English village, but the pre-Industrial landlord. "In other countries," say our authors, "the capitalist system was confined for the most part to industry; in England it began by overspreading the village as well as the town."

IN the towns as well as in the village the capitalist system long antedated the steam engine, by as much as three centuries. Equality in the craft-guilds was pretty well undone by the time of the early Tudors. In the fifteenth century "it became more and more difficult for the smaller master to keep a status in the guild, or for the apprentice to attain it." The late George Unwin carries the process still further back:

> As a result of these combined causes there grew up in every industrial centre of Western Europe from the middle of the fourteenth century onward a body of workmen in every craft who had no prospect before them but that of remaining journeymen all their lives.

This would be more than 400 years before James Watt hit upon the idea of a separate condenser for the steam engine. In all fairness, then, not all the blame for the evils of "industrialism" must be laid upon its iron shoulders. The Industrial Revolution was not a revolution out of a clear sky. It would rather fall in with the accepted theory of all revolutions, in modern thinking, as the climax of forces and processes that had been long in the making. The French Revolution of 1789, the Russian revolution of March, 1917, symbolized the collapse of structures already undermined. The Industrial Revolution was the efflorescence of a system that had been centuries in germinating and budding:

> Nobody could argue that the ordinary worker before the Industrial Revolution was a free man, whether he was a peasant in the country or a journeyman in the town, but the age which watched the change from domestic to factory industry in Lancashire and Yorkshire could see that a great many men and women lost what they had possessed of initiative and choice. For the Industrial Revolution gave a look of catastrophe to the final stages of a process that had been in train for centuries. The Industrial Revolution, if it did not introduce all the evils that were so acute in the factories, gave them a far greater range and importance.

THE Industrial Revolution came first to England for many cited reasons; England's geographical advantages, her freedom from religious and civil strife, internal free trade, an aristocracy interested in commerce and strongly individualistic. To these must apparently be added the existence of a large pauperized population in the countryside and in the towns, furnishing the raw supply of labor. The English Poor Law was in part a system of employment. Inmates of the workhouse were farmed out, auctioned off, to the mine-owners and manufacturers. The child-workers of England did not all come from their mothers' skirts and from their games on the village green. In part they came from the pauper asylums. When a London parish gave relief it generally claimed the right to dispose of all the children of the person receiving relief. The House of Commons was told of a contract between a London parish and a Lancashire manufacturer, in which the latter undertook to receive one idiot child with every twenty sound children. London children were bound over in large number to cotton-mill owners in Lancashire and Yorkshire, at a distance of 200 miles, and were shipped in wagonloads. It was not until 1816 that Parliament would consent to reform this system of transportation. The children could not be sent more than forty miles from London. But by that time the steam engine had rendered water-power superfluous and the factories came to meet the children of London.

Today one finds it rather difficult to follow the mental and cardiac processes of Mr. Wortley, who spoke in the House of Commons in 1811:

> Although in the higher ranks of society it was true that to cultivate the affections of children for their family was the source of every virtue, yet it was not so among the lower orders, and it was a benefit to the children to take them away from their miserable and depraved parents.

And yet Mr. Wortley must not be blamed altogether on the steam engine. He was the developed form of a long-existing point of view. John Locke, according to our authors, suggested that children should begin work at three. Defoe rejoiced to see that in the busy homes of the Yorkshire clothiers "scarce anything above four years old but its hands were sufficient for its own support." Here, too, the steam engine found the ground prepared, and sowed it vigorously. In the year 1839 the number of children under 13 in the cotton factories was one in twenty workers, but the number of operatives under 18 were nearly one-half of the whole number. In 1833 Cobbett said that the opponents of the Ten Hour bill had discovered that England's manufacturing supremacy depended on 30,000 little girls. These are items in the history of the Industrial Revolution which are too familiar for restatement. They are now repeating themselves in China and India, and, perhaps, in a few of our Southern States.

IT is significant, however, that in 1833 a Ten Hour bill was already being fought for. At about that time we may fix the beginnings of the factory laws which, with the purification of the Civil Service and the rise of the trade unions, mark the three lines of recovery from the horrors of the Industrial Revolution. The Dark Age was a period of forty years after 1790. The great upward lift began about 1850. The process is still under way. Even in the worst of times it would be only fair to remember that the evils of the factory system—and they were enough—were the evils of the factory. After all there was a nation outside. The gains for the English people, consisting mostly of workers, cannot be overlooked. Francis Place, who was no friend of the vested interests, testified to the results of the cotton industry in a "vast improvement in the comfort, manners and health" of the English people. Sidney and Beatrice Webb have recently written that > despite all drawbacks, this enormous development of successful profit-making meant, at any rate for the time being, a vast increase in that part of the nation's earnings which may be fairly called its wealth. The whole nation shared in the ever-growing stream of commodities, and steadily widened the range and increased the quantity of its consumption.

And yet that is not the only entry on the credit side of the Machine. To justify the title at the head of this paper, we must recall what has been said above of the social conditions which the Machine found existing in England. Given a landless peasant population and a proletarian town population, both pauperized, the question presents itself whether the steam engine, in seizing upon this human material for its own uses, did not thereby set them on the road toward their own emancipation. The Machine arrived in England to find a process functioning through three centuries for the impoverishment and degradation of a large part of the people. Tied inexorably to their station, held down by a system in which the landlords enacted the laws in Parliament and applied the laws from the Magistrates' bench, the English masses were caught up by the Industrial Revolution. It exploited them, but ultimately it liberated them. The sixty years from 1785 to 1846 were a sojourn in the wilderness for the workers of England, but they were also an incident in the escape from a much longer servitude. The English worker under Ramsay MacDonald compared with the English worker under George II has some reason for thinking kindly of the steam engine.

Queries and Answers

This department is designed to assist in the location of complete versions of poems and their sources, the names of authors, &c., which cannot be found through the usual channels of anthologies and books of reference. THE TIMES receives a great many more queries than it can publish. It endeavors, therefore, to select those of the greatest general interest. Queries should be addressed to the Editor of Queries and Answers, NEW YORK TIMES. They should be written on one side of the paper only, and must contain the name and address of the writer as evidence of good faith.

QUERIES

"From Walter De La Mare"

E. S. T.—I am eager to find a poem by Walter de la Mare that describes the arrival at an inn of a traveler, who has evidently come from some distance. The first line is, "Is there anybody there?" He received no answer to his tap on the door, but the impression is given that there are those within who have heard him but purposely refrain from answering. The last stanza shows the traveler turning away, and begins: "Tell them that I came, tell them that I kept my word."

"The Campfire's Smoke"

H. X. M.—Would some one tell me where I may find the Western poem telling of the early settlers in which these lines occur: "For me the campfire's smoke is in the nostril, the sage taste on the hand."

"By a Quaker Girl"

M. G. P.—Where may I find the sources of the following poem, copied in a notebook by a young Quaker girl about 1843? Can you tell me where I can find it in printed form? I quote only the first stanza:

We are a garden walled around,
Chosen and made peculiar ground.
A little spot enclosed by grace,
Out of the world's wide wilderness.

There are other poems in the notebook, the titles of which are: "Creation," "Beyond Where Cedrous Waters," "The Romish Lady," and "The White Pilgrim." I would like to know where these may be found.

"Friends Like These"

M. E. H.—Please let me know where I can find the original of the following quotation:

Thou fool! to seek companions in a crowd!
Into thy room and there upon thy knees,
Before thy bookshelves, humbly thank thy God,
That thou hast friends like these!

"Chords of Song"

N. A. M. H.—Would you furnish me with the name of the author of these lines:

And up by mystical chords of song
The soul was lifted from care and pain which are used by Olive Thorn Miller on the last page of her book, the title of which was something like "Our Friends, the Birds"?

"Out of Nothing"

ROY.—Can any one tell me where to find the rest of these verses:

Out of nothing and roses
The dream grew.
Not svan I was there at first
Not even you.
But great far places and empty spaces,
The shine of a star, the call of a bird.

"Educate Our Masters"

J. C.—What is the correct quotation and book by Disraeli which reads, "Now we must educate our masters"?

"A Bit of Sky"

C. O.—Perhaps one of your readers can assist me in procuring the complete poem, which begins, I believe:

There's a bit of sky across the street,
That I have learned to love.

"Land of the Gaul"

C. B. H.—Can any of your readers give me the title and author and the rest of the following lines:

O, shame to thee, land of the Gaul,
O, shame to thy children and thee;
Unwise in thy glory and base in thy fall,
How wretched thy portion shall be.
Derision shall strike the forlorn
A mockery that never can die.

"A Short Story"

J. T. Q.—I am anxious to learn the title of a short story published some time ago in a magazine and about which I can only remember a little of the plot. It was about an old New England couple whose children had all left home and who never found time to return to see their parents. The mother finally decided to send a telegram that she is dead. The children then drop their absorbing activities and go home.

"My Maker's Praise"

S. S. E.—Would some one tell me where I may find the prayer containing these lines, which I learned when I was a child: "Now another day is past, I sing my Maker's praise."

"Count the Day Lost"

E. W. B.—Would you please tell me the author of these lines and also the title of the poem from which they are taken:

Count that day lost whose low descending sun
Views from thy hand no worthy action done.

"A Certain King"

B. A.—About 1880 I read a poem that dealt with three famous questions, the last one being, "What Am I Thinking?" and it began as follows:

Once upon a time a certain king,
No matter what's his name
We'll call him Rex, for short, you know,
Went riding after game.

"Sweet Intrusion"

E. M. W.—More than twenty and possibly as many as forty years ago, a poem was printed in Harper's Bazar centring about a young office man, wife and child. In it these lines occur: "While so oft with sweet intrusion, comes the thought of wife and child." Can any one tell me where to find this poem?

"An Indian's Prayer"

C. B.—I wonder if some one would tell me where I may obtain a copy of the poem described herewith. It is an Indian's prayer to the spirit of the mountain, and each stanza starts with a line something like, "Young man, Chieftain, Spirit of the mountain!"

"A Strike"

E. J.—I am trying to find some verses called, I think, "A Strike." They are a sort of parody having the same meter and rhythm as Poe's "Raven." Can any one help me locate it from the description given?

"Each Man Know Himself"

M. M. P.—Kindly tell me the author's name and where I may find the complete poem in which this verse is found:

Let each man learn to know himself
To gain that knowledge let him labor.
Improve those failings in himself,
Which he condemns so in his neighbor.

"Two Poems"

R. W. G.—I am desirous to find two poems, the titles of which are "The Gang" and "Willie the Weeper." I have no information about them.

ANSWERS

"B. B. Vallentine Is Dead"

READERS of these columns will read with sorrow of the death of B. B. Vallentine who, for many years, contributed so much information and enjoyment to this department. He was one of our oldest correspondents.

Benjamin Banton Vallentine, one of the founders of Puck, its editor from 1877 to 1894, the author of the Fitznoodle Papers which appeared in its pages, and a dramatist, died on March 30 at Bellevue Hospital in his eighty-third year.

Mr. Vallentine went to Bellevue for an operation in September. Recently his friends of the stage and press planned in his honor a testimonial celebration at the Plymouth Theatre on April 11, at which many stars asked to be allowed to appear.

He was born in England, was educated at King Edward VI's School at Birmingham and studied for the bar in England and here at New York University after his arrival in 1871, but instead he went into journalism. He was a member of the editorial staff and dramatic critic of The New York Herald from 1891 to 1899, on the staff of The New York American from 1902 to 1903. He compiled dramatic biographies for the Universal Encyclopedia and wrote and translated several plays, among them being "In Paradise," "Fritz in New York," "A Parisian Mystery" and "The King of the World," Zola's drama "Rene" and Daudet's "Sapho."

Mr. Vallentine was a life member of the Society of Dramatists and Composers, and, with Chauncey Depew, the oldest member of the Lotos Club. He was unmarried.

"Just Beyond the Border"

MRS. C. ROBERT CRIPPIN, Syracuse, N. Y.—Helen Field Fisher is the author of the lines wanted by H. F. E. in the March 21 issue of your paper. The poem is as follows:

BORDERLAND.

There is a mystic borderland that lies
Just past the limits of our workday world,
And it is peopled with the friends we met,
And loved a year, a month, a week or day,
And parted from with aching hearts, yet knew
That through the distance we must loose the hold
Of hand with hand, and only clasp the thread
Of memory. But still so close we feel this land,
So sure are we that these same hearts are true,
That when in waking dreams there comes a call
That sets the thread of memory aglow,
We know that just by stretching out the hand
In written word of love or book or flower,
The waiting hand will clasp our own once more
Across the silence in the same old way.

MELODIES AND MEMORIES. By Nellie Melba. 339 pp. New York: George H. Doran Company. $5.

By HERBERT S. GORMAN

THE lot of the prima donna is possibly the most tragic of all artistic careers. After her singing days are done there is nothing left but a name and a memory and the faulty reminiscences of those auditors fortunate enough to have heard her. When an ancient approaches young people today and gravely descants on Adelina Patti it means absolutely nothing to them. The golden voice that alone could tell the story is vanished, although, perhaps, the time will come when mechanical means will be so perfected that the timbre of the golden voice may be conveyed perfectly to posterity. Mme. Melba is altogether too near us for any one to affirm that she has become a memory, but the sight of her "Melodies and Memories," an autobiography of her eventful career, is enough to forewarn us that she has ceased to be one of the most pleasing voices on the operatic stage. She has now achieved that pitch of time when she can reach back into the capacious bag of her memories and set down those outstanding facts and anecdotes of her long career that give some brief idea of her personality. Her story, like so many stories of operatic divas, is one of achievement against great odds, of a perseverance that was eventually rewarded by a world-wide acclaim. Indeed, she has reached that lasting pinnacle of greatness that insures her endless fame, for has not the "pêche Melba" been named after her, and will it not be ordered in all the great restaurants of the world long after she has been forgotten as a human being? This is a poor sort of consolation, however, and it remains to see what sort of personality she has evoked in her autobiography for posterity to ponder about.

"Melodies and Memories" is a pleasantly discursive book crammed with amusing tales, but hardly distinguished by that self-analysis that might have proved most helpful in orientating Melba to her period. Indeed, it is less an autobiography than a fairly well coordinated mass of memories of other people and more or less amusing anecdotes. The "magazine tinge" is on the book, but even so it conveys a sufficiency of amusement for the reader. It is lightly written and bubbles along pleasantly enough, skimming the surface of a life that has been passed among the most distinguished artists and nobilities. Being an Australian and consequently born under the egis of the British Empire, Mme. Melba is a little "grasp" when she talks about titled people, but this may be forgiven her because of her birth. A rudeness from the late King Edward VII, for instance, leaves her in a pained frazle of mind, whereas it should have provoked her to an equal rudeness. And when the King graciously forgives her because he has been rude she is overjoyed. This weakness for titles, however, is but a minor matter and one may well dismiss it and turn to the account of her own long climb to success and the often pertinent portraits of figures that loom large in the musical world.

Mme. Melba, or Nellie Mitchell, to give her her childhood name, was born in Australia and her patriotic affections from first to last are concerned with that South Pacific Continent. It is there that she has built her home and it is there, possibly, that she desires to spend the remaining years of her life. It was after she had freed herself from what seems to have been an unfortunate marriage that she turned toward singing as a career, making her first appearance in the Melbourne Town Hall on May 17, 1884. It was the success gained by this appearance that aroused a desire for serious study, and some months later she was taken to Europe by her father and there she began to search for a teacher. At first she was in despair as she went from celebrity to celebrity only to be politely turned down. Sir Arthur Sullivan told her that if she studied for a year there might be some chance of her getting a small part in the "Mikado." Brinsmead, the piano manufacturer, liked her voice but could do nothing for her. Alberto Randegger, the famous teacher, could find no time to instruct her. Wilhelm Ganz liked her and arranged a small concert for her in London, but it was a failure, nobody of any importances attending. As a last desperate shift Mme. Melba went to Paris and presented a letter of introduction to Mme. Marchesi. Here, at last, she made the connection that led directly to her first successes. The portrait of Mme. Marchesi, small, gray-haired, long-lipped and apparently forbidding at first, is well drawn, and the reader experiences with the narrator the trepidation of the young unknown woman fighting for her last chance. These months of study in Paris with Mme. Marchesi are months of privation, so much so that she must wear but one drab costume, much to the woe of the teacher. It is while she is singing at Mme. Marchesi's studio that Mme. Melba's first chance come to her. Maurice Strakosch hears her voice, is enthusiastic and arranges a contract with her. A month later an extraordinary development occurs. The directors of the Théâtre de la Monnaie in Brussels come to hear Marchesi's students sing and single out Melba for an engagement. But she is under contract with Strakosch. "Strakosch is a great friend of mine," remarks Marchesi, "I will arrange everything." But complications ensue. Strakosch won't be "arranged" and it looks as though Melba will not be permitted to sing in Brussels. Then fate steps in and a few days before the intended première in the Belgian capital Strakosch dies suddenly. Melba makes her début as Gilda in "Rigoletto" and her success is immediate.

It would be amusing to trace her career as she has lightly set it down in this book of memories, her first unfortunate engagement in London, where nobody of importance came either to hear her or write about her, her opening season in Paris, her return to England and the more fortunate season under the patronage of Lady De Grey, her curious adventures in what was then St. Petersburg, her American tours, her Monte Carlo season, her return to Australia and her wild reception there, her encounters with Oscar Hammerstein, her war work, her farewell seasons. It would be amusing to trace all this, but it is, for the most part, the usual story of the operatic diva's career, triumphs and woes, quarrels and unsuspected climaxes. One sees again that pertinacity, patience and strength are required to reach the top in opera. One sees also that luck plays its part. Mme. Melba had her share of luck and she had her share, too, of bad fortune; but she was keen enough to adjust herself to the luck and to climb above the bad fortune. There is an undoubted integrity in her career that is manifest on every page of her book. She does not appear to have been blessed (or cursed) with the usual volatile temperament that is generally associated with the operatic diva.

Instead, therefore, of going through the skeletonised account of her career it may be more amusing to pay some attention to the various celebrities who star the pages of "Melodies and Memories." The list is impressive: Oscar Wilde, the De Reszkes, Ambroise Thomas, Tosti, Mascagni, Puccini, an assorted collection of Kings and Queens and Princes, Oscar Hammerstein, Lord Northcliffe, Charlie Chaplin. Wilde she met at Lady De Grey's and was held enthralled by his flow of conversation. Years later she was walking along one of the Paris streets when there lurched around the corner a tall shabby man, his collar turned up to his neck, a hunted look in his eyes. I was about to pass on when he stopped. "Mme. Melba—you don't know who I am? I'm Oscar Wilde," he said, "and I'm going to do a terrible thing. I'm going to ask you for money." I could hardly believe my ears, not from hatred but from shame and pity. I took all I had from my purse—about ten louis—and he quickly took it, almost snatched it—muttered a word of thanks and was gone. I never saw him again.

Tosti strikes a lighter note in the book. The composer of "Good-by" was a jolly little man given to curious fits of temperament. In writing of one episode Mme. Melba narrates:

> I arrived at his house, and was greeted by Berthe his wife, who seemed in a state of great agitation.
> "Where is Tosti?" I said. "Why has he not been to see me?"
> "Ma chère," she said, "c'est épouvantable! Tosti has lost his teeth. He wishes to see nobody at all.
> "Teeth or no teeth," I said, "I am going to see my Tosti. Where is he?"
> She shrugged her shoulders and pointed to the door, much though he were in the last stages of a fatal illness. I went upstairs and found him crouched in a chair, looking very miserable.
> "Tosti, Tosti!" I said, "What is this about your teeth? Why have you not been to see me?"
> "I can't see my friends," he cried. "I have no teeth."
> "Well—why don't you put in your nice false ones?"
> "Je ne peux pas! Je ne peux pas!" he repeated. "Cela me donne la fièvre."

A few months later, however, Tosti advanced to meet her, grinning like a Cheshire cat and showing all his teeth. Apparently he had adjusted himself to the false ones. Then there is Tamagno, the great tenor whose top C's were supposed to rattle the chandeliers at Covent Garden. At dinner in New York Melba notices this celebrity popping crystallized fruits, salted almonds and chocolates into his napkin in order to take them home. At still another dinner there were some cutlets left after the course and Tamagno, leaning heavily over the table, asked, "What are you going to do with them?" "Nothing," replied the surprised host.

"Ah," Tamagno sighed with satisfaction. In his resonant tenor he summoned a waiter. "Datte le un giornale" (Give me a newspaper), he cried.

The newspaper was brought and then, with the utmost deliberation, Tamagno proceeded to wrap the cutlets up, one by one, in the newspaper.

It is with such light but amusing tales as this that "Melodies and Memories" is larded. Tibbett in Chicago squeezing a rubber doll that squeaks against Melba's ear during a serious moment in a great opera, and there are the personal remarks made by the Irish in Dublin, and in the queer story of the unemployed lunatic straining over the footlights toward Melba during a performance of "Romeo and Juliet" in Chicago and De Reszke running forward with his stage sword to protect her. There is the affecting scene of Melba singing to old Anton Rubinstein in Russia and there is the equally affecting scene of her singing through the entire score of "Otello" for Verdi while the composer accompanied her on the piano. All of these tales lighten and feather into an amusing ensemble a book that moves swiftly enough but which must, on the whole, be relegated to the category of the superficial. It is true that it has its serious moments but it is neither a rounded whole nor a deeply revealing study of a woman who was one of the foremost figures of her generation. One, also, would like to know more of these many famous figures, to see just the comic accidents that have befallen them. The book, if it reveals anything, proves that Nellie Melba has a sense of humor that came happily to her rescue more than once during those years when she was as much in the public eye

Merchant Princes of the Black Horse Flag

UNDER THE BLACK HORSE FLAG. By Isobel Anderson. Illustrated. 91 pp. Boston: Houghton Mifflin Company. $4.

ALREADY widely known to American readers by almost a score of books, Mrs. Anderson here adds to her list a volume dealing with her ancestors and her family that is of unusual interest. Books of that sort so easily and so often become merely boresome chronicles of lives out of which, if they ever possessed even their due average, all vitality and color have oozed under the hands of unskillful writers. But Mrs. Anderson's narrative does not disappoint the anticipation raised by her title and the spirited design, representing that flag, on the paper jacket. Her ancestors were lovers of the sea, as readers of her books know that she still is, and among them was a famous Boston merchant, her grandfather, William Fletcher Weld, whose fleet of barks and brigs and clippers, half a hundred of them, and a fleet of steamships which came later, flew the Black Horse flag. That flag still floats from the masthead of several yachts which belong to his descendants. And so it provides a fitting title and emblem for a book that tells the story of the entire family. Mrs. Anderson goes back to the migration to New England in 1632 of the founders of the American Welds and narrates interesting bits out of their lives.

When she comes down to the days and activities of William Fletcher Weld, the narrative grows still more fascinating, for she has gone to the logbooks of those clippers and barks, and, by means of extracts, condensations and filling-in of backgrounds, she tells many a tale of the sea that is full of romance, adventure, danger, heroism. The proudest ship of the Black Horse fleet was the Great Admiral, named for Admiral Farragut, of which it was said that "she sailed as far as from the earth to the moon and back again and lost her underwriters nothing."

The author's father, Commodore George H. Perkins, gave a lifetime of service to the United States Navy, and she quotes from his letters and adds her own and others' recollections to portray the most interesting phases of his life. He was with Farragut and the West Gulf blockading squadron, and Mrs. Anderson devotes several chapters to his share in those thrilling days, paying particular attention, both in her narrative and in an appendix, where there is quoted a long article from The Army and Navy Journal, to the fact that it was Captain Bailey, acting under orders, and not Admiral Farragut who led the fleet in the famous attack on the forts at the mouth of the Mississippi. There is a chapter on the family of her husband, whose ancestors came over to Virginia at about the time her own reached New England, and several chapters relate the stories of long yachting cruises she and her husband have made in recent years in various parts of the globe. Mrs. Anderson writes always with quick appreciation of the dramatic, the humanly interesting, the picturesque.

By HENRY LONGAN STUART

SEVEN years have passed since publishers, in self-defense, were impelled to issue notice that they were prepared to consider anything except war books. There is a mystic significance in the seven-year term. It is the period which the body, traditionally, takes to renew itself, and some parallel may exist in the intellectual order as well. Be that as it may, it is noticeable that a growing interest in the minutiae of the great struggle is beginning to manifest itself; that the books which serve it experience no difficulty in finding publishers and readers, and that they are of a far more distinguished order than the hasty compilations which came off the presses while our ears were still benumbed from the detonations of the upheaval.

Looking, as they did and do, from every great variety of minds, differing in training, temperament and outlook, it would be expected that "war books" would offer a correspondingly variety of treatment. As a matter of practical experience, however, they tend to fall into two classes, philosophical and objective. Men who went into the war with the philosophic equipment, carried it with them through the ordeal, and thanks to this "iron ration" came out far less affected by all that they had been through than many crude and robust natures. The ability of highly organized imaginative and sensitive men to endure warfare almost supernatural in its terrifying character was one of the surprises of the war. It is not to be explained away by fatalism, that characteristic of the soldier by profession in all ages. Many of these men, as the record of their impressions and thoughts show us, would have chosen any calling other than that of arms. It is probable that, in considering the extraordinary gallantry and contempt of death shown by all but a very few officers and men between 1914 and 1918, we are watching a profound psychological truth—that mankind as education and consciousness spreads is growing not less but more brave, not less but more immune to the dismay which creates panic and disorder. Armies still retreat. But the headlong flights which were the conclusion of so many of the old-time battles seem to be an old-time fashion. Troops have to be literally blasted and mined out of positions in which they have once obtained a lodgment. And "troops" today literally means the male populace of fighting age.

In spite, however, of this diffusion of courage, this "deprofessionalizing of qualities once considered the appanage of a military caste, the difference between one, the man who is a "born soldier," and the man who is a soldier by accident or sense of duty, will always be apparent when men tell their battles over again. Of two very remarkable war books which have appeared in the past week, one, "Fix Bayonets," by Captain W. Thomason Jr., is an account by a professional soldier of the exploits of the United States Marines at Belleau Wood, at Soissons, at Blanc Mont through five months of the bitterest open-fighting of the whole war, and at an expense that may best be gathered from the author's bald statement that, of 30,000 marines sent to France, 14,000 went as replacements to maintain the two regiments (Fifth and Sixth) composing the Fourth Brigade at their original war strength. "Toward the Flame," by Hervey Allen, is a record of the deeds of the 111th Regiment, A. E. F., a Pennsylvania National Guard unit, which formed part of the Keystone or "Iron" Division, between the end of June and the middle of August, 1918, in the Château-Thierry and Argonne drives. It ends abruptly and tragically with the wiping out of the soldier-author's company at Fismette, through an order for an impossible attack, which should never have been given and which he was subsequently blamed in the highest quarter for obeying. Mr. Allen himself, seems to have escaped, badly wounded, as by a miracle.

The instinct which has led the professional soldier to choose a brief executive order for the cover of his book, while the guardsman has had recourse to imagination for his moving title, is a pretty fair key to the differences in treatment that will be noted on conparing the two records. Captain Thomason, who in addition to being a very forceful writer is a draftsman of quite exceptional merit, spares no detail of horror or cruelty in his description of the "ding-dong," hand-to-hand fighting that went on around him. The book, in its exposure of the the blind mercilessness of fate when men make shot and shell its ministers, is as frank as Barbusse's "Le Feu" or Lanzo's "Mensch im Krieg." But it is a curiously impersonal exposure, in which the relish of the soldier devoted to his calling is reinforced by the joy of an artist, upon whose perceptions the wild and furious gestures of men aflame with lust of killing bite their impress, and, by a sort of wild beauty, justify the sorry business of which they remain the symbols. The leap of a bristling sergeant under his enemy's lunged bayonet as he rams his rifle barrel up and into the German's throat—the halt of a breathless gunner bringing his "chaut-chaut" into action from the hip—"field grays" swarming round a ditched tank and vainly prodding at its joints with their bayonets—the geyser of smoke and earth that mounts into the air as a German 77 brackets the crouching infantrymen—French lancers sitting their horses at the side of the road—the mechanical precision with which a trained battery swirls into "action-front"—these are the word-pictures, sharp and distinct as his own drawings or his own orders in which the soldier-artist conveys to the consciousness of those who know war only through books, the inwardness of the game that is played at its far end with telephones, ordnance maps, flags and colored pins, and at its near end by sweating, starving, footsore and groping men.

The leader is far on the hill away:
And what does he know of the soldier's plight?
But the captain is down in the thick of the fray
Mid the blood and the dust and the smoke of the fight.

Mr. Allen is a gentler Tyrtaeus. As the two officers trudged beside their footsore commands on the road to death, one imagines that what filled the heart of the professional soldier was an intense pride and exultation in his command, while the heart of the other was filled with pity and questionings. What always remained to Captain Thomason "the marvel of the Soissons fight" was "how those men, two days without food, three nights without sleep, after a day and night of forced marching, flung off their weariness like a discarded piece of equipment, and at the shouting of the shells sprang fresh and eager against the German line."

To Mr. Allen, however, the heroism does not overpower the pathos.

We had marched miles. It was over twelve hours since we had eaten, and then very little. . . . The Captain became too exhausted to do anything but plod right again. In absolute darkness we simply lay and trembled from pure nerve tension. There is a faraway moan that grows to a scream, and then a roar like a train, followed by a ground-shaking smash and a diabolical red light. . . . Let me remark that if you are one of those who think everybody is brave under shell-fire like that, you are wrong. . . . "Everybody" simply shakes and crawls. . . .

Into this roof of sound [it is Captain Thomason describing the German "search and sweep" at Blanc Mont] came a deeper note, a far-off rumble that mounted to an enormous, shattering roar, like a freight train on a down grade. The company flattened against the ground like partridges, and the world shook and reeled under them as a nine-inch shell crashed into the earth fifty yards ahead, exploding with a cataclysmic detonation that rocked their senses. . . . Before the smoke had lifted from the monstrous crater, the devastating rumble came again, and the second shell roared fifty yards to the rear.

"Oh, Lordy! They've got us bracketed!"

Both writers agree that the soldier are no such things on a battlefield as fresh troops," says Captain Thomason categorically, "for you always approach by forced marches, infinitely weary. 'But, coming out—boy, we made knots!'" Mr. Allen more than once refers to thoughtlessness in the matter of food and sleep on the part of superior officers, and to meals interrupted by the fussiness of those in charge of route orders. "One of the hardest things an officer has to do," he tells us, "is to enforce a stupid order when the men are intelligent enough to know better."

Since war is borne, war must be bearable, and to be bearable there must be alleviations which the human being, "thrust outside of life," in Mr. Wells's soaring phrase, evolves for his own saving and sanity. It is no disrespect at all to Captain Thomason to say that to know what these may be we more naturally turn to the observation of his philosophic comrade in arms than to his own brusque and soldierly views on life and death.

The main comfort, as seen by Mr. Allen, is that on the one hand a certain disregard for death comes from familiarity with the worst death can do.

For instance, one loses one's horror of the dead themselves. They have so patently lost all personality, and, to the soldier, the process of their incorporation with the mineral kingdom is a visible one. Earth is claiming them again.

On the other hand, life, shortened in prospect, increases in intensity.

There is no man who is so totally absorbed by the present as the soldier. It claims all his attention and he lives from moment to moment in times of danger with an animal keenness that absorbs him utterly. This is a happy and saving thing. With time to brood, conditions would often seem intolerable.

To imagine that because the two books on war have been confronted there is any inherent antagonism between them would be a deplorable mistake. From both breathe the tradition of heroism that quite possibly is the one real benefit we have reaped for eighteen months' agony, during which, in our resolute determination to have done with the nightmare once and for all and as quickly as possible, our platoons and battalions melted like wax in the furnace. Perhaps the real difficulty in comparing the two comes from the fact that they are not contradictory at all, but complementary. Personally, I think I would have preferred Captain Thomason as near neighbor, though he could not have done me any good any time my own battery was being bracketed by crumps or whizz-bangs. But in billets I feel that Mr. Allen and I would have had mere to say to one another. The soldier who is a soldier through and through (the "soldat soldatant" in precise French phrase) is an inspiring figure. But our admiration for him does not exclude a quite special regard for the scholar in arms, the man who does his duty coolly and intrepidly, though his intelligence owns other allegiances. Your born fighting men, the Scipios and Caesars, Marlboroughs and Murats, impose from their Pantheons. In our hearts we keep niches where others are set—the lonely Emperor who wrote his meditations under a tent on the Dacian frontier—the General who owned, as muffled oars ferried him across the St. Lawrence to glory and death, that he would rather have written "Gray's Elegy" than have taken Quebec.

ahead. The spectacle of this middle-aged man stumbling along toward battle, sick at heart for his family at home and sick of body from an empty stomach, was one of the finest exhibitions of real patriotism that I ever saw. What a pity there was not some other use for it.

One fancies that never, under any conceivable strain or hardship, would Captain Thomason have allowed such a surmise to enter his head.

Both writers agree that shell-fire is the most terrible test troops, seasoned or unseasoned, can undergo.

To be shelled [says Mr. Allen] is the worst thing in the world. It is impossible to adequately imagine it.

in the line—the infantryman at any rate—spends his life in a chronic condition of physical and nervous malaise, underfed and under-rested, aching and blistered, and his body full of the toxins that come from fatigue. In open fighting no system of commissariat has been devised that will get troops into action rested and with stomachs reasonably full. Not without reason does "When do we eat?" survive as the one slogan to which all hearts were responsive during the great war. Army doctors will tell you that wounded soldiers often owe their lives to their empty stomachs and low temperatures, and one can only hope they are right. "There

The BATTLE to the WEAK
By Hilda Vaughan

SET AMID the wild beauty of Wales, throbbing with the elemental passions of a vigorous peasantry, this new novel traces the perilous course of a love that defeats deprivation and hardship and triumphs over the relentless, unforgiving hatred of a cruel family feud.

"What a magnificent theme and how well suited to the local atmosphere in which Miss Vaughan is soaked! I can think of no other first novel so remarkable in the marshalling of incident to violent climax and consistent harmony."

THE ANATOMY OF JAZZ" is discussed by Don Knowlton in a delightfully interesting paper in the April Harper's Magazine. Mr. Knowlton analyses the music of this school, if it can be called a school, and explains when music is jazz and when it is not and why, illustrating as he goes along with examples from various compositions. Regarding the place of jazz in the realm of music, he has this to say:

Jazz bears much the same relationship to music as does the limerick to poetry. It is a form of musical expression, and an extremely circumscribed form. In fact, I know of no other variety of musical composition in which so little latitude of construction is allowed. In this country today the form has been developed to the ultimate, within its limitations—but that fact does not make jazz as an institution worthy of a special corridor in the musical hall of fame. Of the thousands of jazz compositions most are abominable—as are most limericks. There have been some excellent "rags" written, just as there are a few good limericks, and these are deserving of recognition as being especially fine pieces of workmanship, considering the vehicle of expression used. But Hamlet could not well die to a limerick, and neither may the esthete soar on the wings of jazz. The devotee of Wagner and Stravinsky who condemns jazz unconditionally displays merely an utter ignorance of its purposes and structure; and the "jazz-hound" who cries that American "blues" should follow Beethoven in the musical encyclopedias betrays a total loss of musical perspective.

In the same issue of Harper's we find a thoughtful and thought-compelling essay on "Will Science Destroy Religion?" by Julian Huxley; an article by Duncan Aikman on "What Babbitt Won't Talk About," in which he deplores the decline of political discussion among Americans; "English Pots and American Kettles: A Study in Mutual Understanding," by Frank Swinnerton; "Notes on Women in Business," by Helen Woodward; "The Desire for Immortality," by Harry Emerson Fosdick; "What Shall We Educate For?" by Bertrand Russell; "The Crime Against the West," by Struthers Burt; "Two Americans and a Whale," by H. M. Tomlinson; "The Business of Wifehood," by Emily Newell Blair; "Impatience on a Monument," by H. G. Dwight, and "A Drop of Water," by Henshaw Ward. The fiction includes "The Nurse," by Ben Ames Williams; "Ebb," by Theodora Du Bois, and "Partners," by Charles Caldwell Dobie, and there are poems, by A. A. Milne, Henrietje de Saussure Blanding and Lizette Woodworth Reese.

World Trade, published monthly by International Trade Developer, Inc., 247 Park Avenue, New York City, is a "cosmopolitan journal of commerce" and its contents include articles on such topics as the title of the magazine would lead one to expect. Thus in the March number "A Personal Message," by Bernan T. Woodle, publisher, in which he discusses the lure of imported goods; "Why American Business Men Should Be Interested in Spain," by Alexander P. Moore, former Ambassador to Spain; "The Trade and Natural Resources of the Union of South Africa," by Eric H. Louw; "Can Germany Pay?" by Dr. Bernhard Dernburg; "An Epic of the Sea," this being the story of the rescue of the crew of the Antinoe by the gallant men of the President Roosevelt; "World Trade Notes," from the press of all nations, and several valuable departments.

In an article entitled "Religion and the Instalment Plan" in the April number of Scribner's Magazine Edward Rexford discusses a curious phenomenon of modern urban, or rather suburban, civilization. This is the establishment in the suburbs of great cities of community churches, not so much from a desire for religious unity as because there are seldom in any one new suburb enough members in each denomination to make possible the building of separate churches. The tendency, therefore, is for two or more denominations to combine in building a church and to agree on some form of worship in which all may participate. Mr. Rexford believes, and with some reason, that this will make for religious tolerance and eventually help to sweep away the barriers of sectarianism to the end that all men may worship together in peace and amity. In the same number Mary M. Colum presents "A Critical Credo," in which she takes issue with those critics who unduly exalt the importance of mere form in literature. John Hays Hammond continues his discussion of "The Jameson Raid and the World War," telling in this issue of his imprisonment and trial after the raid. Will James, the cowboy author and artist, contributes an illustrated story entitled "Smoky—a One-Man Horse." Captain John W. Thomason, the author of "Fix Bayonets," sketches with pen and pencil life aboard ship in foreign waters when "mail day" comes around. There is another instalment of John Galsworthy's serial, "The Silver Spoon," and there are short stories by Amory Hare, Abbie Carter Goodloe and J. Hyatt Downing. Verse is contributed by William E. Brooks, Benton B. Orwig, Louis Dodge and Ruth Lambert Jones.

The World's Work for April contains "The March of Events," by the editors; "Girding the Nation for War," by David F. Houston, this being the third instalment of Mr. Houston's book on the Wilson Administration; "The Way to War on Crime," by Bayard Veiller; "The Railroad War in Texas," by French Strother; "The Last of the Eastern Wilderness," by Horace Kephart; "America Takes the Lead in Aviation," by Howard Mingos; "Among South America's Vanishing Indians," by Francis Gow Smith; "The Waning Influence of the Farmer," by Mark Sullivan, and "A Scientist Who Believes in Religion," by Bailey Millard. The scientist of whom Mr. Millard writes is Dr. Robert A. Millikan, Nobel Prize winner and discoverer of the rays which bear his name. Dr. Millikan's views are briefly expressed in these words, quoted by Mr. Millard:

I have no quarrel with the man who spiritualizes nature and says that God to him is the soul of the universe. If you in your conception identify God with nature you must perforce attribute to him consciousness and personality, or, better, super-consciousness and superpersonality. You cannot possibly synthesize nature's aspects and leave out its most outstanding attributes. Nor can you get these potentialities out of nature, no matter how far you go back in time.

I use the word God, as I have said, to describe that which is behind the mystery of existence and that which gives meaning to it. With these ideas in mind, I think you will not misunderstand me when I repeat that I have never known a thinking man who did not believe in God.

Country Life for April is a Building Number and contains several designs for country houses and a number of articles calculated to interest the home builder and owner. Among them are "Early American Furniture in the Modern Home," by Walter A. Dyer; "The Log Cabin Home," by Paul W. Thayer; "Building a Fireplace that Draws," by James S. Fear; "Some Old Kentucky Homes," by Josephine Farrell; "The Land of the Gable," by Rebecca Hourwich; "Dollar-Saving Plants," by Carl Stanton; "From Weed Patch to Garden," by George H. Hall; "Homes of Our Presidents: II, Yankee Adams," by Henry B. Humphrey Jr.; "The Budget Idea in Building," by Roger B. Whitman, and "Points About Painting," by Berton Elliot.

The Red Book Magazine for April contains the opening chapter of a new serial, "Two Flights Up," by Mary Roberts Rinehart, and instalments of "Tides," by Julian Street; "The Way of Dionysia," by Robert W. Chambers, and "The Old Home Town," by Rupert Hughes. The short stories are "Time to Think," by Arnold Bennett; "'In Day's York,'" by Reuben Maury; "Dreams for Margery," by Phyllis Duganne; "The Daughters of Men," by Robert Benchley; "The Lopstick," by Samuel Scoville Jr.; "Breakfast if Desired," by McCready Huston; "The Daughter of the Star," by Walter De Leon; "Free and Easy," by Octavus Roy Cohen, and "What Dogs Know," by Dick Wick Hall. This month's poem, "Partners," is by Strickland Gillilan; Bruce Barton has an editorial, entitled, "A Hot One," and there is an article by Angelo Patri on "Everybody's Niche."

Exploits of "the British Barnum"

Charles B. Cochran Sets Down His Memories of a Lifetime In the Show Business

THE SECRETS OF A SHOWMAN. By Charles B. Cochran. 436 pp. New York: Henry Holt & Co. $5.

By JOHN CARTER

MR. COCHRAN'S bankruptcy after the failure of the rodeo at the British Empire Exhibition at Wembley, rather than his experiences as a showman, supplies the key to the present volume. In conclusion he himself admits that "I hope that by writing these reminiscences I have begun to earn the humble 'ante' that will get me into the great game again." Accordingly, "the British Barnum" herein sets down a true account of his stewardship as showman to the British public, with a keen eye on the box office. The numerous offers of help which came to him from all quarters after his failure have certainly influenced his pen. Here is no man writing in the belief that there is a sucker born every minute. Here is no acrid gossip of the foibles of artists and producers, no acute mockery of the public's desire to be fooled. Mr. Cochran is putting all his goods in the shop window, and is explaining his failure rather in terms of pounds, shillings and pence than in terms of the footlights and the orchestra seats.

To Mr. James Agate, the eminent London dramatic critic who writes the preface to this volume, there is something very romantic in "the artless way the writer prattles of £20,000 offers." But the American public, and probably the world at large, is slightly bored with statistics. That Cochran took big chances, and generally brought them off, is evidence of a sanguine disposition indispensable to his profession; but the analysis of his figures is more likely to be of interest to his creditors and to his future backers than to the public at large. Thus the bids for the Dempsey-Carpentier fight are more an indication of the financial aspect of the show business than of the sporting interest:

D. J. Tortorich, New Orleans, $200,000 for Dempsey's end.
Colonel Miller of Oklahoma, $300,000 purse.
Otto Floto, Kansas City, $200,000 purse.
Vienne, Paris, $250,000 to Dempsey for match in France.
Jack Curley, $150,000 purse.
Decoin, $250,000 to Dempsey for match in Paris.
Prince Murat and Duc de Cazes offer to outbid any promoter for match in Europe, &c.

Exactly who and what is "C. B." Cochran? Certainly not the British Barnum. To a possibly skeptical Cis-Atlantic eye he seems more like a combination of Tex Rickard, Earl Carroll and Morris Gest. That is to say, he is an all-around showman, but not a "mammoth," "moral" or "educational" showman like Barnum. He has sought to make a living by amusing the British public. He has financed zoos and circuses, wrestlers, boxers, roller-skating rinks. He has produced "The Miracle," the Ballet Russe; he has promoted the Guitrys and Eleonora Duse, Ahrensmeyer, "the cowboy hypnotist," Delysia, the Dolly Sisters and Florence Mills. More than any single man, he has built up the unique British revue. But in all this he has been a showman, that is to say, he has catered to the principle of "pro magnifico omne ignotum." He has regaled the British public with spectacles, with dwarfs, Brittany bulls, performing fleas, exotic and unusual productions; he discovered Alice Delysia and Trini, "the most beautiful girl in the world"; he even produced in 1923 a season of American plays: "Partners Again," "Anna Christie," "So This Is London," "Dover Street to Dixie," "Little Nellie Kelly" and "The Music Box Revue"; and he has done almost nothing for the British stage.

He is, in fact, a dealer in human horseflesh—if one may use the expression. He is as keenly aware of the value of a good leg-show as he is of the appeal of Hackenschmidt wrestling the "Terrible Turk" or Carpentier thrashing Bombardier Wells in seventy-two seconds by the watch.

Most disappointing of all is the dearth of anecdote in these encyclopedic records of a busy career. Save for a few tales of Richard Mansfield, as whose secretary Cochran got his first real start in the show business, there is almost nothing. This one is perhaps the most amusing in the lot. Israel Zangwill went to Mansfield after witnessing the latter's performance of "Cyrano de Bergerac."

I heard him say, "Well, Mansfield, I think your performance was very adequate." Mansfield's nerves were naturally on edge, and his reply was: "Why do you burst into my dressing room and why do you patronize me? Tell me, what exactly do you mean by 'adequate'?"

"My dear Mansfield," said Mr. Zangwill, "I meant that in the English version you cannot possibly reveal the nuances of the French original."

Mansfield, who spoke French fluently, went off into rapid French. It was obvious that the speed at which he spoke puzzled Zangwill. And Mansfield, pointing an accusing finger, said angrily, "Tell me, do you speak French? No, obviously, you don't know French. You are a fraud." And, with a wide gesture, he called to his dresser, "Show Mr. Zangwill out."

Possibly because Mr. Cochran is so obviously putting his acquaintances' best feet forward, the most readable portion of his book is that which relates to his early years. Born in 1872 at Linchfield, Sussex, youngest of a family of ten children, at the age of 18 he ran away from home and went to the United States. He drifted into the show business, first in Huber's Museum, later in "Around the World in Eighty Days." He got stranded in St. Louis with a road company and went to Chicago with eight chorus girls and 25 cents. In Chicago, then having the World's Fair, "was, I suppose, quite the wildest place on earth." His friend, Sidney Price, got down to his last dollar, staked it on the 7 in a roulette game, won, left $23 on and won again. After a wild night, Cochran got a job selling fountain pens in a stall at the Fair.

Mr. C. B. Cochran Enters a Monastery in an Endeavor to Escape Publicity.
From a Drawing by Victor Hicks.

Later he went on the road and was arrested for drunk and disorderly conduct in Urbana, Ohio. His manager paid the fine, and the Court kept Cochran's spare cash, amounting to $7.35. He asked for the return of his money, to be astonished by the Judge, "Certainly not. Don't you think that the Court wants a drink, too?" He drifted back to New York, got a job as assistant to the Church of England chaplain at the Port of New York and finally landed in Mansfield's company.

In 1897, after another spree in New York, he went back to England. "My first impressions of Edinburgh were the number of pretty girls on Princes Street, the exuberance and cheapness of the whisky." For a while he lived in London on his wits. Finally, he began to make his mark in the show world as boxing agent. At that time he met Miss Evelyn Dade, eloped with her as her family was sending her to a convent to put her out of his reach. His achievements at that time were his success in putting George Hackenschmidt and Ahrensmeyer before the public. Of these men he tells one or two amusing yarns.

Hackenschmidt was a very big eater. Knowing this, my wife prepared lots of food when he came to dine with us one night at our flat in Piccadilly. Dinner was ready. Hackenschmidt ate eight or nine eggs, a porterhouse steak and a whole Camembert cheese. My wife, having almost exhausted the supplies that were in the house, timidly asked Hackenschmidt if she could get him anything more.

"No, thanks," he said. "I have to dine with some friends, so I will not spoil my appetite."

* * * * *

Whereas Hackenschmidt was modest, with plenty of good reason, Ahrensmeyer lost his head. In his opening address, Dixon, with dramatic effect, would point to Ahrensmeyer and say: "This illiterate fellow—this uncultured product of the plains, whose knowledge comes not from books but from the sighing of the wind in the trees and the babbling of the brooks—he can neither read nor write. But, ladies and gentlemen, he holds secrets of nature which you can never know!"

This harangue aroused the unsouth ale of the hypnotic and invariably made a great impression. But Ahrensmeyer, realizing that he was a success, began to resent this form of introduction. "Cut out the stuff about me being an illiterate fellow," he would say.

Mr. Cochran puts a deal of quiet humor, too, into the account of the wooing of Tom Thumb.

When Lavinia Warren appeared at Barnum's Museum in New York Tom Thumb was living somewhere in Connecticut, amusing himself by yachting and driving his beautiful ponies. One day, happening

"Nize Baby! Itt Opp All de Wheatinna!"

NIZE BABY. By Milt Gross. New York: George H. Doran Company. $2.

By HERMAN J. MANKIEWICZ

THERE has been, for many months, more than a little joy among the literate citizenry of the land—particularly in so far as they enjoyed either a first-hand or an otherwise reliable acquaintance with the more interesting stretches of the east side, Lenox Avenue and the Bronx—over the occasional appearance of humorous pieces, in a new dialect, by one Milt Gross, previously best known as a newspaper artist. The pieces, perhaps it is almost needless to add, have to do with the adventures of a rather ordinary apartment house, ordinary to New York at all events, that consists of Four Floors. Mammas and Papas, Looy Dot Dope, a baby more reluctant even than other babies to eat its spinach, and a number of appropriate and sympathetic neighbors. And the whole thing, of course, is told in the form of conversations between First Floor and Second Floor and higher.

Mrs. Feltlebaum—First Floor—is the legitimate Hennessey to the other floors. It is the Second Floor that has the adventures that are proudly shouted up the bannisters. It is the Third Floor that has the lamentably contrary laidor, who keeps bad company and obeys Mamma more through fear than through sweetness of disposition, and the Fourth Floor whose occupation in life it is to tell, in its way, New World fairy tales to Baby that it might eat opp its spinach.

To the occasional reader of his efforts Mr. Gross's contributions have been amusing and at times screamingly funny. In a book, however—unless one accepts the heretic point of view that it is, after all, not yet a law that all of a book must be read—the exploits of the Floors become tiresome and strained in the telling. There is an inherent artificiality to the characters, their dialect and their doings, that is unannoying when they are presented briefly and with complete concentration upon their most entertaining values; repeated and repeated and repeated, their very earlier strengths and joys become nuisances.

There have been those of lesser breeds, without the law chiefly, who have questioned the authenticity of the Gross dialect. Such doubters, of course, are simply lacking in a complete, well-rounded, New York culture. There are, in the nation's metropolis and all over the thin red line of empire, countless people whose talk is, in its essence, the talk of "Nize Baby." The dialect of the Yiddish first generation and its parents in America has been set down by many authors, and the fact that the records of each of them differ from all the rest is proof not that some of them must be wrong but simply that there is a large number of dialects to record. Except that the originals do not always talk in a comedy vein for the benefit of their audiences, Mr. Gross has done well and faithfully by his All-Right-nickers.

There is, here, as an example of the Gross method, with its virtues and its defects, the segment of the book that Mr. Gross calls "Baby Sleeps on Cheecken Fets—Sturry From Rad Ridink Hoot":

Second Floor—Hm! de tings wot it could heppen by us, Mrs. Feltlebaum—Yoy wouldn't find it in de whole America!!

First Floor—Wot is??

Second Floor—Wot is! A whole day long de baby was sleeping on de floor—

First Floor—Sleeping on de floor!!!

Second Floor—Yeh, yeh. A whole day he was sleeping on de floor.

First Floor—Yi, yi, yi—could be maybe de sleeping seeckness?? You should better maybe take him he should be waxinated. How did it stodded in?

Second Floor—Was so—I got leat night from Mrs. Horrowestz a pot from cheecken fets—So was standing on de table de pot, so it came along mine Looy, dot dope, und he gave a knock wit de helbow—dot it fell on de floor de whole pot from fets. So was sleepery und grisey de floor so de baby was sleeping!!

First Floor—So wot did you did??

Second Floor—So I put him queeck in de bad he should go to slip—

Third Floor—So Isidor??(SMACK) Kites, you flying opp on de roof, ha? (SMACK). You should fall yet in de hairyway, ha? (SMACK). De clothes lines you'll break maybe, wot I'll have to pay demeges, ha? Satire of American Gentility in a First Novel

T'S NOT DONE. By William O. Bullitt. 314 pp. New York: Harcourt, Brace & Co. $2.

AT a time when the average writer of his age and generation is engaged in attaching tick-tacks to his neighbor's window or blurting out a childish and incoherent apologia pro vita sua, Mr. Bullitt has bided his time, held his fire and let loose a volley only when he beheld the whites of their eyes. "It's Not Done" is a novel of ideas, whose limitation is that it is a volley, a propaganda shot, directed against a single institution, the American aristocratic tradition, and whose defect is that the target does not quite clear away so that one can accurately count the hits.

The scene of the novel is laid in Chesterbridge, a rather transparent pseudonym for Philadelphia, and its characters are those of Chesterbridge gentility. "Is there any other city in the world in which every one counts lives in an area three blocks by eight surrounding a small square?" The hero is John Corsey, who can trace his ancestry back to the time of the Plantagenets; his family has wealth, birth and traditions. His father tells him, "Corseys don't do that sort of thing [that is, he means or cruel], no matter how hard pressed they are." His mother remarks, "Other people may have no standards, but we have one." "It's not done" is the simple and effective formula by which a family regulates his conduct.

John Corsey has a radiant quality: "It's as if he had a light inside him," and his mistress, Nina Richland, tells him, "You've got the loveliest thing inside you. But it's been almost killed by the damned things you've always lived with." But John becomes worldly wise when his father informs him, "And please understand that under no circumstances do you ever have to marry such a woman." So he becomes ashamed of Nina and married instead "a nice girl," Mildred Ashpost at Rome, and goes there with Mildred.

The main working out of Mr. Bullitt's thesis is, therefore, in the field of sexual relations. This, we feel, is a mistake. He does not handle his women characters very convincingly, and his handling of their emotions is grotesque and clumsy, approaching morbidity. However, parallel to this theme marches one far greater and far more provocative. Having shown how "it's not done" has thwarted John's natural gifts for human affection, produced an unhappy marriage and a thwarted old age, the author sketches the failure of the aristocracy of which Corsey was a representative.

There, again, "it's not done" was the theory, purely negative, highly honorable, utterly futile. When the trust company failed for $1,500,000, Randall Corsey made good the deficit, although he had not been to five directors' meetings in ten years. His brother Theodore moved to England, bought "a dirty little English title," allowed Leather, an unscrupulous arriviste, to get control, first, of the Corsey coal business, finally of The Chesterbridge Times. Corsey himself was offered the embassy at Rome because he was tired and needed a good climate, and accepted it upon those terms.

Mr. Bullitt does not bring out the defect of these actions with sufficient clearness. Noblesse oblige is not a purely negative creed; it implies that to whomsoever much has been given, of him much shall be required. It was not enough for the Corseys to make good a default at their bank; they should have seen to it that their bank was run on honorable lines. Theodore Corsey should have prevented Chesterbridge from falling into the grip of a crude, cruel, acquisitive rogue like Leather, and should not have sold him the Times. Heirs to great fortunes, the Chesterbridge aristocracy had it in their power so to manage their destinies that the community should enjoy commercial standards of good breeding and honor, rather than social exclusiveness. But Randall Corsey contented himself with running a clinic for poor people, Theodore insisted on riding straight to hounds, John was preoccupied with writing honest editorials. He should have gone to Rome to serve his country, not to restore his nerves. The ball was at their feet, but they refused to do more than assure each other that no Corsey could kick an opponent in the shins.

That is the betrayal of "it's not done." It is a purely negative conception, a code, not a way of life. In the aggregate it brought America to the state which Mr. Bullitt deplores through the mouths of his characters:

The whole country is terribly successful, terribly, in the Frewhon sense, devoured by the success of its own machines. The worst of it is that men who ought to be street cleaners and grocers and dry goods clerks and butchers and mechanics, and would be in any other country, have millions and millions. They are the country.

"Unfortunately the civilization to which I belonged no longer exists," said Fulke. "The last vestige of it was buried in John Collingwood's waistcoat pocket. It's gone and forever. One might as well restore the age of Pericles. I don't say it was an age of Pericles. Washington, the Adamses, the Lees, the Carrolls, the Byrds, the Van Rensselaers, our grandfathers, were something different, but pleasant, pleasant; and today we are in the age of the movie, the radio, the exalted pawnbroker commonly termed banker, our national heroes, Douglas Fairbanks, Harding, Ford, Morgan and WJZ Newark."

So "It's Not Done" ends on a note of frustration and disgust. Mr. Bullitt has written acutely of an interesting moral problem. It is quite possible that the very fact of his hero's oversexed ratiocinations is intended merely as a symptom of the evil he discusses. The general public, however, will be inclined to wish that the book had a sharper focus and a less propagandist tone.

WAR'S AFTERMATH

SOLDIER'S PAY. By William Faulkner. 319 pp. New York: Boni & Liveright. $2.50.

THIS novel by William Faulkner tells an old story—as old as the Greeks—and older—as old as war and its folly. It is concerned with the aftermath of war, with the returned soldier, who is forever found to be among the spoils. Its disenchanted emotional travail has been a recurring universal constant. This tinctured saturation of despair, high spirit, hope and ceaseless unrest, Tennyson realized in his finest poem, when he set down the nostalgia of the war-worn Ulysses, setting sail again, after his long years of returning from Troy, for far-off places beyond the sunset. William Faulkner has recreated the modern return of yesterday—from another Troy—and the gropings of these latest casuals to find a satisfying point of view, place in life, for lives already out of joint with the changed times.

The war decidedly divided the present age into two distinct periods, before the war and afterward. It has divided the people into those who went into service and those who didn't. Those who went lived a lifetime in several lusty years, and those of them who came back had a severe readjustment to perform. They were bitter, hard-boiled, or madly, determinedly gay, to be made dazed, mute, inarticulate and tacit, before a gap in life that seemed impossible to span with common understanding. "Soldier's Pay," however, isn't a tricked-out plea for neglected heroes. It's the feelings and adventures of striking and arresting war-hardened individuals after war is over. It relentlessly sets down an objective recital of irreconcilable factors of civilization meeting in an impasse of futility and irony, and probes the conscious and unconscious for the motives behind the individual actors caught in this blind alley of life. It is a novel without heroics or heroes. It has the gusto and mockery of more spacious days. It brings back the language and habits of people who lived fast and hard, with death ever near at hand. Here we have the release, the return and crowded memories.

"Soldier's Pay" hasn't the conventional plot form. It employs a more direct approach to life by use of the episodic and elliptical pattern of modern experimental fiction. By this means Mr. Faulkner has been able to set off his characters in sharp contrasts. He evokes with fine selection, avoiding the dreary piling-up of details of naturalism—the high moments of life and the strong resurgent memories of his casuals, giving the transition that has brought them to their present status of disillusion. Brutalized for violence, they have been left without parts to play. The endless stream of life, meanwhile, has moved on in its constant flux of seasons and new people. The workaday world is now alien. A generation in its prime has been warped from the natural order of living. To pick up where they left off is impossible, for the old days have gone with the changing times.

The story is simple. Donald Mahon of the Royal Flying Corps is returning home to Charlestown, Ga., after having been reported dead. His father is the Episcopal rector of this peaceful old Southern town. All that is returning of the once charming and romantic boy is the cooling cinder of a man almost burned out. Aboard train, he is taken in charge, in his almost childish helplessness, by ex-Private Joe Gilligan, Flying Cadet Lowe and the young war widow, Margaret Powers. Here is something they understand—pain. As the situation clears it becomes apparent to them that they must see Mahon through, for they realize that he is slowly dying. Momentarily, they have found a purpose in their chaotic lives. Young Lowe, boyishly in love with Margaret, is sent on to his home, while Gilligan and Margaret continue to Charlestown with Mahon. In his letters and papers they have discovered that he has a fiancée, and both suspect that in this entanglement may rest much unpleasantness. They want Mahon to die in peace. His arrival brings shock and hope. Urged by the rector, Margaret and Joe stay on to see Mahon through. Charlestown is changed. His Cecily faints at the sight of his scarred face. Joe and Margaret strive to make the way as easy as possible for Mahon; they attempt to keep Cecily in line, and a subtle, tenuous, pitiless conflict surrounds the dying man.

The interrelationship between the soldiers and Margaret is of great interest, for the emphasis is on the group. Theirs is a furtive searching, for they are hurt romantics. The old idealism which has glittered for so long is gone forever. Yet they can't accept pessimism. They are bound up in their own futility. That their unconventionality might be free from being accepted as paganism, their futile state is contrasted by the rampant hedonism of Januarius Jones. He is the satyr of Charlestown. His saturnite point of view and escapades throw the behavior of the other characters in sharp relief. In Jones and Lowe we have the extremes of sophistication and youthful love. For the heartbreak of calf love, for all its comic aspect, is no less painful and real.

This novel of transmuted life is poignant with beauty as well as a penetrating irony. There is a sensuous regard for the feeling of life that is quite Hellenic. The picture of the dying man—returned to a world that is flowering with its natural loveliness—utterly destroyed so as to be unconscious of it, has in its varied aspect a more austere quality than mere pathos. It doesn't touch the heights of tragedy. But it does strike a note of deepfelt distress that is more akin to us all. About the events of "Soldier's Pay," humor plays its part. Discordantly, as in life, it sounds the cap and bells in distressful scenes. A deft hand has woven this narrative of mixed and frustrated emotions and has set it down with hard intelligence as well as consummate pity. This book rings true. It is the opinion of this reviewer that it belongs among such excellent conceptions of war and man as are to be found in "What Price Glory" and C. E. Montague's "Disenchantment."

A SUBURBAN COUPLE

THE PRIDE OF THE TOWN. By Dorothy Walworth Carman. 365 pp. New York: Harper & Brothers. $2.

A SATIRE of the "mechanization of human life" in homes, colleges, churches, offices, lodges and organizations of all descriptions, particularly as exhibited in the belligerently respectable suburb of a large Eastern city, has engaged Dorothy Walworth Carman for her second novel, "The Pride of the Town." Mrs. Carman has selected as victims of the herd instinct a gifted young couple, who are represented as being in more or less active revolt against the influence of the community toward standardization. She has devoted herself rather extensively to the humorous aspects of the standardizing process, at the expense of a sympathetic and fully dimensioned treatment of the young couple. The result, in the reader, is a grudging appreciation of Mrs. Carman's clever thrusts at the fallacies and stupidities of the mob, but a tendency toward disbelief and non-acceptance with regard to the young couple and their struggles.

Notes on Rare Books

THE fame of Mr. George Barr McCutcheon's collection of Dickens and Thackeray having spread past his own threshold, he will be certain of a host of readers for his latest production. This is the record, reproduced from his own catalogues, of his collections of first editions, &c., of the two great Victorian novelists, which will be sold by the American Art Association on April 21 and 22.

It is only rarely that a collector has been successful in the acquisition of so complete a series of Dickens's first editions. Only a few may, at one time, own a fine copy of "The Strange Gentleman," 1837; a well-nigh perfect "Pickwick" in parts; a long run of The Gadshill Gazette, 1854-65, and the ardently coveted first issue of the first edition of "The Battle of Life," 1846. All these are represented in the McCutcheon catalogue, and they alone would give high distinction to any collection of Dickens.

The 329 lots of Dickens recorded offer a valuable survey of his works, together with a number of important biographical and collateral records. The excellent condition of most of the rare pieces will make them especially inviting to the fastidious devotee of Dickens's works whose efforts to make a really fine collection have been thwarted by the scarcity of "parts" and other original editions in prime state. With the exception of a few minute or now unobtainable works of Dickens, chiefly ephemera, such as the 1837 "Is She His Wife?" Mr. McCutcheon has succeeded in bringing together all of Dickens's known works. In a number of instances he has been particularly fortunate; consider the high and especial value of such pieces as the following:

Songs, Choruses and Concerted Pieces in the Operatic Burletta of the Village Coquettes (London), 1837, a practically unique book, and the only presentation copy known. Apparently only one record of a copy (not presentation) has occurred at auction, 1839, when it brought 6 guineas.

Christmas Carol, 1843, first issue, with the yellow end papers, of which but four copies are known.

An Address Delivered in the Chapel in Little Portland Street, London, c. 1844. Not more than three copies known.

The Cricket on the Hearth, 1846, first issue, inscribed to George Cruikshank, with date 1845.

General Theatrical Fund. A collection of ten pamphlets, 1847-1870, of which an incomplete set (1847-1880) brought £128, 1912.

Two Letters on Public Executions, London (1849), a brochure, of which only two are believed to exist.

Drooping Buds, London, 1855. Probably unique.

The Gadshill Gazette, Gadshill, 1854-65, of which no complete file is known. There are twelve numbers and two supplements in this set; a file of nine numbers brought £220 at Sotheby's, 1918.

The Newsvendors' Benevolent and Provident Institution (London, 1858).

Great Expectations (London), c. 1868, of which only two or three were printed.

AS in his collections of Hardy, Kipling and Stevenson, which were sold by the American Art Association last year, Mr. McCutcheon has paid considerable attention to the acquisition of the uncommon minor pieces, which are among the most commercially valuable of Dickens's works.

The catalogue opens with an original autograph manuscript excerpt from Dickens's "Burlesque on Othello"—an effusion of his early twenties; and it has, too, a most attractive manuscript epitaph in his hand, composed in memory of his wife's grandmother, Mrs. Katherine Thomson. A number of his letters lend a friendly and personal note to the mere records of books and pamphlets, among which is a delightful one to Stanfield, tipped in a copy of "Cricket on the Hearth," which end, "P. P. S. We expect every hour to have a Baby born here. If anything happens while I am putting this in the envelope I'll write the sex, in large text, outside."

The "Pickwick Papers" in parts is fully collated and described; the description of it alone occupies fourteen pages and this tribute it well deserves. It has all the bibliographical requirements, and it has been enhanced by three original drawings by "Phiz" for this work, including the engraved title. Not to be ignored in any consideration of his collection are the following, which will further demonstrate why the McCutcheon collection of Dickens will be regarded as one of the very best which has been made:

The Library of Fiction, 1838-7, in the fourteen original parts.

The rare leaflet announcing the publication of the first number of "Pickwick" (1836).

Sunday Under Three Heads, 1836, with the half title.

Sketches by Boz, 1837-39, original parts, with an A.L.s. inserted.

Oliver Twist, Philadelphia, 1838. Said to be almost unique.

A Christmas Carol, London, 1844, with the red and green title-page; one of the trial issues.

The Haunted Man, 1848, presentation copy to Thomas Beard, which, when it appeared in the Coggeshall sale, 1916, brought $775.

The Royal Literary Fund pamphlets, 1858.

Hunted Down (in The New York Ledger), three numbers, 1859. The complete file of the first appearance of this story.

Edmund Yates's own copy of "Mr. Thackeray, Mr. Yates, and the Garrick Club."

THE second division of this catalogue, that devoted to Thackeray, contains 183 lots, and while it is a distinguished collection it does not strike that note of something exceptional which the Dickens section derives from its many exclusive rarities. It has, too, no presentation copies, and while "The Exquisites" is rare one would not have expected to find it lacking in this collection. But we may be misunderstood; certainly no bookman may express a merely casual interest about a Thackeray collection that contains "The Snob and the Gownsman" (of which the second is complete); "Flore et Zephyr"; "King Glumpus"; "Damascus and Palmyra," with the eighteen plates; "The Second Funeral of Napoleon"; what is probably the first separate edition of "Jeames's Diary," New York (1846); "Thackeray and Cleverdon Court," and a very good copy of "Vanity Fair" in the original parts. The "Illustrations to the Surprising Adventures of Three Men," once believed to be much scarcer than it is, is also included, and in addition to a practically complete collection of Thackeray's novels there are a number of uncommon examples, among which may be especially noted the "Proceedings at the Thirteenth Anniversary Festival of the Royal General Theatrical Fund," 1858, of which only two or three copies have been traced, one of which brought $610 in the Johnston sale, 1912; and the "Correspondence" (between Thackeray and Yates), (London, 1858), which was issued prior to the pamphlet by Yates in 1859.

TUPPED in the copy of "The Virginians" in parts, as a particularly appropriate document, is an interesting letter of Thackeray, written before the days of international copyright. It is addressed to Messrs. Low & Son & Co. and reads:

I am sorry to hear from you that the N. Y. Tribune is reprinting the Virginians, and do doubt hurting the Messrs. Harper's issue of the story who pay me $100 a month for early impressions. But I do not see what good any remonstrances of mine can effect. If American houses choose to reprint our books we can't prevent them, and the Tribune will doubtless take its own course in spite of any objections of mine or Messrs. Harper. Could English writers have remonstrated with any effect we should have done so years ago; but I am sure an outcry at present would neither be useful nor dignified; and can only express my regret that I don't see how, in the present instance, I can be of any service to a house wh. shows itself inclined to act in a kind and friendly manner to English literary men.

The manuscript of Hardy's "A Pair of Blue Eyes," Trollope's "Rachel Ray," and his "The Vicar of Bullhampton" will be sold at auction by Messrs. Hodgson's in London, April 15-16. This is a portion of the property of the late Earl Loreburn. At the same time will be sold a collection of modern first editions and manuscripts from the collection of Mrs. John Lane. In addition to the pieces already cited there will be a bound Kilmarnock Burns, a complete "The Gownsman," the "Waverley Novels" in boards, uncut, and, what is rarer still, a presentation copy of the 1865 edition of "Alice in Wonderland."

Swordsman—Lover —Debauchee!

Artist Supreme in Gold and Silver

Here is your chance to own the unexpurgated autobiography of Benvenuto Cellini

You have read something of this extraordinary man, friend and boon companion of Michael Angelo—protege of many Popes—duelist, carouser, perfect artist in metals, sculptor of Hercules in marble and bronze, and designer of the great "Medusa" which has thrilled generations.

Read Cellini's own life, as he tells it himself, his pen free from all modern inhibitions.

Live with Cellini through hundreds of extraordinary escapades, where life hangs on the flickering flame of a candle, or is staked on the toss of a coin.

Sit in Cellini's studio while he models the grim features of Cesar Borgia, or the gracious limbs and throat of the frail Bona Roba of Florence.

Go with the jovial Benvenuto to that amazing party in honor of Michael Angelo, where each guest brought the most beautiful girl he knew, and where Cellini snatched the prize by introducing a boy in women's robes, his hair dressed by the waiting lady of a queen.

All this in one handy 454-page volume

Old-fashioned editions of this master work, by no means available in all libraries, comprise two or three bulky volumes. But now you may have it in a single beautiful book, complete and unexpurgated—just as it came from Cellini's pen.

Here's a book everyone should own. A medieval history, an interpretation of the Renaissance, a swash-buckling romance and one of the world's great autobiographies—all in one book.

"The Firebrand"

You have seen, perhaps, in New York, "The Firebrand," a popular play with Benvenuto Cellini as hero. Not only in drama has this amazing book been immortalized, but even on the operatic stage. A vivid picture of the most vivid period in art, and in social and political history. Everything Cellini did or failed to do during his long life is crowded, as jewels into a treasure vault, into this flashing volume.

Joseph Schildkraut as Cellini and Nana Bryant as the Duchess in the play, "The Firebrand."

THE John Day Company is a new publishing house with offices at 25 West Forty-fifth Street, New York City. The officers of the company are: President, Richard J. Walsh, formerly editor of Collier's Weekly; Vice President and Treasurer, Cleland R. Austin, until recently Vice President and Treasurer of the General Equipment Company; Vice President, Treil W. Yocum, formerly associate editor of Collier's Weekly; Secretary, Guy Holt, for the past ten years Secretary and literary adviser of the publishing house of Robert M. McBride & Co. The name of the new company is derived from that of John Day, one of the earliest publishers of books in the English language. The John Day Company's first list of books will be published in the early Autumn.

The second series of "The Fugger News Letters" will be published later in the Spring by G. P. Putnam's Sons. These letters, it will be remembered by those who read the first series, were written in the sixteenth and early seventeenth centuries by correspondents of the international banking house of Fugger. They had lain untouched in the archives of the Vienna State Library until they were brought to light by their present editor, Mr. Victor von Klarwill. For the second series the editor has selected only such letters as refer to Queen Elizabeth and to affairs relating to England during the years 1568-1605. There are contemporary accounts of the Spanish Armada, the trial and execution of Mary Queen of Scots, the ravages of the plague in London and other important events of that time.

Late in April, Greenberg, Inc., in association with the French publishers, Grasset & Co., will begin the publication of a series of studies of the great monastic orders. The first volume to appear will be "The Benedictines," by Edouard Schneider of the Sorbonne, translated into English by John Liljencrants. Later volumes will treat of the Trappists, the Franciscans and the Carmelites.

The Frederick A. Stokes Company and The Forum are offering through Curtis Brown a prize of $7,500 and royalties for the best American historical novel submitted not later than March 1, 1927. Of this sum, $5,000 is to be paid by The Forum for American and Canadian serial rights and $2,500 is an advance on account of royalties at the rate of 15 per cent. for the United States and 7½ per cent. for Canada. Film and stage rights remain the property of the author, as do all translation rights. The competition is open to all authors regardless of residence or nationality, but the manuscript must be in the English language. Those desiring to compete should apply to Curtis Brown, Ltd., 116 West Thirty-ninth Street, New York City, for further information.

A new book on Franklin is announced by Brentano's for publication in the Fall. It will be entitled, "Benjamin Franklin: The First Civilized American." In explanation of his title the author, Phillips Russell, points out that Franklin was a man of advanced ideas and achievements when Washington and Jefferson were mere infants. The book is said to contain new facts and discoveries concerning Franklin. Particular attention will be paid to his life as American envoy in Paris, where it is hinted that he was something of a galant.

The series of "sentiment books," by Samuel Francis Woolard, published by The Goldsmith-Woolard Publishing Company, Wichita, Kan., is in print again, its publication having been discontinued during the war owing to the high cost of paper. It includes such titles as "Good Fellowship," "Beauties of Friendship," "Glorious Mother," "Dear Old Father," &c. It is said that "Beauties of Friendship" alone sold more than a quarter of a million copies.

Wilbur Daniel Steele's new book is entitled "Urkey Island," not "Turkey Island," as it was made to appear in a review published a few weeks ago in THE NEW YORK TIMES BOOK REVIEW. Mr. Steele's publishers, Henry Holt & Co., in calling our attention to the error, admit that "Turkey Island" is a good title, but beg to be permitted to keep the one chosen by them. Oh, very well, but what are "urkeys"? Do you stuff them with chestnuts before eating, or how?

Appleton & Co., contains also six short stories by Strindberg: "Midsummertide," "The Stone Man," "Half a Sheet of Paper," "The Sleepy Head," "The Julba Saha Ego" and "Blue Wing Finds the Powder." The translation is by Velma Swanson Howard.

Alfred R. McIntyre has been elected President of Little, Brown & Co., succeeding Charles W. Allen, who had been President since 1913 and connected with the house since 1890. Mr. Allen declined re-election but agreed to act as Chairman of the board. Mr. McIntyre has been with Little, Brown & Co. since he graduated from Harvard in 1907. He is the son of the late James W. McIntyre, who was until his death in 1913, an active partner in the firm. The house of Little, Brown & Co. has existed under its present name since 1837, but it traces its origin back to a little bookstore opened in 1784 by Ebenezer Bateile.

In a recent talk before the Writers' Club of Columbia University, Gilbert Frankau, the English novelist, complained that in England an author has no chance until he grows old, adding that "the great success of Thomas Hardy in his later years is due to his longevity." But—it is said that Mr. Frankau's latest novel, "Masterson," just published in this country by Harper & Brothers, sold 70,000 copies in England within a few weeks. How old is Frankau?

ROBERT M. McBRIDE & COMPANY, 7 West 16th St., New York

Mrs. Carman's first book, "Faith of Our Fathers," was the combination of high indignation at hypocrisy and self-seeking and place-hunting and careerism, with a tender sympathy for the two young idealists who were vainly battling against the system. The details of church politics and skulduggery were kept strictly subordinated to the drama of two human beings in search of their truth and their God.

In "The Pride of the Town," Mrs. Carman chooses a different setting for a somewhat similar situation. The husband, this time, is not a minister but an assistant advertising manager for a bottle factory. Christopher Kellogg's family, his home, his church, his pastor and his office are amusingly described. The pressure on him to aid in drives for his Alma Mater, his fraternity, his co-workers, his community, to join lodges and clubs and associations and organizations, to teach a Sunday school class, is paralleled by the insistence that his wife, Hypatia, ally herself with literary clubs, with sewing societies and Dorcas circles and the Sunday school and the Christian Endeavor Society, and all kinds of uplift movements. Mrs. Carman allows herself to be beguiled away from Christopher and Hypatia by the tempting incongruities and inanities and minor hypocrisies of all these movements.

A climax of the novel carries a sort of echo of the evolution trial of the unhappy little Tennessee town, Dayton. Hypatia is put on the grill in the Presbyterian Church, before her friends and family and neighbors, for heresy. She does not believe in the literal fact of Noah and his ark, and she is teaching the same false doctrine to her two little girls. This happens a few miles out of Boston.

As a consequence of Hypatia's disillusionment with uplift in general and the Presbyterian Church in particular, she resigns wholesale from organizations and resumes the writing of poetry. Furthermore, Christopher is emboldened to break loose from bottles, within fifty pages of the end of the novel, and start composing music. Mrs. Carman has expatiated and editorialized at such length concerning the forces aligned against Hypatia and Christopher that she is a little breathless in summarizing their victories. An incredible afterthought pictures them as "the pride of the town." In avoiding one pitfall of the success virus which she is presumably combating, Mrs. Carman has fallen into another.

Spirited and somewhat daring figures of speech were a delightful part of "Faith of Our Fathers." Mrs. Carman has become somewhat mannered, almost self-conscious, in the new book. She indulges in such doggedly appropriate remarks: "Sunbeams were slipping in between the dull-blue curtains and playing on the dark furniture like blond urchins." She has been betrayed into the error of underestimating the strength of the adversary and overstating the case for her protagonists. It is a mistake which was scrupulously avoided in "Faith of Our Fathers." Mrs. Carman has written a lightweight book in "The Pride of the Town," in which her beautiful wrath has simmered down to common scolding.

SATIRIC COMEDY

INSTRUMENTS OF DARKNESS. By Alice Duer Miller. 319 pp. New York: Dodd, Mead & Co. $2.

THIS collection of short stories, by an admittedly skillful practitioner of her art, takes its name from the first of the tales. A carefully integrated study of the moral and mental disintegration of a man who commits murder at the instigation of an ambitious wife, "Instruments of Darkness" lives up to all the sinister implications of the title. But the prospective reader must not infer that this generic name for the book supplies the keynote to the whole collection. Manners and morals, not the black business of murder and treachery, are the raw materials of the seven remaining tales.

With unerring taste, a kindly humor and much good sense, Mrs. Miller fashions these materials into seven sound stories which, if they never rise to the first order, never descend into the merely trivial and banal. In a day of much loose thinking and amorphous writing, her work commands attention by virtue of its ripeness. She never tosses green fruit into our mental laps. She is an informed psychologist, a discerning observer, and a witty satirist. Occasionally her rare good sense passes into wisdom. The taste and flavor of life are inherent in these stories, though obviously there is no bid in them to greatness.

"Instruments of Darkness" is a tour de force, and Mrs. Miller carries it off with a sure hand, if not with tragic conviction. In this story of a modern Lady Macbeth, she has many of the elements of real tragedy, but the completed tale more nearly approaches the requirements of the fiction editor of a modern magazine than the demands of tragedy. Lila, the wife, is real to the core of her being—she is vital inside and out. She moves and acts with the cold, unscrupulous detachment of an unmoral woman who knows what she wants and will not be balked of her ambition. Betheson, her husband, on the other hand, seems to shed his humanity after the murder of his partner. From here on, in this reviewer's opinion, he steps out of the limits of reality and takes on the proportions of romantic horror. Now the story slips into the grooves of accommodated fiction rather than the inexorable categories of life. It may be unfair, both to reader and writer, to take a gesture of this kind too seriously. After all, popular fiction is hardly more than an escape from undramatic reality.

"The Last Night," the story of a man who decides to die, provides Mrs. Miller with her most felicitous setting. Here she is on familiar ground and her unerring instinct for character and serio-comic drama neglects none of the fertile possibilities of the situation. The result is high comedy, a literary genre in which the second-rate talent always comes a cropper. It is Mrs. Miller's natural metier, and here she is always right as rain. "The Morning After" is another delicious bit of high foolery. The unexpected flowering of the nice naughtiness latent in the heart of a correct spinster provides a rare opportunity for this same comic spirit to disport itself, and Mrs. Miller not only improves her opportunity, she makes it. All the tales, except the first two, are shot through with this sense of satiric comedy. Of "In the Name of Duty," perhaps the most serious tale of the lot, the reader feels most consciously the sober intent of her talent. Here the hard lash of irony replaces the gentle flick of satire and we are brought face to face with the rewards for human stupidity.

Mrs. Miller may never be called upon to write the great American novel, but the maturing of her gifts warrants us in thinking she has still a full cornucopia from which some day she will spill a noteworthy novel.

BLACK AND WHITE

FLIGHT. By Walter White. 300 pp. New York: Alfred A. Knopf.

LIKE his first novel, "The Fire in the Flint," Mr. White's new book is concerned with the problem of an educated negro in America. Like the latter part of "God's Stepchildren," it is concerned with the problem of the negro who is almost white. The book tells the story of Mimi Daquin, a Creole, with only a tincture of negro blood. It is the story of twenty years in her life, but behind it is the impact of social and racial forces which throw the emphasis of "Flight," and most of the significance, less upon individual character than upon its background of environment and heredity.

Mr. White's first background is the highest social stratum of negro Atlanta. Here Mimi, her cultured dreamer of a father and her stepmother have come from New Orleans because Daquin has been driven to make a greater business success of himself. They move in a world patterned on that of the whites, but sharply removed from it. Daquin is never really happy or adjusted, and he dies a few years later. Here Mimi meets Carl Hunter, another light-skinned negro, who is callowly rebellious against the stupidity of his surroundings. They fall in love, and Mimi learns one day she is to become the mother of his child. When she tells him he shows only cowardice. In her disgust she declines his offer of marriage and goes away.

Philadelphia first, where her son is born; then New York, where she goes poverty-stricken to the Harlem home of her aunt. At first she loves her new associations and becomes conscious and proud of her race; but when her past leaks out she finds a community no less narrow-minded than Atlanta. Flight—flight again. This time Mimi "goes white." She succeeds. From a small position in an exclusive shop she rises to be second only to the proprietor. It is Mimi who goes twice a year to Paris to get ideas for gowns, and there she meets Jim Forrester. He falls in love with her; she tries to avoid him, forget him. Finally she decides to tell him the truth about herself, abide by the result. But he will not let her; he loves her and insists upon marriage.

She is happy with him at first, his conventionality, his Nordic prejudices, his lack of perception making no breach which widens daily. One night they attend a glorious concert by a negro singer—a presumable Robeson—and her race consciousness and pride come back to her. Flight again—and freedom. Leaving Jim's house forever, "Free! Free! Free!" she cries. "Petit Jean then and my own people—and happiness!"

"Flight" is less important and less suasive than "The Fire in the Flint." Its conclusion seems, somehow, undetermined. The thesis of the book has great cogency and meaning, but the novel itself, the history of Mimi, fails to achieve its first requirement—humanity. The course of her life is wholly credible; there is nothing improbable about what happens to Mimi, or about how it happens internally; but Mimi herself is inadequately humanized. There is no reason in the world why the final realization which comes to this woman so conscious of her race and weary of the conventional life of the white world should not be a sense of contentment and sympathy with the negroes, and understanding that her happiness lies among them. After living as a white she comes back to the negroes as a "God of Might" Elias Tobenkin's Jew, after living with Christians comes back to the Jews, as a thousand expatriates come back to their native land. Indeed, her return would be supremely true to type; but it is for that very reason it seems predestined here: because Mimi is not a living human being and must be free from type. Mr. White, in other words, makes his theses convincing but not his particular example. He demonstrates a factual truth but not an artistic one.

Perhaps in the long run the thesis here is more significant than the creation of character. And Mr. White is painting pictures, driving home truths, suggesting indictments. Even that thesis with an admirable objectivity. Whatever his temptation to editorialize, whatever his temptation to pathos, he lets his story speak for itself. His picture of an Atlanta set against the negroes needs no commentary to be rousing. His treatment of our present white civilization, standardized and smug, symbolized in radios and good roads, is no more pointed than his treatment of the negro world which is not that civilization. That is why Mimi's realization at the end is no more determined than it is forceful; it is predetermined, it simply becomes more acutely didactic. Only in the soil will the roots of the negro thrive and achieve florescence. Mr. White infers; and doing so he reaches a conclusion so often reached that it is the obviousness of a platitude; the impregnability of an axiom. In addition he suggests that many enlightened negroes must feel not the general wisdom but also the personal necessity for doing so. This feeling at length pervaded the very minister of "God's Stepchildren," and such a feeling, not of flight but of fulfillment, pervades Mimi Daquin.

"Going Native" in the Philippines

From the Jacket Design by Covarrubias for "Heat."

HEAT. By Ida Glenn. 317 pp. New York: Alfred A. Knopf. $2.

HERE is another story to describe the effect which those terrible tropics have on our young men. "Heat" scorches, sears, blisters and finally consumes the person and the principles, the manners and the morals of one who starts out with all the earmarks of that holy trinity of adjectives—Nordic, Protestant and blond. The author, in other words, takes a personable if somewhat starchy West Pointer, turns upon him the relentless sun that beats down over Manila, and chronicles his sad decline from the day he lands with the glory of his first commission upon him, until he very completely and disgustingly "goes native" and fades out of the picture. Not content with doing this she does more. She presents a criticism of America's occupation of the Philippines. She succeeds in getting home a series of acute and penetrating thrusts at the methods of American "imperialism," at the incongruity of a smug and somewhat small-town brand of democracy at home, attempting to masquerade an autocracy-to-the-manner-born abroad. But "Heat" pictures chiefly the early days of America in the islands.

This aspect of "Heat" very naturally forms its chief interest, and was quite probably its reason for being. Its actual story content can hardly boast novelty, and in any case the narrative's progress finds its pace impeded by the author's choice of an over-wordy and self-conscious prose style. But from it all three distinct impressions make themselves felt. The first that the author takes pains to emphasize the failure of Americans to adapt their persons or their preconceived ideas to suit the physical demands of a tropical temperature. She considers inept the attempt to graft 100 per cent. American notions on a thoroughly non-American root. The second, that she feels the Spaniards and the Filipinos, during the times depicted, had a certain justice for their viewpoint. And finally, the author succeeds in convincing the reader that she knows whereof she writes. What rankled in the minds of the Spanish grandees left in Manila after America's entrance there was the element of the mercantile in the occupation. As they put it, their ancestors had often been beaten, but never bought. They apparently lingered on the sidelines, covertly to jeer at the attempts of the American to put on over his overalls an ill-fitting and unaccustomed toga. And according to the author the natives saw the incongruity of all this, too, and mingled amusement with their obeisance. Readers ready to resent this phase of "Heat" must bear in mind conditions at the time when the story transpires—the early years of the present century.

As her hero, the author takes not only a personable West Pointer, but an idealist to boot. And the higher the ideals, the lower they fall. The chief trouble with Tom Vernay was that he possessed too much temperament to be a soldier—least of all a soldier in a station that teemed with "allure." He chose to idealize everything, and managed to convince himself that those idealizations of his own manufacture were all true. He comes a cropper chiefly over his idealization of a daughter of a Spanish Don. But Dolores, like many before her, preferred to fall in love merely with the fit of his army tunic. Tom, giving up his commission for her sake, discovers that he has doffed his chief attraction in her eyes. Considering the closeness of West Point to New York, not to mention Poughkeepsie, the reader may well wonder at Tom's astonishment over this feminine weakness for uniforms. But for all that the author is genuinely successful in building up that element in Tom's character best indicated by the word "soul." And she uses skill and insight in the delineation of its gradual disintegration. Against Tom she contrasts another American, Dick Saulsbury, the unimaginative "go-getter" has not even an understanding of temperament or ideals in his whole makeup. He arrives—so completely "hard boiled" that not even the subsequent parboiling of Manila's torrid vapors affects his Rotarian aggressiveness.

"Heat" succeeds chiefly in its indication of the atmosphere—mental, physical, political—of the islands. The book contains much satiric writing directed at army life in Manila. From the Colonel's lady down, the author depicts the femininity of the army as a gossipy and back-biting lot. But, of course, this element of vituperative tittle-tattle stands always as a feature of an ingrown and self-centred society. The author writes with a sensitiveness of the aging beauties of Manila and with an appreciation of certain incongruities in the American régime there. "Heat" patently bears the stamp of authenticity on its pages and should not be classed merely as a love story of the tropics. Covarrubias has supplied for the volume a colorful and distinctive jacket.

THEY HAD TO SEE PARIS. Homer Croy. 303 pp. New York: Harper & Brothers. $2.

THE previous novels of Homer Croy have shown him to be an exponent of the Middle West. The family with which he is concerned, that of Mr. Pike Peters, hails from the Southwest, from Clearwater, Okla. Mr. and Mrs. Pike Peters are of the second generation of Oklahoma. In them is much of the rugged strength and simplicity of the frontier. In many ways they are just folks. Certainly they are very human and attract to read about. They are a great relief from the association on printed page with people who are always with a devastating wit, a great pleasure to know that complexes and inhibitions have yet reach the oil fields. It may be such an approach—such casualness—fails to make literature, but this instance it has made entertaining reading. "They Had to See Paris" is a novel to chuckle over.

Pike Peters has pulled himself in the world by his bootstraps. He had been about most everything could be in Oklahoma from a farm to a horse doctor. At the open of the story he is one of the important business men of Clearwater, population 15,000, "and getting bigger every minute." He is an

"THE purest of human pleasures," said wise Lord Bacon of the making of gardens. And those who make them, and also write books about making them, must surely agree with him, such delight in the work do they always contrive to put into their pages. Probably in no other kind of volume would it be possible to find so much enthusiasm, such ardor, such absolute confidence that here is the way to undiluted happiness as glows upon every page of almost any book about gardening. This array of garden books especially shines with this joy of creation of beauty, but they are all well filled also with the knowledge that the gardener, whether amateur or professional, beginner or adept, wants to know. There is something here for them all.

There are many signs that Americans are becoming deeply interested in gardens and garden lore, although there is not yet that universal love for them and willingness to take all manner of trouble in order to have them as manifested in England. The thirteenth annual International Flower Show recently held in New York City with its huge record of attendance and the annual meetings in connection with it of the National Association of Gardeners and of the Garden Club of America, each with its report of growing numbers and increase of interest and activities, tell their own eloquent story of how the love of gardens is spreading and make their own prophecy of a more beautiful land. How important this factor of the organization of garden lovers will be in creating that more beautiful land is indicated by Mr. Ernest H. Wilson who, "with homage and respect," dedicates his volume "To the Garden Clubs, the most potent forces in garden making in America."

There is no more enthusiastic gardener in America, nor, probably, any more ivotomly and widely learned about plants, than Ernest H. Wilson, known also as "Chinese" Wilson, who brought a large portion of his enthusiasm with him when he came to this country from England many years ago and has since developed both love and knowledge by years of travel in search of plants and their lore in China, Japan, Australasia and elsewhere in the interest of American gardens. During recent years he has been assistant director of the Arnold Arboretum, near Boston, and is the author of that very interesting volume, "America's Greatest Garden," published last year, wherein he tells the comprehensive story of the Arboretum and its plant population. "Aristocrats of the Garden" was first published some ten years ago and is now brought out in a new and handsome edition, with a preface in which the author bears witness to the steady growth during this decade of the cult of gardenmaking among Americans. The work was first written, and is now brought out anew, as part of the author's long and unceasing effort to spread the knowledge of and induce the desire to grow the best and most suitable specimens of flowers, shrubs and trees—"the aristocrats" of the plant world. There is a chapter on the modern rose and its history and another on the lily, while lilacs and rhododendrons, hardy climbing shrubs, ornamental fruit trees, evergreens, trees and shrubs that flower in the early Spring, and those of the mid-season, Japanese cherries and Asiatic crabapples—concerning both these Mr. Wilson is especially enthusiastic and he insists upon their possibilities for American gardens—plants and trees from China, all receive attention. The entire book is written very interestingly, with many rapid sketches of his adventures in far lands, and every page is suffused with his own deep pleasure in plants and flowers and his desire to improve the variety and beauty of garden plants. The book is profusely and beautifully illustrated from photographs of flowers and trees.

Mrs. Cosgrave sets forth the interesting theory that potential gardening enthusiasm lies dormant in many people, and needs only an inspiration and an outlet to burgeon forth in its usual splendor. In proof she cites her own case, telling how her own delight in gardening was a "war baby" and how it was born of a vegetable garden, quickly grew to include flowers and is now as vigorous and glowing an enthusiasm for gardening as could be found anywhere. Her book is intended for beginners and includes some chapters on vegetable gardening, although the major part is devoted to flower cultivation. If any one has begun to garden and become discouraged by ill luck, or wants to begin but is fearful, Mrs. Cosgrave's book would surely inspire to immediate zeal. For she tells what thrills await the gardener, what fascinations for every month in the year, what duties and pleasures go constantly hand in hand, what satisfying philosophy can be reaped from a garden, along with its crops of beauty. But the heart of her book is its advice on the selection of flowers and the planning of borders and gardens for harmony and beauty of color and form. There is much counsel also on the care and nurture of those species that need special attention. Not only beginners in gardening but also those of some experience will find much valuable suggestion in her pages, for she writes out of her own experience and she has evidently created her own gardens by depending chiefly on her individual inspirations and experiments. There are diagrams of suggested plans for gardens and borders that endeavor to combine flowers so as to produce the most pleasing effects, and there are several page plates from photographs whose reproduction is not as successful as might be wished.

The rest of the books in this list are all of English origin and there is always a question as to just how much value such works have for American gardeners, because of the differences in climate and soil and atmospheric conditions between the two countries. For the professional gardener and the expert amateur they have the interest of comparison and frequently, doubtless, they afford valuable suggestion. But the beginner should be hesitant about trusting to their advice. Mr. Macself's book on "Bulb Gardening," however, has much useful and interesting information concerning the growing of bulbs in Holland and in England, the characteristics of the different species of bulbous plants and other matters of general interest to flower lovers and growers. The chief plants dealt with are narcissus, hyacinth, iris, lily, gladiolus, freesia, tulip, anemone, crocus, amaryllis, cyclamen, begonia. About half the volume is devoted to outdoor culture and the second half to the growing of bulbous plants in pots, cold frames and window boxes. There are several beautiful illustrations in color, ten page plates in half tone and many line drawings in the text.

Mr. Macself is an English authority on horticulture, on which he has written several books, and his work on "Soils and Fertilisers" is an endeavor to furnish the ordinary working gardener and the amateur with information on those subjects which has the authority of the scientist but is clothed in the terms of the workaday world. He deals with the worms, grubs and insects that fill the gardener's heart with despair, and tells how to fight a winning battle against them; soil improvement, drainage, the right ways and the wrong ways of cultivating the soil, the different kinds of soils, fertilisers of many kinds, the manurial value of chemicals and other matters. The illustrations include some in colors, several in halftone and numerous line drawings.

Mr. Tipping's large and handsome volume, of folio size, describing "English Gardens," contains hundreds of exceedingly beautiful and interesting pictures of views in the gardens of English castles, manor houses and homes. The subjects are taken from many parts of England and show a great variety of plant life, accessories, architecture and garden treatment. The text accompanying each subject describes the structure for which the garden makes approach and setting, tells something of its history and architecture and explains the aims and methods of the garden development. Especially interesting is Mr. Tipping's long introduction, filling sixty-odd pages, in which he surveys the development in England of the art of gardening. He says that it is the one art in which the English excel, but that they have learned it by borrowing. He tells from what sources these borrowings were made and how they were dealt with to fit them to English needs and conceptions of beauty, and with many references, quotations and descriptions makes a charming account. This introduction is profusely illustrated, mainly from prints and plans of gardens in England in other centuries.

Mr. Woolley's book on "Herbaceous Borders for Amateurs" is written for the use of the English amateur, the man or woman with little or no experience who decides to have a bit of garden in some suburban backyard. He gives careful and detailed instruction as to preparation of the ground, the making of backgrounds, paths and borders, the choice of plants, the planting and the care. A useful feature is furnished by a series of tables filling forty pages which list flowers suitable for herbaceous borders.

"Ornamental Trees for Amateurs," by W. J. Bean, Curator of the Royal Botanic Gardens, Kew, is a companion volume to the author's previous "Shrubs for Amateurs." It mentions over four hundred different kinds of trees, the descriptive list classified, according to their scientific names, each genus being represented by several different species of which each one is fully described. This list fills about two-thirds of the book and is preceded by directions for transplanting, pruning, propagation and the care of old trees.

The bunch of sweet peas in color on the paper jacket of Mr. Unwin's book on that flower charmingly allures to its investigation. Mr. Unwin is an English expert in sweet peas and writes out of a lifetime of experience in growing, hybridising, exhibiting, selling and loving them. One section of his book tells the interesting story of their origin, history and development, another deals with the raising of new varieties, and other chapters take up the different kinds, the best methods of culture, the enemies and diseases that attack them, their use for indoor decoration, and how the flower is likely to be developed in the future.

Home Town Mind

can writer more often fails to understand than the writers of any other country and for this reason American literature is more generally ephemeral. It is more effective, often, for the moment, but less enduring. Put a little more academically, the American writer is less prone to search for "universal" themes, and when handling a particular theme less willing to search for the universal application.

Or this same proposition might be stated in a different way. Much used to be heard of the phrase, "art for art's sake"; but the phrase has largely fallen into disuse, perhaps because it was almost invariably misapplied. It was generally contended that those who insisted that art might be (and should be) followed for its own sake alone were seeking to banish ideas from art, to establish an art devoid of ideas. Nothing could have been further from the minds of the makers of the phrase, since nothing could be conceived of more self-contradictory. Art without ideas is self-contradictory. All that was ever intended by the rubric, and it is much, was that the expression of the ideational content should be worked at patiently, tenderly, painstakingly, as something worthy to be regarded as an end in itself, not utilitarianly, as merely a means. When thus interpreted, no one ever so vigorously prosecuted "art for art's sake" as Shakespeare—unless perhaps it was Dante. In the field of the essay, Montaigne; and, within the limits of his lesser capacities, of course also Lamb. And because this must be the final test of the essay, which, ever impinging on life, is ever removed from life—because this is the supreme test Robert Lynd is the truest essayist of the quintet. Take this, from an essay on silence:

It is only in our social life, however, that we dread silence. We love noise more than we know even when no other human being is present. We go into the country, not in order to escape from noise, but in search of a different kind of noise. The birds are as loquacious as women; the bees as inimical to silence as children. When evening falls, and the voice of the last cuckoo fades into a universal stillness, we are aware of a new awe as of something supernatural. There are sounds that are terrifying at night, but they are chiefly so because of the stillness that is broken by them. The breathing of a cow behind a hedge, as you pass along a quiet road at midnight, may startle you, but it is not the cow, it is the silence that has startled you.

Is there not in this something of the sensitiveness of Hudson in the feeling for nature, the true feeling for nature, which sees her as she is, without the bringing to bear of preconceived ideas and notions? And whether it be nature or the aspirations of a child or the matter of shaving or on traveling "first class," Mr. Lynd approaches the subject with the same degree of sensitiveness and interprets with the same fidelity. And, to come back to what we started with, there is here expression which has in it qualities of endurance, because Mr. Lynd, perceiving his subject, then devotes himself to expression for its own sake.

There is a spirit of high happiness that breathes throughout A. Clutton-Brock's "Essays on Life." There is also intense vigor, zest for carrying a point.

Mr. Clutton-Brock seems to have the unusual faculty of expressing judgments and dislikes with so much of amiability that one experiences quiet enjoyment in listening to him. And he is not always harping on his dislikes, far from it, although he never hides them. His is a little book, but packed with much matter.

"John O'London" is, as every one knows, the editor of an English weekly. "Unposted Letters" are selected from his periodical gist of "Letters to Gog and Magog," a conception sufficiently whimsical in itself to commend the anthology to discerning mortals searching for quips not too patent and for admonitions not mixed too much with acid. No letter is more than a few pages in length, so that the range of subjects covered in even a small volume will be apparent.

into seclusion. But Scotland Yard, that good old stand-by of romance, is ever active, ever vigilant, and very hard to deceive. Of course the Dean meets persons he would have preferred to avoid. And reports of a gay clergyman flitter home from the baccarat rooms of France, causing gossip in the cathedral set. The Dean suffers anguish for his escapade, but hangs on with the grit of a soldier.

It all turns out right in the end. The Dean's niece has a pretty romance in his absence with a young and hustling business man who has bought the house next door. The wayward brother is enabled to clear himself. The Dean in his flight meets a retired broker who is able to help him shake off the scandal of the bogus clergyman's carryings-on in France.

When it is all over the Dean can see that his troubles have been for the best. He has received an insight into the virtues of his fellow-men which he never would have obtained had he stayed in the normal round. "The Dean and Iecinora" is a highly moral and reasonably diverting story.

OLIVER GOLDSMITH

THE JESSAMY BRIDE. By F. Frankfort Moore. Anniversary edition. Introduction by Christopher Morley. 417 pp. New York: Duffield & Co. $2.

MR. MOORE'S famous and romantic tale about Oliver Goldsmith's love story has reached its thirtieth anniversary and deserves to have its birthday celebrated by this new and pleasing edition with its introduction by Christopher Morley. The novel really could pass as much older than that, for in spirit and style it belongs in the early nineteenth century. No less than such a space of time seems to separate it from the spirit and methods of the up-to-date fiction of this present time. However, it really is only thirty years old, even if Mr. Morley in his introduction does describe it as "one of my private candidates for the world's most sentimental book." Notwithstanding its characteristic of sentiment—which may be a desirable characteristic for readers in an age that is lacking in that factor—Mr. Morley says of it:

> This book should be read by the young and the young in spirit. It gives them a lively glimpse into some of the best company that history ever knew—Dr. Johnson, Garrick, Sir Joshua Reynolds and all the rest—and suggests to them, more than most textbooks ever will, that literature is a living tissue, the work of actual human beings under the pressure of violent and perplexing circumstances. It brings a whole tract of literature permanently alive to the young reader. . . . Mr. Moore's tender romance justly shares some of its hero's immortality.

Mr. F. Frankfort Moore is the author also of a "Life of Oliver Goldsmith."

MORE OF MR. COLLIN

THE STRANGE ADVENTURES OF MR. COLLIN. By Frank Heller. Translated from the Swedish by Robert Emmons Lee. 356 pp. New York: The Thomas M. Crowell Company. $2.

THERE are three kinds of detective stories: those that you expect to finish later, those that draw you on from page to page until you find that you have finished them, and the kind that makes you put off for an hour stopping long enough to cross the room for a cigarette. "The Strange Adventures of Mr. Collin" belongs in the second group. It never lags, but it does ease off from time to time.

The redoubtable Mr. Collin is still the same entertaining figure that he was in "The Thousand and Second Night," "The Grand Duke's Fortune," and Frank Heller's many other stories. He is still imbued with his well-known love for justice and for undoing the harm done by certain virtuous but unscrupulous citizens of the world; he still retains his deftness in snatching victory when defeat seems certain; but his adventures, while as subtle, seem not to be as complex as they have been at other periods of his life. Perhaps one reason for the lack of tenseness in the present book is that it is composed of seven distinct adventures which are unconnected except that Mr. Collins and his faithful companion, Lavertisse, are the central figures in all of them. This makes for a good deal more description and exposition than is necessary when there is one central plot.

These adventures take place in widely separated parts of Europe. In the first story Collin is luckily able to foil a gang of scoundrels who have plotted to wreck in the Canary Islands a yacht carrying many prominent persons—among them, of course, the hero himself. The second story deals with a rich and cranky miser and a beautiful English suffragette. In the third tale Mr. Collin makes an unexpected round trip from Paris to Hell, while another deals with a medieval robber castle in Italy. Later on the ingenious rogue arranges that his friend, Lavertisse, shall win the national lottery on the island of Corfu. The last two stories are set in Ireland and Sweden, respectively. In one of them Mr. Collin succeeds in gathering together an army of modern amazons, and in the other he indulges in some partially successful real estate deals in his native village.

The adventures are always interesting, and occasionally they touch upon real excitement. If Mr. Collin is not as fascinating nor as talented as Sherlock Holmes, Arsène Lupin or Jimmy Dale, at least he has a personality of his own. We cannot fail to take a kindly interest in his activities, whatever they may be. From incidents in some of the stories—such as detailed reports of the activity of the militant suffragists in England, the nature of certain references to Germany and things of that sort—one is led to wonder whether this tale was not written before the war, say in 1912. If so, perhaps one may hope for another, and possibly a more exciting story from Frank Haller before long.

EARLY TEXAS DAYS

THE STAR OF ALAMO. By Willis Vernon-Cole. 320 pp. New York: The Writers' Guild.

THE WRITERS' GUILD was recently incorporated for the purpose of publishing a series of novels that should deal with episodes in American history and treat them in the romantic spirit while preserving truth and an attitude of realism. It has fallen to Willis Vernon-Cole to furnish the initial volume of the series with this story of the winning of Texas to the United States. His narrative begins in Cincinnati some years before its chief events take place, in the days when that busy and ambitious young town was called the "Queen City of the West," and shows Uriah Hardin and his wife, Elizabeth—he from Connecticut and she from Georgia—considering the advisability of going down to this new Southwestern region with their little daughter, Ann, who is only 9 years old, Judge Benton of New York, accompanied by his young son, Larry, in Cincinnati on certain public business in which Hardin is concerned, is going to Texas on a hunting trip. But he never returns from that journey, on which he is killed by the Indians and his son taken prisoner.

The Hardins do not migrate until their daughter Ann has finished school. In the meantime has come the visit of Lafayette and gala days in Cincinnati, to which the author devotes a vivid chapter. As they journey by river boat down the Mississippi to their future home, a 5,000-acre ranch in the valley of the Brazos, the body of the story begins. It is a broad, active and well-peopled scene upon which the narrative enters, notwithstanding the meagreness of settlers. Davy Crockett and Jim Bowie are there, and Stephen Austin, Sam Houston, Deaf Smith, the scout; Santa Ana, his despicable spy, Wilks Skonks, and all the rest of the famous company that battled and intrigued over the ownership of Texas. Young Larry Benton is there, too, rescued from his ten-year captivity with the Indians and become a handsome Captain of the Rangers. His and Ann Hardin's romance throws its rose-color glow over the stern and often bloody pages of the historical part of the tale. Mr. Vernon-Cole follows accurately the general course of historical events, bringing out into high light such famous episodes as the defense of the Alamo, the relief of San Antonio and others. These are described with swift, vigorous, sketching lines and they and the many scenes of Southwestern life are portrayed with color and vitality. The author has a poetic imagination and he has used it with good effect in breathing the breath of life into his story.

INFLUENCING HUMAN BEHAVIOR
by H. A. Overstreet, A.B., B.Sc. (Oxon)
FROM ALL OVER THE COUNTRY
A few of the many reviews that are now appearing in praise of "INFLUENCING HUMAN BEHAVIOR":

Chicago Evening Post: "It is a book for every person who can read. It clarifies modern life and makes the future almost possible." Buffalo News: "A really remarkable book. The outcome of the practical observations of a gifted teacher." The Pensacola News: "Entirely different from the ordinary books on Psychology." The Baltimore Sun: "Professor Overstreet keeps the reader 'thinking' along with him all the time." The Los Angeles Record: "Invaluable for those who would learn what our scientists are finding out about modern men and women."

RECOGNITION SUCH AS THIS is sending hundreds of people into book stores all over the country for this remarkable book. A second large printing is now almost exhausted, as Professor Overstreet's "techniques" for successfully influencing human behavior become more and more discussed and practiced.

With Mine Host Of the Inn

Greatness, Decline and Revival of The English Hostelry

THE ENGLISH INN, PAST AND PRESENT. A Review of Its History and Social Life. By Harold Donaldson Eberlein, B. A., and A. E. Richardson, F. S. A. 289 pp. Profusely illustrated. Philadelphia: The J. B. Lippincott Company. $7.50.

ONE does not need to be a dyed-in-the-wool antiquarian to scent interest in a book devoted to the history of that ancient and honorable English institution, the inn. One may be quite devoid of antiquarian leanings and yet find one's self powerfully drawn by the subject. And the reason is that in that simple word of three letters is a double appeal. Are we not dual in nature? Is not life an alternation of activity and repose? Hence the inn, while the very symbol and embodiment of repose, appeals to us also on the alternate side of ourselves, for it is also the focal point of activity and the radiating centre of activity. And the inn, or, as we have vulgarized it in this country, the roadhouse, has nowhere else ever been brought to the perfection achieved in England.

Inns of course there were the world over in the days before the railroad made possible the continuous journey; and they are coming back to their own the world over now that the automobile has made the continuous journey by railroad less attractive than it had seemed to be. But the English inn, from the time of Chaucer to, let us say, well toward the third quarter of the nineteenth century, was an epitomized expression of England itself and of the people of England. Here was to be found good food, good cheer, good company and, good measure; the inn was the centre of its locale, and a gorgeous milestone between the point of good cheer just left and the point of good cheer ahead. And Mr. Harold Donaldson Eberlein, who is a Bachelor of Arts, and Mr. A. E. Richardson, who is a Fellow of the Antiquarian Society, have conferred a boon on their fellow mortals by their review of the history and social life of the British hostelry.

The starting point of the narrative is the Mermaid Tavern at Cornhill, famous as the gathering place of Shakespeare and his fellow-dramatists. The authors say that it might have been more accurate to have begun with an account of the Tabard, but from that they refrained, for who, they say, "would dare to restate Chaucer"? Yet why restate Chaucer? Why not quote? The Pilgrims, it will be recalled, when April showers had pierced the drought of March to the roots, were setting out for Canterbury.

> Bifel that, in that seasoun on a day,
> In Southwerk at the Tabard as I lay
> Redy to wenden on my pilgrimage
> To Canterbury with ful devout corage,
> At night was come in-to that hostelrye
> Wel nyne and twenty in a compaignye,
> Of sondry folk, by aventure y-falle
> In felawshipe, and pilgrims were they alle,
> That toward Caunterbury wolden ryde;
> The chambres and the stables weren wyde,
> And wel we weren eased atte beste.

The art of advertising was to take its rise not till many centuries later, but Chaucer reveals himself here as the first of English advertisers as he was the first of English poets. In two lines he has "featured" what in modern parlance would be called the "selling points" of the Tabard; he has told prospective travelers just what is necessary to induce them to select that hostelry before others.

> The chambres and the stables weren wyde.

There was ample sleeping room for man, and ample stall-room for his beast. And they were "eased" (entertained) by their host's best. And of this worthy man Chaucer also has words of commendation to record.

To be sure, not every inn was as comfortable as the Tabard, or the cheer so abundant; although of course it may be that Chaucer slightly overdrew the picture—as advertisers, quite by error, sometimes do. This phase of the matter cannot be dwelt on at any greater length, however, lest Messrs. Eberlein and Richardson complain of neglect; but for those who wish to peruse contrary evidence it will be found in Shakespeare's "King Henry IV," Part 2, Act II, Scene 4; and in the induction to "Taming of the Shrew." Indeed, the inn, in one way and another, has been a preoccupation of English writers from Chaucer to Dickens, and even later; and this fact alone sufficiently attests how fervidly English local life and action converged on the hostelry, where the coach changed its horses and the travelers "lay" for the night.

If in architectural design the earlier English inns showed marked resemblance one to another, the fact is indicative not so much of lack of imagination as of the realization of the value of a certain type of structure. The early inns were, with few if any exceptions, built four-square about the inn yard, entrance to which was effected through a huge gateway, above and on either side of which were rooms. One of the four sides was devoted, of course, to the stables—an arrangement that could hardly have appealed to fastidious noses. However, if one may draw conclusions from one's reading, there were no fastidious noses in those far-off halcyon days.

The sides of the inn fronting on the yard were usually provided with a balcony at each story, and many and varied were the scenes witnessed from these balconies. Indeed, much of the life of the town centred in the inn yard; in many localities it was used as the marketplace, and as the place of entertainment by strolling companies. The rudimentary dramas which preceded Elizabethan florescence—the morality plays and the so-called "Interludes" were performed again and again in the inn yards; and if stage directions called for the appearance of God or of Noah on a balcony, there was the balcony of the inn already provided. In fact, one may go further and assume that the playwright in many cases definitely visualized his mise en scène with the inn yard before his mind.

As happened more than once, an inn caught on fire, and in the event of such catastrophe this manner of building proved somewhat of a trap. In later centuries the inn built about the yard became less and less the prevailing type. By the middle of the eighteenth century the inn had materially improved. The coach traffic could now be relied upon. The "nobility and gentry" traveled in their own carriages. There were regular stage-wagons to and from London, and others traveling on the cross road. . . . People at this period, 1770, were rebelling against antique discomforts. The rooms of the average inn were at this time paneled in deal, but the furniture of the best rooms was of mahogany. It was at this time that travelers insisted on the airing of the warming pan before venturing between sheets, and the "genteel" sort of people asked for silver et ceteras to ornament the dinner table.

We have been treated rather much recently to books on the great sailing ship days which vanished before the age of steam. There was so much of the spectacular about the sailing ship, and the life thereon of such vicissitudes that the recovery of those times captures the imagination. With vastly less of the spectacular, and its vicissitudes distinctly of a minor sort, the coaching era offers a certain parallel to the era of sail, for it passed less swiftly and more sullenly, to be sure, but less as inevitably, before the encroachments of steam. Messrs. Eberlein and Richardson ask us to imagine the scene at an inn a century and a quarter ago:

> The coachman has just finished a fast stage. He throws down the reins to the hostler, for his work for the time is over. Within two minutes the fresh team is in position, and off goes the coach through the village streets, past the idlers and gossips. . . . Winter and Summer, fair weather and foul, always with a ready word for passengers, always examining out to the sun's road, always with a justice new (minute to old hostler ready with a smile for schoolboy and a nod to farmers, the stage-acts like a demigod. He has the latest news from London, and the true patron of the inns is the regulator of the timetable. It is the guard that the passengers refer for information, for none but the privileged few dare address the coachman.

Just how deep was the change wrought by steam becomes sufficiently apparent from reading such a book as "The English Inn," as, except in so far as a less beautiful object replaced an exceedingly beautiful one, the change was not an upheaval. The sailing ship still could go into steam and his status not be affected, indeed, in point of comfort and safety he was bettered off. But on land the very roots of society were disturbed, broken, destroyed. Not only the hostlers, the drivers, the blacksmiths were thrown out of work when the railway replaced the stagecoach, but the social fabric which had been built through ages of unbroken custom was rent and torn. By means of the coach the small towns had been linked with one another and with the metropolis; the inns along the route had been depots of gossip, repositories of information and sources of renewal. The guest established a personal relation to his host, although he might not see him again; and the host himself was a being whose personality made itself felt far beyond the limits of his own locale.

With the development of the railways the towns sank to insignificance, the inns fell into decay and the host sank to a nonentity. The difference between the age of Chaucer and age of George III is infinitesimal compared with the difference between the age of George III and George V—or even Victoria. It is a curious turn of fate that another invention, that of the internal combustion engine, should now be proving the agency for restoring the human contacts which the locomotive engine destroyed. But such is the case, automobile tourists—"coaching," as it might be called—is bringing about a resuscitation of earlier inn days. "The English Inn, Past and Present," might well be grouped, especially because of its extensive indices, by those contemplating next Summer an automobile tour of England. But, to those with no such end in view it is also to be suggested. It is a book of strangely humanizing effect. And in value and abundance of illustration the volume has few rivals.

Five Centuries of Chaucer Criticism

FIVE HUNDRED YEARS OF CHAUCER CRITICISM AND ALLUSION (1357-1900). By Caroline F. E. Spurgeon. With twenty-four collotype illustrations, introduction, notes, appendices and general index. In three volumes containing 648, 440, 349 pp. respectively. New York: The Macmillan Company. $18.50.

ALTHOUGH Frederick J. Furnivall, founder of the Chaucer Society, called in 1888 for a volunteer to compile "The Praise of Chaucer," it was not until 1901, when he met Miss Spurgeon, "then an unwary as well as an eager student" of English literature, that he found the person for whom he was seeking. Miss Spurgeon's preface, dated December, 1923, tells the story of her quarter-century task, a task far heavier, as she came to know, than either Dr. Furnivall or she suspected. The volumes, originally published for private distribution among the members of the Chaucer Society, are now, through the cooperation of the Cambridge University Press and its representatives, made available to the public.

In an admirable introduction of 144 pages, Miss Spurgeon, with that sureness of touch which all who know her writings can recognize, sums up the results of the collected documents and suggests the problems raised by the facts. As a contribution toward the history of literary criticism, she gives an outline of the fluctuations of the literary reputation of Chaucer during the last five hundred years, an examination of the criticisms and allusions themselves, discusses the various classes of qualities ascribed to Chaucer and the evolution of Chaucer biography, and comments upon some of the Chaucer lovers and workers of whom we get glimpses throughout the centuries. She then proceeds to consider the material in the light of its contribution toward the history of poetics in England, more especially in connection with the change or curve of literary taste and fashion, the birth and growth of criticism itself as an art, the gradual evolution of new senses in the race, and the evolution of scholarship and accuracy in literary matters. To condense so much material into so brief a compass without dullness or pedantry is a triumph.

It seems almost supererogatory to remark that the whole is a rich treasury of information. For a good many years these books are destined to be the point of departure for further study of Chaucer. Nor need they be tools for students only. They may take their place along with Boswell's "Life of Johnson" as alluring "occasional" books. One may dip into them at random and be richly rewarded. Thus one may turn to a letter of Miss Anna Seward under date of May 29, 1782, in which she remarks to Henry Cary, Esq., of Christ Church:

> Your assertion that Chaucer, Spenser and Milton are the greatest poets of this country may be controverted. Chaucer had certainly genius; but beneath the rust of his obsolete, coarse and inharmonious diction there is no ascertaining its degree.

Or one may be startled by the remark in Thomas Wright's "Life of Walter Pater" of a conversation between Richard Jackson and Pater:

> One day, when Pater and Mr. Jackson were visiting an acquaintance, Pater chanced to take up a rather rare little book called "Chaucer Modernized." He remarked that he had never seen it before, and frankly admitted that he was entirely ignorant of the literature connected with Chaucer; that, moreover, of Chaucer himself and his work he knew very little. "Of course," he added, "I have heard of the Canterbury Tales, but I did not know that they were considered of sufficient importance to be modernized."

The reader will do well, it may be remarked in passing, not to judge Pater before reading Miss Spurgeon's comment upon this anecdote.

One of the most delightful features of the work is Miss Spurgeon's tribute to Dr. Furnivall. Few teachers have received warmer homage. These great volumes constitute a fitting monument to an inspiring teacher and a faithful disciple.

WALDO H. DUNN.

A Famous French Nonconformist

PARIS.

MESSRS. JEROME AND JEAN THARAUD have just finished two interesting and readable volumes, entitled "Notre cher Péguy." From days of their youth they were late friends of Charles Péguy, famous editor of "Cahiers de la Quinzaine," and so were in an excellent position to record his life. Péguy was one of the most extraordinary figures and most original writers of our age. I myself knew slightly during his last years. He was a thick-set little man, with a beard and an eyeglass, who wore a black cloak, behandled shoes and carried a cane. He looked like a peasant turned professor, and was about what he was.

He grew, about 1880, in a part of Orléans which was half slum and half suburb, a mass of the people (mother repaired chair bottoms); went first to the primary school (always had a very high opinion of lay school teachers. At the same time he was given a Catholic education and studied the catechism in the Church of St. Aignan, his parish church. The Tharaud brothers were his friends at the Ste. Barbe academy in Paris, where he had obtained a scholarship and where he prepared for the High Normal School (rue d'Ulm). He was admitted to the Normal School and might have been a professor in a high school or university had not his independent nature withheld him from an official career.

At this time he was an anti-Clerical and a Socialist. He collected subscriptions for Dreyfus and ceased attending the religious services in the academy because the Catholic press had taken the attitude against the miners of Carmaux who had elected Jaurès, a devoted himself to ardent propaganda for his ideas, which were extreme, advanced but already quite Christian. He loved manual labor, and felt that he was of their race, but his socialism, which had traits of "evangelism" despite his religious opinions, seemed to him to mean a family tradition and did not yield an iota, to Marxist orthodoxy. Péguy could never bend to discipline of any sort and was to remain, in all his changes, an eternal nonconformist.

After his first year at the Normal School he asked for a vacation in order to write a life of Jeanne d'Arc, a native of Orléans. Jeanne d'Arc seemed to him and he considered her a fellow-countrywoman. Although he dedicated this work "to those men and women who have given their life for the Universal Socialist Republic," his political friends thought that he had wasted his time and that he had more important work to do. Soon after he finally resigned from the Normal School in order to marry and open a Socialist library in the Latin Quarter. He did not make a material success of it, for he fought with his patrons, but he set up in another shop, on the Rue de la Sorbonne, where he founded his famous "Cahiers" and where he was his own master. He so seldom had any employes that he often used to sweep the floor and the sidewalk himself.

WHEN the Dreyfus affair broke out he was an ardent Dreyfusite and fought with his pen, like a Trojan, for truth and justice. It is possible, as the Tharaud brothers suggest, that some people saw in the affair only an opportunity for political manoeuvring. Péguy was one of those who had no partisan feeling and who devoted themselves solely to the defense of the right. The Tharauds compare him to Antigone in revolt against Creon in Sophocles's tragedy. To those who for reasons of State refused to grant a retrial he said, "A single illegality, a single crime, a single illegality, if it is universally, legally, nationally, conveniently accepted, is enough to dishonor an entire nation. It is the fleck of gangrene which corrupts the entire body."

He was right. There was nothing more honorable to France than the reparation of that judicial error, to which he contributed his share. Péguy was always a noble soul, pure, a fine example of moral greatness. Moreover, he was an unyielding and mortal foe of all compromises. After the final acquittal of Captain Dreyfus Péguy abandoned his comrades-in-arms, whom he accused of having transformed themselves into vulgar politicians. He roughly attacked the Combes Ministry and attacked Jaurès for supporting it. The political kitchen disgusted him. He would not permit church members to be persecuted any more than he would the Jews. He was an idealist, a perfectly fair man.

HIS distaste for politics brought about a religious reaction. He once used to say that his ten or twelve years of Catholic education had left no trace in him. He styled himself a rationalist. But Bergsonian philosophy, which he accepted, induced him to distrust the intellect, and his childhood memories kept coming into his mind. Finally he was again a Catholic, enthusiastic and fervent, but with a weird brand of Catholicism! He had had a civil marriage and had not had his children baptised, being unable to impose religious formalities upon his wife, who didn't care for them; he had been refused the sacraments and did not even go to mass. He thought that he could remedy all that by prayer, by pilgrimages to Notre Dame de Chartres and by personal relations with God, from Whom he believed he received particular attention. He could no more submit to the discipline of a Church than he could to that of a political party. Socialist or Catholic, and never more socialistic than in his manner of becoming a Catholic, he was predestined to schism and heresy. He would doubtless have been condemned by the Vatican and still believed that his Catholicism was superior to that of the Pope. When war was declared, as a reserve Lieutenant he remarked: "I go as a soldier of the republic for general disarmament and the last of wars." He fell like a hero on the 5th of September, 1914, at the Marne, with a bullet through his brain.

He was a great controversialist and a true poet. His long poems, the "Mystère de la charité de Jeanne d'Arc," "Tapisserie de Sainte Geneviève" and "Eve," are uneven and a bit verbose, but have passages of startling beauty. His prose is admirable. One can oppose some of his ideas, especially his criticism of intellectualism, but what wealth of imagery, what passion, what music there is in "Notre Jeunesse, "Victor-Marie, Comte Hugo," "L'Argent," "Clio," "Note sur M. Bergson," "Note conjointe sur Descartes," &c. * * * His style was a bit peculiar, with too much emphasis, too many repetitions, a sort of blacksmith manner, and also with nuances, contradictions, phrases of unusual length, with only incidental and parenthetical force. But he had a marvelous vocabulary. He had a power and a manner which were his alone. He was a master of writing.

Body and Soul of the Law

THE ANATOMY OF THE LAW. By Alcalá J. Rodenbeck. Boston: Little, Brown & Co. $4.

THE PROFESSIONAL IDEALS OF THE LAWYER: A Study of Legal Ethics. By Henry Wyness Jessup. New York: G. A. Jennings Company.

By CHESTER ROHRLICH

THE increasing complexity of modern life is perhaps nowhere better illustrated than in the changing conditions surrounding the practice of the law. On the one hand is the flux in the body of the law motivated by the desire to better adapt the common law to new conditions of society; on the other is the change in the personal relationships between attorneys, Judges and clients resulting from the changed social conditions.

During the past decade the legal profession has been almost overwhelmed by the tremendous increase in the output of textbooks, judicial opinions and legislative flats and is turning to a "restatement of the law" as a possible way out of the increasingly difficult problem of keeping abreast of the changing currents. The work of preparing such a "restatement" is now in progress. Judge Rodenbeck undoubtedly presented "The Anatomy of the Law" as a contribution to this undertaking.

The book is primarily an attempt to sketch a skeleton outline of the "body of the law" to serve as a basis on which the proposed restatement may be developed. Certainly the logical beginning for the task. It is not very important whether Judge Rodenbeck's outline or some other form is finally agreed upon, but it is important that all possible plans be put forth and considered. As a tentative suggestion for the purpose of furthering discussion the book has some value.

It is a most promising and hopeful sign that a Justice of the New York State Supreme Court in "scattered moments during a busy judicial life" should have had the inclination to read and study learned American and foreign works on the history and nature of law and to put forth his effort toward bringing order out of what "seems like an unfathomable conglomeration of inexplicable confusion." In the light of this omen, possible criticism of some of the philosophical concepts formulated by Judge Rodenbeck, such as "Justice is the essence of the law," pales into insignificance.

Considerable space is devoted to the history and development of "the law." Fault may perhaps be found with some of Judge Rodenbeck's assertions as to the paths traversed by the law in the course of its development, but the book leaves at least the very clear impression that "the law is a living thing, depending for its life, growth and development upon environment, conditions and special circumstances."

The author's penchant for trite phrases and commonplace quotations is annoying and surprising in view of his wide reading, clearly evidenced in the book. The volume is made unnecessarily forbidding by a too great profusion of diagrams and chapter-headings such as, "Simple Elements of Practical Side of General Features of Substantive Law." The work is diffuse and far too long for the content. A "little book" with "shortcomings," as the author modestly enough refers to it, should hardly require three hundreds pages. There is too little flesh for so large a skeleton.

The most complete familiarity with the law is for the practicing lawyer only half the battle. He needs clients and he must represent them in their multifarious dealings with other men. And here too changing conditions are at hand; new conditions giving rise to new problems, not only of law but of deportment.

Mr. Jessup's book, "The Professional Ideals of the Lawyer" is a most comprehensive treatment of "legal ethics" by a man eminently well qualified for the task by many years of active participation in the work of the Committees on Professional Ethics of the various Bar Associations.

The formal study of the ethics of the profession has been largely neglected. Many lawyers of the very highest standards of conduct give little heed to the detailed consideration of ethical problems because they feel that the distinction between right and wrong is intuitive and that the imbued spirit of professional noblesse oblige is the only necessary guide. They, however, overlook the not inconsiderable borderland between illegal acts and those little niceties of personal conduct that are matters of taste, wherein tradition alone can determine what is right and what is wrong. In the absence of such traditions, some lawyers may be guilty of conduct which to others of finer sensibilities may appear unseemly. Tradition can elevate the entire bar to the higher standard. Discussions such as indulged in by Mr. Jessup, based largely on the American Bar Association's Canons of Ethics and the answers given by the Committee on Professional Ethics of the New York County Lawyers' Association to actual questions propounded to it, serve to build up a body of tradition that is definite, ascertainable and, what is most important, capable of being transmitted to students preparing for admission to the bar.

Mr. Jessup calls upon his readers to assume a most exalted conception of their duties as privileged members of a noble profession, but he does not indulge in "counsels of perfection." Himself a practicing lawyer, Mr. Jessup's advice is essentially practical. He is not above suggesting subtle ways of favorably impressing clients.

If your client looks upon you as a duffer at your game, be it golf, billiards, auction, chess or even checkers, he may look upon you as a lawyer as little better than he is. Choose a recreation that demands skill and judgment, and that tests and demonstrates your self-control. E. g., a lawyer who can beat his client by a masterly niblick shot out of an apparently unplayable lie probably has the qualities that will pull that client's case out of the fire in a hotly contested trial.

Such bits are only incidental. The thesis of the book is that the law is a profession—not a business; that the "lawyer's conduct should conform with ideals which are measured by higher standards than mere minimum requirements." And with the publication of Mr. Jessup's study there can be no excuse for ignorance of these "higher standards."

HERBERT W. HORWILL.

Travels of a Modern Marco Polo

LONDON.

NOT all present-day explorers take with them a film cameraman, a typist secretary, a press representative and a group of museum experts. No such equipment accompanied General George Pereira when he set out in 1921 on the twenty months' journey described in "Peking to Lhasa." Since 1848 no one had been allowed by the Tibetan Government to enter their country from the side of China. Pereira determined to break this tabu, and he did, though he had many handicaps to overcome. He was approaching 60 years of age, he had done nearly forty years' hard soldiering, he was physically not strong and he was partially lame. Of the 6,300¼ miles of his journey—note the scientific precision of the skilled geographer—he tramped 3,527¼ on foot, often along terrible roads and sometimes over mountain passes 15,000 feet high. There were times when he had to spend twelve hours in bed to get warm, and when it required arduous ribbing to keep any life in his frozen feet. Pereira's passion for travel ultimately wore him to death. No sooner had he successfully met the Tibetan challenge than he crossed the Chinese Empire from Burma to Shanghai. He was engaged on a further traverse of it by a different route when he died of gastric ulcer in October, 1923, at Kanze, on the Yalung River. The modest simplicity of this modern Marco Polo's record of his experiences are scarcely less notable than the evidence of his rare courage and indomitable will.

ANOTHER plucky achievement is chronicled in Jack McLaren's "My Crowded Solitude." (reviewed in THE TIMES BOOK REVIEW of March 28). A twentieth-century nomad discovers near Cape York, on the northern extremity of Australia, a desolate and uncultivated region that seems to him suitable for the growing of cocoanuts. He settles there, at considerable risk from a tribe of very primitive natives, and starts an attempt at a plantation. He does the whole work alone, except for such help in clearing and digging as he can occasionally get from those aborigines whose goodwill he has won by his tact and sympathy. He has to endure sweltering heat, and the torrential rains strike the earth with such force as to bounce up to the height of his knees. The very fertility of the soil sometimes makes his work the harder, for the entangling vines and choking bushes thrust up again almost as soon as they are cut away. But by the end of eight years he has transformed a wild jungle into an ordered and fruitful garden. The volume just published is of interest not only for its story of this unusual colonising but for the new light it casts on the ideas and practices of the Australian aborigines.

J. L. Garvin's biography of Joseph Chamberlain is likely to be ready by the Fall. Lord Haldane's first love was not law or politics but philosophy, and he is returning to it in a treatise on "Human Experience: a Study of its Structure." Sir William Beveridge is believed to have had the principal hand in the writing of the Coal Commission's report, the best seller of the season. According to The Times Literary Supplement, Richard Washburn Child's "A Diplomat Looks at Europe" (reviewed in section 8 of the Sunday TIMES of Nov. 22, 1925) is hampered by "an execrable style, a habit of repetition and an over-good conceit of himself." There is now on its way to England a bundle of newly discovered back numbers of the Lahore Civil and Military Gazette covering a good part of the period when Rudyard Kipling was on its staff, and containing many articles and verses of his that have never been republished.

THE Incredulity of Father Brown" is to be the title of a book in which G. K. Chesterton will review the personality of one of the most interesting and mysterious of his characters. Hugh Walpole wonders why no one republishes some of the famous novels of twenty or thirty years ago that are nowadays forgotten. He suggests that the experiment might be tried with the best work of John Oliver Hobbes, R. Murray Gilchrist and Henry Harland. H. Ashton-Wolfe, whose new book, "The Underworld," is attracting much attention, is an interpreter to the Courts of Justice. He speaks five European languages as easily and fluently as English, and has more than a reading acquaintance with Arabic and the Scandinavian group. Arthur Waley has prefixed to the second of the six volumes of his translation of "The Tale of Genji" (published in America by Houghton Mifflin Co.) an introduction dealing with fiction in Japan before Murasaki and with her methods as a novelist. "The more perfect the style of written prose," says John Buchan, "the less is it adapted for recitation." Messrs. Ernest Benn are so encouraged by the sale of their books of reprinted poetry that they are starting a series of "Shilling Books of New Poetry" devoted to work not previously published. Professor Allardyce Nicoll, who is editing for the Golden Cockerel Press a new series of Elizabethan and Caroline dramatists, is also engaged on a dictionary of the drama. Hugh I'Anson Fausset has completed a critical study of Coleridge. Professor J. S. Phillimore of Glasgow University has edited a collection of "The Hundred Best Latin Hymns," ranging from the fourth to the fourteenth century. Some of the most charming of them have hitherto been unknown except to specialists. Canon A. C. Deane is writing a new life of Cranmer, in which special attention will be given to the record of his Cambridge days. Dr. Percy H. Winfield dedicates to "My Friends in the Law School of Harvard University" his book on "The Chief Sources of English Legal History," which is an expansion of a course of lectures he delivered there in 1923.

life. Nevertheless, he says, it is only quite recently that the subject has begun to receive anything like its due share of study and investigation. "Recreational work," he points out, "has not kept pace with the other fields" of educational methods and child welfare wherein the attempt is being made to apply scientific principles. It is this lack that Mr. Furfey modestly attempts to supply, endeavoring throughout his book to show how recreational methods and the recreational needs of the pre-adolescent boy can be studied in the scientific way. He limits his survey of the subject to those few years that intervene between early childhood and adolescence, the time from about ten to about fourteen, the period of the "gang age."

In his study of those years and their characteristics, dangers and importance, Mr. Furfey, who is an instructor in sociology in the Catholic University of America, makes use of the principles that have been established in psychology—although here he is conservative and does not indulge in rash conclusiveness—of the methods of social case work and of the modern principles of investigation. He studied intensively in his preparation for the writing of the book the members of a Boy Scout troop and of a younger group, his purpose being to find out all he could about the influences that modify the character of the boy, especially those at work, during his play hours, and to deduce methods by which the recreational worker can take account of them. Among the subjects with which he deals are the influence of home, the elements of conduct, the dull child and the gifted child, the gang and the reasons for its influence, the relation of the boy to the community.

The book is a thoroughgoing study of the limited period with which it deals made by scientific methods and in accordance with scientific principles, but it is put into non-technical language, and will doubtless be of much value to parents, teachers and social workers. Each chapter has suggestions for further reading and a bibliography filling twenty-odd pages shows how extensive has been the author's investigation.

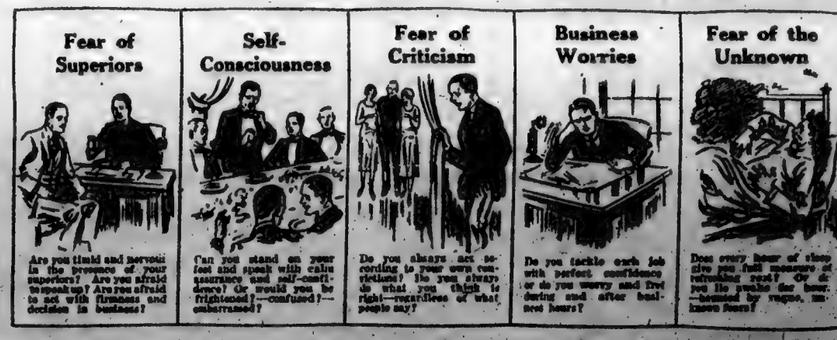
treated with cold, dispassionate, intellectual criticism. A nice balance had to be maintained—and Mr. Sherman keeps that balance nicely.

I call this [he writes] the best form of a war memorial because it is intimately personal and holds us in lively remembrance of the young lives that are gone. It does not allow the mind to relax and rove among the grandiose conceptions of military glory and embattled nations and warring machines and angels and horsemen of the Apocalypse, but keeps it fixed upon the spirited, lovable, gentlemanly boys from Groton and St. Paul's and the Roxbury Latin School, with a Harvard finishing, who, so far as Harvard is concerned, seemed necessary for conducting the most dangerous parts of the dirty and bloody business of bringing peace on earth and good-will to men by the sword.

And humanity and nice balance will be found in whatever "impression" the reader turns to, with sharply definite sentences, such as, of D. H. Lawrence, "He is coming to the conclusion that—for men, at any rate—passional surrender is not the greatest thing in the world"; or of Floyd Dell, "He is a play-boy like John Synge's hero, so deeply enveloped in his personal dream of felicity that he scarcely notices his collisions with a sordid reality"; or of Oscar Wilde, "His major life effort was separating art from morality, in which he failed deplorably." And there will also be found wit without malice, firmness without severity, and uprightness that is not asceticism. America has not yet produced a truly great critic, and probably never will produce a truly great critic until there is a more considerable body of home-made literature approaching greatness than is the case today. But of those Americans now engaged in critical pursuits Stuart Sherman is surely among the leaders.



Which of These 5 FEARS Is Holding YOU Back?

Fear and worry kill more people than all the wars combined. Fear brings on more sickness than disease germs. Fear is responsible for more failures than any other cause in the world. Fear is a great, evil force. But Basil King has discovered a greater force—a force which gives men and women boundless courage—a giant force which DESTROYS FEAR FOREVER!

FEAR is a disease—a serious disease—just as serious as any disease that requires the care of a physician.

Millions of men and women are victims of fear. Yet, not one person in a thousand makes any attempt to remedy this condition. Not one person in a thousand realizes that fear—like any other disease—actually can be remedied!

Most men and women go through life enjoying only a small fraction of the happiness that is rightfully theirs. They don't know what it is to be really happy—to be free from all fear—to be free from all worry. "It's natural for me to worry," some people say, "and I can't help it."

Are you one of these people? Do you keep worrying over little things. Do you worry about mistakes, indiscretions, things left undone? Do you fear what people say? Do you worry about business?—about money matters—about social success?

Perhaps you are self-conscious and awkward in company with others. Perhaps you are unable to mix easily with folks. Perhaps you are timid in business—afraid of your superiors—afraid to speak up—afraid of the sound of your own voice.

Perhaps your fears are more serious. Perhaps you lie awake nights—worrying. Do you fear ill-health? Do you dread the future? Are you superstitious? Do you fear vague, unknown things? Are you ever afraid in the dark? Do you "see things" after you turn out the light at bedtime? Does your heart beat with terror as you try to drive away the fears that come and haunt you in the night? Take heed! Fears like these are often forerunners of complete nervous breakdown!

A revealing experiment was once tried on a cat. The cat was placed under the X-Ray. It was fed until it was purring happily. Then a fierce dog was brought into the room. The cat became terror-stricken. The X-Ray plates of the cat's stomach at this point showed that its organs were almost tied into a knot. The entire digestive system had been upset by fear.

This is exactly what fear and worry do to your own organs. This is how fear upsets you, runs you down, makes you an easy victim of ill-health.

Fear lurks in almost every breast. And yet it is ABSOLUTELY UNNECESSARY. It can be destroyed—quickly—easily—forever! It doesn't matter what your fears are—it doesn't matter how many fears you have. It doesn't matter how deep-rooted your fears are. These fears can be ABSOLUTELY BANISHED—almost overnight!

How Basil King Banished Fear

Basil King was once afraid. He was once a helpless victim of all the fears and all the worries that make millions of men and women miserable. He was self-conscious, timid, afraid of others, afraid of the future, afraid of death. He worried about business—about money matters.

Basil King foresaw the dire consequences of fear. He saw it was undermining his health, ruining his chances of success, making his life a Hell on earth. He saw that he must conquer fear or fear would conquer him. And so he began his search for a scientific method of banishing fear. For many long months he made experiments on himself.

Then, at last, like a flash of lightning in the darkness, the answer dawned upon him. Almost overnight there occurred an amazing change in his life. Almost overnight he broke away from the shackles that were holding him down. He was free—free forever from that insidious monster that had so nearly wrecked his whole career. For in his conquest of fear he had discovered a new and mighty force—a force which actually destroyed Fear forever!

A Giant Force Which Destroys Fear

What is this great force which banishes fear? What is this great force which is so subtle—so uplifting—so irresistible? You scarcely notice its effect at first. It steals over you like an enchantment. Gradually your vision clears. Your mind awakens. Your perception quickens. Your fears fade away almost magically. Your worries are completely forgotten. You rise to a higher plane. You begin to see things as they really are. You begin to see why you were afraid and how foolish your fears were. You begin to understand life as you never understood it before.

Where can this astounding force be found? Who has it? How can any man or woman develop it? The answers to these questions is told simply and clearly in Basil King's new book, "The Conquest of Fear." It is Basil King's own story of his experiences with Fear and how he overcame his fear. As you read this book, you will be amazed. This giant force which destroys fear is so simple that anyone can understand how it works and why it works. The method revealed is so reasonable—so sensible—so logical in every way that the moment you learn about it you will know instinctively that it works. You will realize instantly that your worries and fears are needless! Forever!

"The Conquest of Fear," By Basil King

You must see this amazing book—examine it—read it—learn its great secret. SOME ESSAYISTS

A BOOK OF MODERN ESSAYS. Edited by Bruce Weiker McCullough and Edwin Berry Burgum. 431 pp. New York: Charles Scribner's Sons. $2.

SUCCESSIVE volumes of selected contemporary essays this Spring seem to indicate that public interest has again opened its arms to this kind of literary production, after having left it for so many years to keep company with Cinderella. This new volume of selections is very much of our own time, even to the slight flavor of sophistication discernible in many of its articles. Both English and American essayists are represented, thirty-one of them altogether, in as many contributions. There are rather more American than English authors, and they are so variously representative of American life and letters as to include President Coolidge—this selection being his address last June at the Norwegian Centennial Celebration; Willa Cather, Charles Merz, Frank Aydelotte, Edwin Grant Conklin, Max Eastman, Stuart P. Sherman. The English writers range from Max Beerbohm to Maurice Hewlett, from John Galsworthy to Hilaire Belloc, from Arnold Bennett to Sir A. T. Quiller-Couch. The themes are as varied as these names indicate they would be. The editors of the volume have provided an excellent feature in the little introduction which ushers in each essay with some really worthwhile discussion of its writer. They ignore wholly the dusty, cast-iron, formal sentences which usually serve that purpose, and instead of inconsequent details about an author's life, tell something about what he has done and in what spirit and toward what purpose he writes.

CHICAGO MEMORIES

GROWING UP WITH A CITY. By Louise de Koven Bowen. Illustrated. 226 pages. New York: The Macmillan Company. $2.50.

IT needs such a chronicle as this modest book of memoirs by Mrs. Bowen, every now and then, to bring home to a strenuous people some realization of its achievements. Dramatic, startling, are the only adjectives that adequately express that achievement in most parts of the country, and they are especially applicable to the city with which Mrs. Bowen has "grown up"—Chicago. Her grandfather, who won wealth as a commission merchant as the little frontier settlement grew into a town and then into a city, went there with his young bride in 1835. They had to live, for protection from the Indians, in Fort Dearborn, within whose stockade Mrs. Bowen's mother was born. She herself was a girl in her first teens when the great fire swept the ambitious little city and left hardly more than a mass of ruins, and she has been a part of its rebirth and of its marvelous growth in the half century since then. But she has many memories of her childhood that go back to the years before the fire, among them of President Lincoln and his family, who always stopped in Chicago at a little hotel near her home. She and little Tad Lincoln were great friends and played much together, sometimes in her home and sometimes in the hotel rooms.

Mrs. Bowen has been for fifty years an important figure in the social welfare work of Chicago, and her memories of her childhood show how early in life this bent made its appearance and how strong must have been the inward urge of compassion that set her feet so firmly in that path. The story of the little things she began doing before she had reached her teens and of how rapidly after that her interests and her work developed along social welfare lines, is very interesting merely as a psychological study, in addition to its value as a record and picturesque account of the early days of many of Chicago's famous welfare organizations. She was one of the organizers, or early associated in the work, of such beneficent movements as the Kitchen Garden Association, the Visiting Nurse Association, the activities of Hull House, the Juvenile Court, the Juvenile Protective Association, the Woman's City Club. The story of how some of these were born and of her first connection with others makes an interesting contribution to the history of American philanthropy. As she tells it, the story is one full of many human interests and is diversified with anecdotes, amusing, pathetic, tragic. One follows, also, with constant interest the development, implicate in the tale, of the shy but eager young girl from her first little philanthropies and her disappointing graduation day from Dearborn Academy, when her father forbade her sitting on the platform with the chosen essayists of her class and reading her production because he considered it an unwomanly proceeding—to her busy and successful prime as official of many welfare societies, chief force in many movements, presiding officer at large and important gatherings, delegate to conventions of international consequence.

The book tells a stirring life story, the kind of woman's life story that would not have been possible in any previous time in the world's history, even if Mrs. Bowen tells it so modestly that one has to read between the lines to understand the real significance of many of its features. But perhaps the most striking phase of the memoirs is that in which one glimpses, first, the beginnings of Chicago and then the Chicago of today and remembers that they are both compassed within a single lifetime.

CINDERELLA OF CITIES

THE LURE OF VIENNA. By Alice M. Williamson. Illustrated. 189 pp. New York: Doubleday, Page & Co. $2.

MRS. WILLIAMSON, she of the long list of travel novels written in collaboration with her husband, has turned her attention more since his death to the writing of attractive books descriptive of the beauties and interests of famous places. This new one on Vienna was preceded a year or so ago by "The Lure of Monte Carlo." She is a lover of Vienna and has known it well for many years, both in its pre-war pride and glory and in the misfortunes that have since befallen it. But she maintains that the city is more charming now than it ever was before, calls it the Cinderella of cities and describes it thus:

> She has darned her torn silk stockings so that, when the Prince comes to fit on the glass slipper, the darns may look like lovely lace. She has embroidered the patches on her faded dress so that they have a flower-like beauty of their own. Brave Cinderella, gay in sadness, never losing her sense of humor, never so winning, so human, so innately sweet as with her marble-white toes showing through such holes as she hasn't yet had time to mend! She is making the very best of herself, and she can offer of the best to those who come to her now. She offers the best cheaply, too, though a rather cruel and stupid rumor has gone round to the contrary.

With quotations of prices and accounts of what one gets for them Mrs. Williamson shows that Vienna can still offer the tourist beauty, variety, interest, entertainment, hospitality—shops that hold their own with Paris, hotels, theatres, cabarets, all equal to those of any other European capital and all at much less cost—while the city's parks and streets and its surrounding country are as beautiful as ever. Her book takes the reader, with much lively chatter, with many anecdotes and stories of the aristocracy and the life of the past, with tenderest compassion for present misfortunes, with a constant eye for beauty of every sort, with a multitude of brief and spirited and colorful descriptions of scenes and incidents, on a leisurely journey round about the city, through its streets, to its famous places, to the university, the theatre, the opera. Everywhere she calls attention to the charm of the people, their humor and gayety, and by the time one comes to the end of her book one not only knows that for Mrs. Williamson Vienna has an incomparable lure but also begins to feel it one's self.

PREADOLESCENT BOYS

THE GANG AGE. A Study of the Preadolescent Boy and his Recreational Needs. By Paul Hanley Furfey. 180 pp. $2.

MR. FURFEY'S book is built on the fundamental conviction of the importance in character formation of the time a boy spends in play. "Only at play," he says, "is the child really himself." And as the average boy spends eight of nine hours a day in play and other leisure-time activities, it is evident, he insists, that this relatively large amount of time, with its more potent influences in the formation and shaping of character, must be of supreme importance in the boy's

What has Christianity accomplished?

Where does it stand today?
What does it promise?

The world is asking these momentous questions. Men and women, in their thoughtful hours, are demanding something more than mere opinions and controversy. And now, in answer to the challenge, comes this inspiring work, from some of the most distinguished leaders of the world—

An Outline of CHRISTIANITY
THE STORY OF OUR CIVILIZATION

NOW You Can Know
How did Christianity begin its work?
Did Christianity give us Democracy?
Is Christianity a World Religion?
What enabled it to survive persecution?
How did Christianity remake the Roman world?
What happened to Civilization after the fall of Rome?
What saved Christianity in the Dark Ages?
Who pushed the Christian Frontier to the Baltic?
What was the Civilization of the Middle Ages?
How did Feudalism lead to the Reformation?
What was the Roman Catholic answer to the Reformation?
How did the Reformation affect the State?
How did Protestantism stimulate Colonization?
Is Law affected by Christianity?
Can Christianity eliminate International Conflicts?
Has Christianity aided the "Backward" peoples?
What is Christianity doing for women?
Has Christianity made children happier?
Where does the Non-Churchman stand?
Are Science and Christianity antagonistic?
Can Philosophy take the place of Christianity?

Nothing approaching this in scope and purpose has ever been attempted before. Leaders of thought, of all races and creeds, have joined forces to interpret fully every phase of Christianity. Celebrated thinkers,—Catholic, Protestant, Jew, Moslem and Hindu,—historians, economists, sociologists, scientists, lawyers, educators, humanitarians, have collaborated and have found themselves in full accord. The result is an illuminating, engrossing story, free from conflict and confusion, complete in every detail.

No matter with what church or denomination you may be affiliated, or whether you have conceived your own religion, or have learned to do without one—this great work will bring to you inspiration, courage, faith and hope.

AN OUTLINE OF CHRISTIANITY stands as a monument to this age. No description can do it full justice. It is a work which must find its way into every home. To be in tune with life itself you should have these matchless volumes to read and re-read.

What Those Who Know Say of This Work

Unfinished Tolstoy Mss.

In "How Love Perishes," a story written two years later and also included in the volume under review, we find already Tolstoy's style and methods as we know them from his later—and more perfect—works. This story is interesting in that it contains in the germ the motives from which developed with time "Anna Karenina," "The Resurrection" and "The Kreutzer Sonata." The best pieces in the volume are the charming, sunny and happy "Children's Tale" dedicated by the author to his niece, the little Varieaka, the powerful, meaningful "Dream" and the unfinished "Oasis." One recognises in them once more Tolstoy's great naturalism, so consonant and so akin to Nature and to the mysterious processes of organic growth, so manly in its simplicity, so deeply philosophic in its unsophisticated beauty. And one feels once more that Tolstoy's real—and immortal—philosophy is incarnated in these living imaginative forms, but not in his deliberately "philosophic" writings with their helpless and tiresome theorizing.

Such are, briefly told, the new and old facets of Tolstoy—the writer and the thinker shown to us in this posthumous apparition of his. To conclude we will mention briefly "The Porcelain Doll," a charming and altogether unexpected fantastic tale of the great artist which has not been included in the volume just reviewed (it has been published in a Russian periodical issued in Berlin). It is a letter written by Tolstoy in 1863, a half a year after his marriage, to his sister-in-law, Tatyana Andreyevna Bers (Kuzminskaya), in which he tells her how his young wife has suddenly transformed herself into a "porcelain doll," into a regular "porcelain doll with cold, bare shoulders and neck, with arms folded on the chest and made of one piece with the rest of the body, with undulating hair painted black on which the pain has been scratched off here and there." He tells that bit of nonsens with a charming composure and accuracy of details. Some of the super-wise Russian commentators have already expressed the opinion that this is not a joke. They see in the tale an allusion to misunderstandings which appeared later between the writer and the Countess. The reviewer, however, believes that they might find a better subject for their heavy seriousness. It is just a charming trifle written by a man who was then beside himself with happiness, who was "the happiest of husbands," and who probably made his sister-in-law laugh to tears over this fantastic fooling. For at that time Tolstoy did not cobble shoes, did not preach his "do-nots," did not talk of goodness. He just spread merriment and happiness all around him.

Mexican-American Relations

"threw up his hands in despair and declared that he had not been able to reach a satisfactory settlement on a single controverted point." Finally Diaz was recognized, although President Hayes "had gained no concessions on the issues of forced loans, the free zone, the rights to purchase real estate on the frontier, indemnity for alleged insults and injuries to American citizens, or protection of American life and property."

The author notes the sinister fact that Wilson's championship of popular and legitimate government in Mexico, while it perhaps accorded with the aspirations of the Mexican people, made no impression upon their political leaders, because "they seemed to be more interested in power and plunder than in the Mexican people or the security of the nation." Professor Rippy in his summing up admits that future relations between a "very disorderly and bankrupt nation" like Mexico and the United States, whose people are "very active, enterprising and aggressive," must be doubtful. On both sides of the border the demagogues have to be reckoned with. He fears that Mexico "is doomed to a vicious cycle of revolutions, chaos and dictatorships." Coercion by the United States may become necessary, but he hopes not.

Only a Butterfly!

Only a butterfly, her wings broken! A grisette the talk of Paris, who knew the height of wealth and the abyss of poverty; on whom men had once showered gold and jewels; once a peacock-queen whose gowns displayed unheard of splendor reigning over lavish orgies, but now a Magdalene purified, uplifted, and regenerated by a pure and honest love; the life of the fast set scorned and luxury surrendered for joy of true happiness; then a misunderstanding, a heart broken by a single word, love without hope and then despair; months of hiding in a mean room up a slender staircase of an infamous old house in the somber haunts of the unlawful; a brazier of burning charcoal, and the girl recovering from an unsuccessful attempt at suicide lies on the floor in a stupor, dazed but smiling. Trompe-la-Mort, the master criminal twice escaped from the galleys and the terror of the Paris secret police, disguised as a priest, enters—and a story in these fascinating volumes begins. It is a strange story of one of the many mysterious undercurrents of life in Paris, but it is only one of over a score of infinite variety that are told in the famous

Scenes De La Vie Parisienne

The only version which contains all that is in the original. The Sun, N. Y. For the First Time Completely Translated into English The only English translation that is complete. The Bookman, N. Y.

THE SCENES OF PARISIAN LIFE introduce us to a bewildering world pulsating with life, that is at once a terror and a delight. In it the conflict for wealth and power, the quest for love and the pursuit of pleasure, the triumphs and the defeats of life, and every aspect of joy, sorrow, goodness, and sin are found. It is a world of poverty and luxury, of tragedy awful and terrific, of pathos affecting and pathetic, and of comedy vivacious and sparkling; a world where we meet artists and apaches, scholars and rakes, butterflies and honest housewives, bourgeois and aristocrats, honest folk and déclassés of all sorts, in happy homes and sinister places.

The great genius shows us a true picture of the life of Paris, extenuating nothing, hiding nothing, setting forth all with minute and realistic fidelity to truth. No other writer has sounded so profoundly the depths of the mysteries of human nature. He painted men and women as he found them and with a strength and fearlessness unequalled by any other author. He has been called the master of masters in the analysis of life, the anatomist of passion, and the vivisector of the human heart. He dares to penetrate into the arcana of emotions almost too terrible for literature to touch, but he has done so as a serious observer of human society.

Balzac's breadth, depth, strength, and fearlessness. The Atlantic Monthly.
A translation that is complete, worthy of a great classic and stylistically artistic. The Churchman.
For the first time we really have Balzac in English. You have made a great contribution to American literary scholarship. F. W. HAMILTON, D.D., President, Tufts College, Boston.
A monumental undertaking admirably executed. Public Ledger, Philadelphia.
Balzac was more than moral. He was religious. The Methodist Review.

If, as you sit in your arm-chair, you could invite to your side this man who knew Paris better than any other who has ever lived, and could listen by the hour to his enchanting tales of the fascinating life there, you would, of course, do so. Many others have.

Well, do not think that this is a pleasure that only the rich may enjoy. He is at your command now, for you may have his wonderful tales, printed from the same plates as the original edition published at $165.00, for less than the cost of ordinary novels. Not to know Balzac's novels is to confess oneself out of touch with the world. Readers who take up one of his stories for the first time are surprised to find how infinitely superior they are to anything they have ever read. Do you know them? PIG IRON to visit New York, he called on Barnum, met Lavinia and immediately fell violently in love with her. He pleaded with Barnum to say a good word for him with the little lady. Barnum refused and said he must do his own courting. He also warned him that he had a rival in Commodore Nutt.

"The British Barnum"

Thumb proposed, after a whirlwind courtship, and was accepted.

The Countess Magri told me that the Commodore's disappointment when she married Tom Thumb was so great that he took to drink and dissipation in various ways, so that when he proposed to Minnie she refused him.

Slowly the reader witnesses the evolution of "C. B." from a sawdust specialist into an impresario. The "smell of the sawdust" which had been born in him was enhanced by a knack of recognizing and exploiting undiscovered genius, of guessing what the public wanted and giving it to them. The guinea stamp steals subtly into the narrative, to the detriment of a genuine artistic instinct to do well whatever he set out to do. Rarely has any profession produced a more intelligent appraiser of artistic merit and of show appeal. "The Better 'Ole," for example, was turned down by several managers before it got to Cochran "and was about as crude a play as ever gained the distinction of a West End production," but proved a gold mine. "The Miracle" originated in Cochran's brain on a railway journey, with a vision of Olympia as a Gothic cathedral. Other ventures seemed equally far-fetched, but were equally successful, if not from a box-office at least from an artistic point of view.

Perhaps the final estimate of Cochran's limitations is that of his friend, James Agate, "Spectacle by itself is not worth a row of stalls, and this C. B. has never realized."

But the final estimate of Cochran's abilities is that shown in the book itself. Courteous, honorable, sanguine, he neither blames others for his mishaps — although William Brady's ill-considered step of withdrawing his name from the promotion of the Dempsey-Carpentier match at a time when Cochran was suffering from a breakdown, had fatal effect on his fortunes—nor does he lose faith in himself. Hardly had the news of his failure got out but he was, with the support of his loyal friends, engaged in new enterprises, of which this book is, let one hope, not the most successful.

As he progresses in his writings of the Floors, undoubtedly Mr. Gross will develop more individualized characters for his marionettes—he has already begun to make them individual in the things that happen to them—and he will be required to publish them less and less with synthetic jokes, now not too infrequently dragged in by the heels. His work, as it is now, is one of the most distinctive and promising contributions to American humor of recent years—but its elements are entirely too good to make it permissible for Mr. Gross to leave them dimmed by the easy tarnish he is giving them.

The illustrations for "Nize Baby," also from Mr. Gross's pen, are altogether delightful. They catch completely the spirit of his prose, and—perhaps as a lesson to it—they are fresh, untraditional and easy.

and a booster and the most popular man in town. He holds the Ford agency, owns property and makes $6,000 a year. In his admiration for three men—Lincoln, Roosevelt and Henry Ford—may be found his point of view. He is a hustler, opinionated, but with a great deal of horse sense. He has two grown children, Opal and Ross, and is still in love with his wife. He wears a big black hat, smokes cigars and has little traffic or use for the polite world of social affairs.

In Mrs. Peters there is a stronger social instinct. She belonged to the Tuesday Afternoon Club. At 47 she had no desire to settle down. She was eager that both her children should marry well. When oil was discovered on some land of Pike's and the family came to have an income of $1,000 a day it was Mrs. Peters who decided that the whole family just had to see Paris. Clearwater was all right, but the Peterses should have all the advantages of the rest of the world as well.

Shortly after the oil strike the Peterses left for New York. Here began the struggle between Mrs. Peters and Mr. Peters to have Pike adopt a more formal dress and mend his abrupt manners. Upon this issue alone many facetious and farcical scenes ensue. It is very much in the spirit of a modern "Innocents Abroad." The reactions of the Peterses to the ways and manners of the French are interesting. This episode has been worked numerous times; yet there is a freshness in this new recording. Doubtless much of it comes from the character of Pike. Though set in his ways, he is shrewd and observing. As the Peterses settle down to live after hectic sightseeing he visualizes France with cold calculation. When Mrs. Peters moves him to a rented chateau he is unmoved by its age and annoyed at its discomforts:

> Think of settin' around with your teeth chattering and trying to keep warm with that quart cup out there in the hall and a red brick under your feet! I'll bet there's never been a baron in this place who ever lived to see his grandchildren. If this is a sample of the way the big bugs of France live, why, they don't know what living is! In comparison to a rich man's home in Oklahoma one of these chateaux is about as comfortable as a union depot.

Pike in time, though, grew to find many things he liked. Meanwhile Mrs. Pike Peters had been climbing into the Franco-Anglo-American society. Also she met a marquis whom she pursued for Opal. The Marquis, in need of money, decided that Opal was quite attractive. They became engaged. His lawyer called on Pike and suggested a dot of $300,000, and Pike nearly threw him out. It was a great blow to Mrs. Peters's ambitions. Pike sized it up this way:

> Happosin' Opal took Little Lord Fauntleroy, do you know what would happen? In the first place, she'd probably live over here and about once in two years you'd see her. Even if you took a notion to live here she'd be absorbed by his family and you'd be left lookin' out the window. French families are as tight as a new rain barrel. They'd all be agin her and she couldn't edge in a word without them comin' down on her. They look at marriage different in France from what we do—a woman hasn't any liberty in France.

It is easily observed that Pike is the old style democrat. When the rest of his family go native to France he stands pat. Royalty is nothing to him because it is of the nobility. Quality has to be proved, not tagged. Paris and France gave Pike many new ideas. He returned a different man to Clearwater. It was a broadening experience and pleasure. And the trip with Pike makes merry reading.

MURDER AND MYSTERY

THE SLEEPING CAT. By Isabel Ostrander. 279 pp. New York: Robert M. McBride & Co. $2.

ISABEL OSTRANDER is in her grave, but her stories go marching on. They always marched—with the vigorous plotting of an ingenious mind. Mrs. Ostrander is understood to have left several unpublished novels behind her, being a prolific worker, and this undoubtedly is one of them. It is typical of her mystery and detective stories, and in that field few craftsmen excelled her competence.

"The Sleeping Cat" is a tale for a long night's reading, a puzzle to be solved, a guessing game among the numerous contradictory clues to a murder. The victim of this murder is a beautiful woman who has lived much in Europe and who is slain brutally while visiting a friend of her fashionable school days. The scene of the story is a small town in up-State New York. The time is this post-war nerve-jangled era. The dramatis personae are what is customarily known as society people.

As for the solution of the murder, there are no less than seven persons in the group surrounding the victim upon whom suspicion might fall because of their relations to her or each other. Besides these, there is the possibility of murder by some one emerging from her past, outside the village group.

The mystery is solved by one Daniel Ryder, veteran of the Army Intelligence Service during the war, and a special Commissioner of the New York police whenever a particularly baffling crime occurs to challenge his interest in deductive reasoning. Of course, there is the local chief of police on the trail of the slayer, too, because in such a story there have to be mistaken theories to contrast with the hard, cold logic of the master detective. There is also in this story the stock opal ring, with its message of foreboding, worn by the victim, and given to her, she confides nervously, by no less a mystery than a ghost.

The characters in the story represent possible motives for the killing. Is the victim's death a case of murder for revenge? For financial gain? For jealousy? For what reason, and by whom? Suspicion almost from the start falls upon a former Major in the A. E. F., who is revealed to have known the woman in the war. His mind is balanced precariously between sanity and lunacy because of his injuries. Shortly before the crime he is seen quarreling violently with the woman who is doomed.

The woman's hostess is also under suspicion. She has the motive of a woman's rage at learning that her husband's affections have left her to centre upon her guest. There are two servants, a stolid European peasant of almost superhuman strength, and her invalid son. There is plenty of reason why either of them might have strangled the wonderful "Tiger Lily," whose supreme misfortune it was to arouse men's love. The man who loved her last is himself to be watched for possible motive. Nobody has an alibi.

The story, of course, is a game of tossing suspicion back and forth between the characters. This is a performance in which Mrs. Ostrander was adept. The "Sleeping Cat" is up to her standard.

A SCIENTIFIC DETECTIVE

THE PUZZLE LOCK. By A. Austin Freeman. 327 pp. New York: Dodd, Mead & Co. $2.

DR. THORNDYKE, who is the central figure in this collection of short mystery stories, is nominally a medico-legal expert rather than a detective, but he has been so successful in solving mysteries that he is often consulted by the police in cases that have no medico-legal aspect whatever. Such a case is the one recorded in the first tale, "The Puzzle Lock." So far as the police know, the only crime involved is burglary, and it is the mysterious disappearance of one of the suspects that leads the police to bring their problem to Dr. Thorndyke. The latter soon finds that there is more in the case than appears on the surface and that to get at the heart of the mystery it is necessary first to solve the combination of a most intricate "puzzle lock," which he does by digging out the meaning of an unusually ingenious cryptogram.

Dr. Thorndyke's methods are very similar to those of Conan Doyle's Sherlock Holmes. Like the latter, Thorndyke uses the inductive method and finds clues in such apparently insignificant trifles as grains of sand or dust, chalk marks, scales from a butterfly's wings and the like. His remarkable powers of observation and his vast store of knowledge of all sorts of things make it possible for him to forge from such frail links an unbreakable chain of evidence.

Like Sherlock Holmes, Dr. Thorndyke also has his satellite and chronicler, his Dr. Watson, only his name happens to be Dr. Jardine. In some of the tales Jardine appears as a pupil or partner of Dr. Thorndyke, while in others he is an independent practitioner. At all times he resembles Dr. Watson in having unbounded admiration for his hero and in being just stupid enough in matters concerning detective work to make an admirable foil for his friend.

Mr. Freeman's plots are ingenious enough to bear comparison with the best of Conan Doyle and other masters of the mystery story, but he lacks the ability to make his characters live. After reading this entire volume of stories one has not the slightest idea what manner of man Dr. Thorndyke is. So far as the reader is concerned, he might as well be an automatic machine for the solving of mysteries. Not so with Conan Doyle's hero. Who that has ever read the Sherlock Holmes stories has failed to form a definite mental picture of the great detective? He had a distinct personality, shrewdly calculated to catch and hold the attention of the reader, and it was this as much as his uncanny ability to see what remained hidden from others that made him live in the memory of his readers.

Perhaps the comparison is unfair. Not every man can create a Sherlock Holmes. Mr. Freeman has produced a group of exceedingly clever mystery stories. The unraveling of the mysteries is managed in such a way that the reader is just far enough behind the detective in his reading of the clues to have a vague idea of the general direction in which they are leading but not close enough to anticipate the surprise that awaits him. The result is something several degrees better than the general run of mystery yarns. It is only the similarity of treatment that invites a disadvantageous comparison with the Conan Doyle stories. Mr. Freeman would do well to make that similarity less obvious and to give his detective a distinct individuality.

CLERICAL COMEDY

THE DEAN AND JECINORA. By Victor L. Whitechurch. 286 pp. New York: Duffield & Co.

THE dean of one of our cathedrals suggested to me that I should write a story about a dean," writes Mr. Whitechurch as a foreword to his third and latest novel, an amusing comedy revolving about the misadventures of a clergyman. "Hence the following pages."

One gets the feeling in reading the foreword, with its gentle "spoofing" of the clergy, and the novel with its good-humored ironies, that the author as well as his hero, the Dean of Frattenbury, is a good sport, and counted the mere writing of a novel no more than a slight favor which he was glad to extend at any time for the entertainment of a friend.

"The Dean and Jecinora" is cream puff fiction, to be downed at a gulp for the taste of pleasantry, rather than a volume to be chewed for substance. Mr. Whitechurch turned for his theme to that trusty old topic for farces and Sunday Schools:

Oh what a tangled web we weave
When first we practice to deceive.

With that as his approximate text Mr. Whitechurch was off in a burst of speed which he maintained to the story's climax.

Our hero, the Dean of Frattenbury, is a bookish, retiring chap, engrossed for years in studying the origins of ritual. He has a brother who looks amazingly like him who is a scapegrace, and who has a daughter of whom the Dean is solicitously fond. As the story opens, the brother has become involved with a swindler in London and the police are looking for him. The Dean is about to take a Mediterranean voyage for his health. The scapegoat's daughter comes to the deanery out of a job. The clergyman gives her temporary shelter. The erring brother appears as a frightened fugitive. He convinces the Dean that he is innocent of crime, and the Dean decides to help him escape from the police by letting him go on the Mediterranean voyage, posing as the Dean until out of England. The Dean, meanwhile, will drop out of sight in some secluded village. The brother escapes. The Dean goes

He can answer these. Can you?

Are children's questions as simple as they seem? Here below are just five of them. Suppose you give yourself twenty per cent for each one that you can answer correctly. What mark do you get? If your boy or girl asked you just one of these simple questions, are you sure you could offer a clear and interesting explanation, so your child would understand? The every-day facts of life that we take for granted are often the hardest to explain, when the children, who take nothing for granted, demand to be told "Why?" and "How?"

Why do we count in tens?

Why has water no taste?

What holds the stars up?

What makes knots in wood?

How does a bird know how to build its nest?

The BOOK OF KNOWLEDGE

begins with the child's own questions,

then leads on like a story from subject to subject

10,000 striking educational pictures

This great and original work captures the children's attention at once. It is written for them, in the easy words they know. The short talks, and the clear, charming style guide the young readers into new and fascinating paths of knowledge; yet, so gently are they led from the easy to the more difficult that they do not feel the gradual upward climb of learning. The Book of Knowledge teaches them to think for themselves, draws out their mental powers, stimulates their imagination.

Here, in the sixteen departments of The Book of Knowledge, is the whole world of knowledge—history, biography, art, science, literature, nature study, etc.—all the wisdom and wonder of the world that is important and interesting to children.

The diagrams and beautiful illustrations make the explanations doubly clear and vivid. Facts learned from these clever pictures can never be forgotten. This is visual education in its simplest, finest form.

You may have this free illustrated section from The Book of Knowledge by mailing this coupon to-day

You can give your boy or girl nothing finer than the gift of knowledge—the best equipment for success in grown-up years. Would you like to see for yourself just how the delightful conversational style and the educational pictures capture the child's mind, and make knowledge attractive? Write for our new descriptive booklet of sample pages. It will gladly be sent to you by return mail, without charge or obligation. The booklet contains a complete section, reprinted from The Book of Knowledge, also nearly a hundred of the pictures that teach, and additional information that will be interesting and helpful to the children.

TRAGEDY OF ARNOLD REVEALED

American Officer's Treachery to the Revolution Fully Disclosed in Dramatic Letters Found Among Papers of Clinton, the British Commander-in-Chief—New Mine of History Uncovered

Major John André.

Benedict Arnold.

Arnold and His Wife on the Streets of London.
Drawn by Howard Pyle. © The Century Company.

By RANDOLPH G. ADAMS,
Custodian William L. Clements Library of American History, University of Michigan.

THE private military records of the British Commander-in-Chief in the American Revolution have come to the United States. When it was announced some weeks ago that the papers of Sir Henry Clinton had been purchased for the W. L. Clements Library at the University of Michigan, the donor of that library and its librarian were deluged with letters from all over the United States. What news did these documents contain? What light do they throw on obscure corners and half-told stories of the Revolution?

The queries ranged from the serious to the trivial; they came from historical research scholars in the great universities and from dear old ladies who were trying to find out whether their ancestors' part in the Revolution would enable them to join some patriotic society. It will be years before all these questions are answered, because the papers are so numerous, and because many of them must be prepared with the utmost care before they can be read.

But even at this early date a few bits of news cannot help coming out—they fairly exude from the archives which are so rich in new stories about the winning of American independence.

THE treason of Benedict Arnold, with its tragic sequel, still remains one of the best-known acts of the Revolution. It is the one most frequently mentioned by orators and by writers in a search of a classical example of treachery. Yet America has had but half the story—the part that could be told from the American side. The tragedy involves the downfall of one of the bravest of American Generals; the death on the gibbet of one of the most lovable characters in the British Army and the ruin of a beautiful American woman.

The outline of the story is well known. Arnold was the dashing leader of the Americans in their victory over Burgoyne at Saratoga. His personal courage in that decisive conflict stands out in brilliant contrast beside the incompetence of the nominal American commander, General Gates, who reaped the credit for this triumph of American arms. Yet, despite his ability and accomplishments, Arnold was abominably treated by the petty politicians in the Continental Congress, who even thought of deposing Washington himself. The grievances Arnold suffered at the hands of the small men in Congress were very real. Washington was great enough to disregard his detractors; but Arnold was only human and yielded to his anger, his resentment, above all to his need for money.

Arnold Weds Peggy Shippen

When the British evacuated Philadelphia, in June of 1778, Washington appointed Arnold to command the garrison at that place. There he entered into the social whirl of a city used to gayety, and there he fell in love with Philadelphia's most charming débutante, Peggy Shippen. The marriage of this famous soldier and the darling of Philadelphia society was a great event. Visitors to Philadelphia who motor to Fairmount Park can still see the great mansion above the Schuylkill where Arnold took his bride and continued the round of dances and parties to which she had been accustomed.

Suddenly he was ordered to command the key to the American positions above New York, the fortress at West Point. Thither he went with his wife, and from that place a few months later, he fled after a futile attempt to betray it to the British commander, Sir Henry Clinton. He was discovered in the nick of time, and fled so precipitately that he was compelled to leave behind his wife and child—also the English officer, Major André, who had to pay the penalty Arnold deserved.

Negotiated With André

The Clinton papers bring to light, at last, the inside story of Arnold's treason. Hundreds of letters and copies of letters, many in cipher, many of them masked and others in invisible ink, were sent to and from Sir Henry Clinton's headquarters in New York. The task of conducting the British end of these negotiations fell to Major John André, Adjutant General at New York. He was one of the many British officers who had also fallen under the spell of Peggy Shippen's charms during the Winter in Philadelphia.

From André's papers it became clear that Arnold began his propositions at least fifteen months before the tragedy at West Point. As soon as he had been appointed to command at Philadelphia, Arnold, smarting under the injustice he had suffered at the hands of Congress, and fearful of the French alliance which Franklin had just arranged at Paris, proposed to Sir Henry Clinton to betray the American cause. Not only did he propose to change sides, but he proposed also to bring with him the means of ultimate British victory.

A critical examination of the sources of American history seems to be continually tearing the mask from our heroes of the past. An examination of André's papers in the Clinton collection serves only to blacken yet more the character of Benedict Arnold. We have the document in which, under the alias of "John

UNCHANGING CIRCUS EVER NEW

Age-Old Youth Lives on, Repeating Itself Even in Latest Innovations

Around and Around the Arena.

By H. I. BROCK

Do not be downhearted. The circus is the same. Madison Square Garden—the real one—with all its Moorish grace is all its masculine is same. Dust is come down from her tower, and is never found the least spirited way. The square that was here—and had a center on a whole generation of circuses—is abandoned.

Rise up in Fiftieth Street, where trolley cars used to be stabled, and traffic obstructed by their coming in and out, up there, whither at the end of Tex Richard, the Garden moved, like Birnam Wood to Dunsinane: up in Fiftieth Street the Big Show on Earth spreads its tinsel pageantry over the same old ground; the tinseled ladies in tights ride from their trapezes; the clowns run foolishly around the arena; the negligible ride and yell and wave their preposterous hats; the bareback riders pirouette on and off the backs of fat white horses; the living human bodies appear from under their red velvet extinguishers just as comfortably—if somewhat tightly—clothed as if the fashion of everyday wear were not knee-kissing skirts and very little else. Yes, the circus lady is still modest, whatever may be said of her sister on the stage and on the street.

And still the freaks march round as they used to do for the callously curious to stare at, and the strong men and the strong women pile themselves up in pyramids and are shot from a spring board high in air to land on a perpendicular column consisting of four of themselves on end. Still there is the thrill of lovely creatures in white tights—or yellow or pink—flying from swing to swing and being caught by their hands or their heels and the great net stretched beneath to catch them if they fall. Sometimes they fall to be caught—and then there is an extra thrill. But the net is there.

The Calm Before the Storm.

The Clowns Stage a Disaster.

Still the seals balance things extraordinarily upon the tips of their noses and toss balls back and forth, and still they are rewarded with fresh fish—seals must have strictly fresh fish whatever the rest of us get—and bark in a most dog-like manner.

And still the five rings compete for the attention of the numerous company anxious not to miss anything, and still some of the very best acts get no proper attention because the onlookers are expecting something to happen somewhere else. Still the ringmaster makes loud proclamation before certain acts, and there are fanfares and flourishes upon the brasses and long rolls upon the drums to fix the spectators' attention. And still it often does not seem to be any very special act that gets all this heralding.

That was always the way with ringmasters, even when there was only one ring under a comparatively little big-top in the dusty field out on the edge of town—or it might be frightfully muddy—in the days that very few readers can remember. Circuses have got much bigger since then, but otherwise they are still the same.

On Much Bigger Scale

Now the new Madison Square Garden is much bigger than the old one. That is to say, it enables 14,000 people to see the circus at once if they want to. Old Madison Square Garden could only take care of about half that number. If you went into the animal tent in that dusty—or muddy—field on the edge of town, there were, perhaps, three or four elephants and a couple of camels and one zebra, but if you go down into the menagerie up there in Fiftieth Street you will find forty elephants, and fifty camels and twenty zebras, some of them with nasty tempers. Several of the camels served with Lord Allenby in the Jerusalem campaign and there are Royal Artillery brands on them to prove it. And there are actually two giraffes who are delicate animals, with the largest eyes in the world.

It seems to me that there were always giraffes with the circus. But the circus man says no. Lots of circuses never did have any giraffes and there are not more than half a dozen in this country now. All of which is the more exciting because the freaks are there in the menagerie with the animals, and they walk around informally, and the lady dwarfs feed peanuts to the monkeys, and the mountain lions are very smarly, and the rhinoceros—who is one of the few of his species in captivity—has to have his horn kept short like a fashionable young woman's hair. And the reason is the same. Because, if the horn is long, it gets mixed up with things and is a lot of trouble.

There are many curious things to be learned walking around the menagerie, of which these are only samples. For instance, when the weather is very hot, it is the lions and the tigers, who come from hot countries, that die of the heat. Whereas the polar bears manage very well indeed. And the man who takes care of the giraffes—in spite of their being so delicate—is exceedingly fond of them and weeps when one of them dies.

But it is time to return to the Big Show upstairs, which is wasting its gorgeous, glittering effulgence upon the other 13,999 possible spectators while we linger with the beasts that perish. Yes, the circus is the same. There is Lillian Leitzel, "suspended at dizzy heights," exactly as the program says, and making you ache all over with sympathy as she holds on by one hand and makes herself into a pinwheel. Yes, Lillian is the same, and she has a special spotlight and special music as usual, and the maid is in waiting to hand her her opera coat like any Princess.

Somebody was heard to grumble that it was a pity, in all the hurry, that all the pretty-looking tinseled ladies did not get a chance to make their bows prettily. And somebody else said this was America—not Europe, where a circus was run like a dancing academy. The only thing in our circus that is run that way is the cotillion of "equine beauties." When that regiment of sleek horses come on with pompons and their proud heads tied back and fill all five rings with galloping figures of eight and that sort of thing, it is a formal affair indeed. No ceremonial bows are omitted; every little movement is in the grand manner, every evolution is eloquent of elegance. In that respect, also, the circus was always the same, though in the old days a hundred beautiful horses did not come on at once, as they do today, nor did they behave so beautifully.

Equestrian Ballooning

By the way, not everything is always quite the same—even in the circus. There is a girl in this one who goes aloft on horseback with three more plumes in her hair than the Prince of Wales wears on his coronet. The horse stands on a platform which is hitched to a stage balloon, and up goes the balloon and the horse and the girl, with nothing to keep the horse from stepping off. You say to yourself, it is a very brave girl and a very self-possessed horse. After they are half way up to the roof—which is a long way—the girl is supposed to release a parachute and then the lights go out and the horse and rider come down amid a grand display of fireworks.

Even if the whole trick does not work, it is a thrilling enough spectacle, that girl and a horse in midair. Yet even this is not really new. An old circus man said that somebody whose name he remembered perfectly—only I do not—used to do it in such and such a year (he gave the date) and that it was a blind the circus is the same.

horse named Excelsior. Certainly

Which reminds me that a well-read young woman who went to the circus—this same circus, "Ringling Brothers and Barnum and Bailey Combined Shows," with adjectives to match—explained that the circus was the same long before the time when the tent used to be set up in the dusty field on the edge of town—the field that often was so very muddy—and the elephants helped with the work.

There was a time, according to her, when bread and circuses went together instead of circuses and peanuts and pink lemonade. And that was in Rome—the sort of circus that you meet in the movies and in "Androcles and the Lion"—when Christians were thrown to the wild beasts. But in those days also the circus, which has now become an American specialty, was an all-around show, and there were athletes and clowns and chariot races and living statuary—only tights were usually omitted.

Nero was fond of the circus, and the little boy scouts of Rome used to sit round-eyed watching the strong men, and gurgle with delight at the funny faces of the clowns and the way they fell down. According to an old circus man whose name is Townsend Walsh, almost everything that is in a modern circus might have been in a Roman circus. It was he who found a circus poster at the Metropolitan Museum that was made in Asia Minor before Rome was more than a village. Only, he says, the ancients did not have trapeze acts. They are modern, even if they are not new, and have been a part of the circus ever since we could remember.

Caesar to Washington

However, some of the things which the young woman said about circuses, ancient and modern, were very interesting. Here are a few of them:

"From Caesar to George Washington—when he fell to the spell of Ricketts, who succeeded Philip Astley, and was the only begetter of Hengler's, Sanger's, Barnum and Bailey and all those other illustrious signposts of later circus days—it is the same. There is no doubt that Washington, for a few cents, got no less than that long line of famous and infamous Roman Emperors, whose contributions to the circus in the valley between the Palatine and Aventine, built by Tarquin the Younger, would, it is said, make the sum spent on prohibition and the guineas per head—money to be supplied by Clinton. He argues that the British are paying more than that for the Hessians, Brunswickers and other German troops which they had brought to America. Moreover, he shrewdly points out that the killing of the Hessians costs money, as their contemptible master, the Landgrave of Hesse-Cassel, was to be given extra pay if his men died.

ARNOLD'S TRAGEDY REVEALED

In cold-blooded fashion Arnold indicated to Clinton that the Germans, unused to the climate of America, were dying like flies and that the Americans would not die off that way. Further, Arnold insists that any one American soldier is worth two Germans and that under his command, given enough money, he could purchase enough of his old soldiers to put down the rebellion.

"Money, properly applied in America," he writes, "may with some have more argument than arms." He even suggests that Washington probably could be bought off with an English title.

Not the least part of the whole story is contained in the maps of the Hudson River Valley, which were prepared in connection with the treason of Arnold. They range in size from little sketches no larger than the palm of one's hand, made on horseback, to huge manuscript charts six and eight feet long. The latter are exquisite specimens of water-color work, the work of the engineer officers, Major Montresor and Alexander Mercer.

The lines at West Point; the geography of the Hudson River from Verplanck's Point and Stony Point all the way to West Point; the lines at Forts Clinton and Montgomery and all the American works and redoubts are to be seen in the utmost detail. Many of these maps are worthy of exhibition in a modern water-color exhibit.

There is a letter from Clinton to the British Secretary of War, Lord Germain, which confesses, after it was all over, the uselessness of the whole transaction. "We have not, I confess, derived from it the very great advantages I expected. The plan unfortunately miscarried, and I have paid that officer the sum of £6,315 as compensation for the losses he sustained for coming to us—which may in consequence appear large." The letter further gives grounds for suspecting that the entire business began with a suggestion from Germain himself.

It is notorious that Lord Germain was expelled from the British Army for cowardice, and there is some evidence to show that he believed that since he could buy his way back into favor in England and buy German troops and buy seats in Parliament for the King's friends, he could also buy American Generals. There are few figures in British history more contemptible than Lord George Germain, and the Clinton papers contain hundreds of his letters to Clinton.

When the end came at Yorktown Arnold had to leave the united American territory with the British Army. If he expected gratitude in England he certainly did not get it. The average Englishman was too honorable to treat with anything but contempt the miserable victim of Lord Germain's policy of corruption. Indeed, we are beginning to learn that the whole American Revolution was immensely unpopular with a substantial proportion of the British public. That proportion came into power immediately after the war and just at the time when Arnold was trying to establish himself as a loyal British subject who deserved well of the King.

Moreover, poverty followed social ostracism. We know from the papers of Judge Shippen of Philadelphia, which are in the possession of the Historical Society of Pennsylvania, that that unfortunate gentleman had to send thousands of pounds to England to keep his daughter and her husband from starvation. But the time came when even Judge Shippen grew tired of supplying Arnold with money.

Then Arnold turned again to Clinton, and the papers of that officer pick up the story once more. There are begging messages from the erstwhile American hero, complaining bitterly of the treatment he had been accorded in England—"having on many occasions received the most unmerited illiberal abuse in consequence of the decided part I had taken in the late American war, which has been imputed to mercenary rather than to the just motives which influenced my conduct"—and he begs Clinton to help him out.

Mercenary Motives

We know from the documents how rightly the British public estimated his motives. These certainly were mercenary, above anything else. In 1787 the affairs of the Arnolds had reached such a desperate state that we have the sad sight of Margaret Shippen Arnold writing a letter to Clinton in which she begs for help. The Arnold papers in the Clinton archives end with the following pathetic letter:

"May I venture to hope that the present anxiety of my mind will plead as an apology for the liberty I take in addressing you? Surrounded by a numerous little family, without the means of educating and supporting them in a style at all equal to what the former part of my life promised, and our scanty income being dependent upon our lives, by which means my children would be left to want, in a strange country in case of our deaths, you will no be surprised that every maternal feeling is awakened—and that I am deeply interested in General Arnold's present application to Mr. Pitt, the favorable event of which will no doubt in a great measure depend upon your representation of his conduct.

"From your justice I have everything to hope. May I presume to solicit your friendship? And more earnestly to entreat that you will extend it to us on the present occasion by exerting your influence with Mr. Pitt in our favor, with whom it now rests to render us easy with respect to the future fate of those most dear to us."

In many ways the one bright spot in all this sorry mess was Margaret Shippen's loyalty to Benedict Arnold.

STRANGE FISH-GODS OF HAWAII

On the Mokapu Flats near Honolulu is the abode of the Fish-Gods. Here are the Pyramid Rocks of black lava, and the Fish-Gods are blocks of black lava, roughly hewn, about two feet high, standing upright upon a rock platform.

The ancient Hawaiian fishermen formed a distinct community of their own and had peculiar beliefs and customs. Their small temples used to stand on almost every rocky promontory along the coast of Oahu—mere rude piles of coral blocks, and not a pretentious stone structure like the usual Hawaiian "heiau," or temple.

The Fish-Gods are called "Au-Maka," and the chief Fish-God is "Ka-ula." He was worshiped at an altar, or "ko-a"; offerings and sacrifices were brought to him, and the Hawaiians prayed to him for abundant catches. Ai-ai, the son of Kuula, was the one who first revealed the location of the deep-sea fishing grounds to the fishermen. Undoubtedly the same beliefs prevailed among the Polynesians, as is seen even today in the Dance of the Waves in Fiji, which is the survival of an ancient ceremonial dance of the fishermen, held at times of festivals and sacrifices to the Fish-Gods.

THE TRAGEDY OF ARNOLD IS REVEALED

Moore," he deliberately asks for an interview "with some intelligent officer" on Clinton's staff. The British Commander lost not a moment in complying. There are now before us his letters, which do not attempt to conceal the exultation he felt at the prospect of gaining an American General and his post by treachery.

Early in the correspondence Arnold is discovered not only plotting the surrender of West Point but also sending long cipher dispatches to Clinton about the strength and movements of the American armies, and information the American headquarters had about the coming and the destination of the French fleet and French troops, which were ultimately to decide the war.

Early in the negotiations, too, Arnold shows his true colors. What he really wanted was money—cold, hard English pounds. "If I point out a plan by which Sir Henry Clinton shall possess himself of West Point, its garrison, stores, artillery, &c., I want twenty thousand pounds sterling. I think it will be a cheap purchase for an object of so much importance."

Since the British did not respond to his demands promptly enough, he states in a cipher letter that he "expects to have your promise that I shall be indemnified for any loss I may sustain in case of detection, whether the contest is finished by the sword or by treaty, and that ten thousand pounds shall be engaged me for my services." It was a case of twenty thousand if he succeeded, or half that amount if he failed.

The British commander wanted to substitute a promise for a command of "five or six thousand men" in the British Army, with twice that many thousand guineas, if Arnold was successful in his betrayal. But Arnold stuck to his original demand.

In July of 1780 the conspirators were evidently fearful of discovery. Arnold changed his name from John Moore to Edward Fox, and then again to Gustavus. André began by signing his letters Joseph Andrews, which he changed before long to John Anderson, the alias he bore when captured. Among the other revelations in the Clinton papers is the extent of the conspiracy—Arnold, Clinton and André were but three of the actors. There were at least four other British spies involved, whose correspondence illuminates the dark corners of the whole affair.

André, as an old friend of Peggy Shippen, writes directly to her "with a view of communicating information" to Arnold or to one of the British spies within the American lines. Undoubtedly, there were several of these spies actually within the American fortress all the time the negotiations were going on. Historians have usually acquitted Peggy Shippen of any complicity in her husband's treason, but the Clinton papers give many indications of another story.

A son had been born to Arnold and Peggy Shippen just before the treason. We have actual evidence of her desire to buy baby's clothing in New York, for there were no shops in West Point like those in lower Manhattan. Her list of demands for "pink ribbon" and "diaper clouting" is among the other papers, sent by one of the British spies to New York.

The spectacle of the rejected suitor, Major André, buying these articles for Benedict Arnold's baby does not usually figure in history. Yet the number of times that the wants of the Arnold baby figure in the correspondence is significant of some knowledge on Mrs. Arnold's part that her husband was engaging in a rather familiar correspondence with the British headquarters.

Ingenious Cipher Devices

The methods of cipher used are simple but ingenious. Both Arnold and André would take copies of the same book. Dispatches would then pass back and forth in which each word in the letter would be represented by three numbers. The numbers were the page number, the line number and the word number of some word in the volume agreed upon. The messages would consist of page after page of numbers.

Fortunately, the Clinton papers contain full details about the books thus employed. On one occasion they used the fifth Oxford edition of Blackstone's "Commentaries on the Laws of England." On another occasion there would be employed the twenty-third edition of Baily's Dictionary. Sometimes they would select popular novels books of the day and use them in the same fashion.

On other occasions the conspirators would employ masked letters. A sheet of paper would have cut in it an irregular hole. Another sheet exactly the same size would be placed beneath it and the message written in the part of the under sheet thus left exposed. Then the mask would be removed and the words composing the message would be surrounded with other words in such a fashion as to make a grammatical but sometimes absurdly unintelligible composition, which would look like a complete letter. Arnold and André would each have paper the same size and identical copies of the mask.

Then, too, there are messages written on tiny slips of paper, to be enclosed in specially constructed hollow bullets. In one of these Clinton had sent his famous message to Burgoyne in the previous year, and the messenger, on being captured, had swallowed it. The American officer who captured him gave the messenger an emetic.

In their communications in which Arnold was trying to betray the secrets of American troop movements, the two men sometimes adopted a special code of biblical names. Philadelphia was Jerusalem; Pittsburgh was Gomorrah. The necessity for the use of such a far-away post as Fort Duquesne shows the many ramifications of the plot. The American Generals became the twelve apostles. Washington was St. James, Sullivan was St. Matthew, Gates was St. Andrew. Judas Iscariot, instead of being Arnold himself, was the relatively innocent General Bird. The Indians were referred to as the "Pharisees" and the Delaware River was the "Red Sea." The papers contain a full list of these Biblical names and their equivalents.

Climax of Conspiracy

Work on the papers has not yet progressed far enough to determine how far the conspirators used invisible ink, but they made allusions to it, as on an occasion when the blank paper was spoiled by the damp, so that when held near the fire the message could not be read. One remembers the use of lemon juice and other such simple liquids in this connection. Edgar Allan Poe has made them famous in his "Gold Bug."

Papers covering the climax of the conspiracy are exceedingly full. Not only are there now available the letters between the chief conspirators but also the letters of the auxiliary actors like Captain Sutherland of H. M. S. Vulture, which bore André up the river to his meeting with Arnold, and numerous letters of the British and Tory intelligence officers reporting on the meeting. Then comes a blank. André is lost sight of. Suddenly comes the news that he has been caught and sent to West Point. Arnold appears in New York, a fugitive—and, at that, utterly unsuccessful in his crime.

Then comes the most pathetic part of the story. Judging by Clinton's own writings, he was in a state of consternation at what had happened to André, who was one of his warmest personal friends. The British commander kept notes from day to day during the course of André's trial, trying to justify himself and to exculpate himself from any share in the blame for André's fate. The character of these notes seems to indicate that he never intended any one to read them. When finally the news arrives that André has been executed, Clinton's handwriting in his diary becomes almost illegible. "The horrid deed is done—Washington has committed premeditated murder."

One of the greatest treasures of the collection is the last letter written by André to his Commander-in-Chief. It has been published many times, but the original pathetic document itself now rests in the library in Ann Arbor, fittingly preserved in its proper place with the other papers relating to that great tragedy. In it André frankly admits that he failed to follow his instructions and that his fate is largely due to that disobedience.

The Clinton papers contain a bulky manuscript, "History of the Campaigns in North America," written by Clinton himself. It has never been published. In it one can find Clinton's version of the affair. He records that he specifically instructed André not to change his dress (for André started out in full uniform), and not under any circumstances to carry any papers. André, unfortunately for him, did both of these things, and for that reason made himself into a spy within the meaning of military law.

Sir Henry Clinton's history has never been used by any historian. It would make at least two stout octavo volumes and is fully annotated with references to the documents in the style of the most meticulous modern scholar. What secrets it may yet reveal can only be conjectured—but it gives every American food for thought to reflect that we have had the stories of the American Revolution told and retold without ever looking at the testimony of the British Commander-in-Chief, who, next after Washington, was the principal actor. The chronicle of the Arnold-André affair in this document occupies the better part of two chapters.

The utter futility as well as folly of Arnold's treason is made abundantly clear in the nature of his dispatches to Clinton. Arnold was constantly telling Clinton that Washington and Rochambeau were going to attack New York—which they never did. Not once in all the letters is there a hint of that great concluding act of the Revolution, the possibility of Washington and Rochambeau marching swiftly south around New York and capturing Cornwallis at Yorktown.

No doubt it was these dispatches of Arnold's, and his further confirmation of them after he reached the British lines, that kept Clinton hugging New York when his presence was so badly needed in Virginia the next Summer. Arnold's treason served the American cause in an unexpected way.

In the letters the crassness of Arnold's act keeps constantly cropping out. He seemed to think that as he himself could be bought so could every one else. He solemnly offers to go out and buy 3,000 of his American soldiers at the rate of 15

PHARAOH'S CURSE CLINGS TO HIS TOMBS

Ancient Superstition of Valley of Kings Is Revived by The Death of Another Egyptian Archaeologist

By P. W. WILSON

IN the Valley of the Kings, where have rested the Pharaohs of Egypt, men today are digging.

And of those who dig, six have died—mysteriously, some say. And so there has come once more talk that these men have died because there has been laid upon them a curse.

Within a period of three years these six have died. The first was Lord Carnarvon; the latest was Professor Bernadette, director of the Egyptian section of the Louvre. He is the latest fatality.

There is, of course, no guarantee that latest means last. A sixth victim may be followed by a seventh. Who knows? And there is increasing speculation over this possibility.

Among the superstitious, it has been considered unlucky to meddle with tombs, especially in Egypt. There is a belief that a curse awaits the intruder. This is the idea that Sir Rider Haggard and his numerous imitators exploit in their tales of adventure. And there arises the question, what basis, if any, can be discovered for the hoodoo? If there be a curse, how did it originate?

The tombs are three, four, five thousand years old. Any curse that is associated with them, therefore, must be not less persistent. Our inquiry thus leads into a remote and mysterious past.

Art of Embalming

Certain facts are established. And first among them is the desire of the Egyptian at all costs to preserve his body from decay. In the art of embalming a corpse he was unsurpassed.

His reason for preserving the body was religious. He believed that the body, thus intact, was essential to a prosperous immortality. So real was this faith that in the tomb there was provided whatever the departed might require in a continued existence. He was furnished with food, writing materials and even with images of slaves who would wait on him. In China, for a similar reason, they burn paper money at a funeral. It pays the expenses of the deceased ancestor.

A funeral in Egypt was thus no mere expression of sorrow and respect. It was the solemn inauguration of the departed into a new life. The prolonged and elaborate ceremonial, lasting for weeks, included lamentation. But where we use black, the Egyptians indulged in a riot of color. The procession was a triumph—a conqueror's pageant as he enters an unseen kingdom. And when the body, with attendant priests and sacred dancers and musicians, was borne over the Nile by boat the spectacle was a picture in itself. On the walls of many a sepulchre the glories of that last progress still shine in hues as fresh as four thousand years ago. And the final liturgy, when the tomb was reached, can best be described as a spiritual drama. It included prolonged and intense incantations.

Whatever else may be in doubt about these tombs it is at least certain that every device conceivable to the builders was adopted for protection against thieves. The entrance was cunningly concealed, and, in the case of Tut-ankh-Amen, was only discovered after years of excavation. The inner chambers are approached by passages which, at every point, were designed to mislead and entrap the intruder.

A monarch building his last resting place left nothing to chance. At the completion of the work the slaves employed were slain and their secret died with them. Successful decorators of tombs, so we are told, only had their eyes put out.

The precautions included magic. Over the body the priests practiced rites calculated to terrify the impious. And at the door of the tomb the inscriptions included a warning that "the great god will reward the violator as he deserves." Every imprecation of which language was capable would thus assail the man who breaks the seals that lock the home of the dead. And it was the firm conviction of the learned that the spirit of the departed remains in company with the body and is thus itself present at all times to defend its mansion. No tomb in Egypt was regarded as devoid of life.

It is this curse that the excavator defies. So little did Lord Carnarvon heed it that he painted the arms of his family above the entrance of the tomb from which he was about to wrest the treasures. What happened subsequently was that a mosquito bit him; he contracted pneumonia and died. To some people his fate suggested that his activities were unwelcome. It was as if the mummies had said: "If you want me, you must join me. You cannot enjoy my company unless I enjoy yours. King Tut-ankh-Amen had his fit for tat.

Mummy's "Dynamic Powers"

It would be strange, indeed, if a curse, undoubtedly uttered four thousand years ago, were to be potent for evil in the twentieth century. But there are high authorities who maintain this. Dr. J. C. Mardrus today stands in the first rank of Oriental scholars, and he denies that he is addicted to the occult. But he believes firmly in Egyptian magic and is "absolutely convinced" that the priests of Isis and Osiris "knew how to focus upon and around the mummy certain dynamic powers of which we possess very incomplete notions."

In other words, this is not a case of the jackdaw of Rheims where despite the "terrible curse" of the Lord Abbot, "nobody seemed one penny the worse."

In his appeal from the material to the mystical, Dr. Mardrus mentions the Bible. So far from discrediting the story of the priests who were slain because, with irreverent hands, they touched the Ark of the Covenant, he affirms that the ark was taken from Egypt and surrounded by the same dynamic force which he attributes to the body of King Tut-ankh-Amen. Indeed, the Amen, which we recite in our worship, is the same Amen that concludes the monarch's name.

The theory of Dr. Mardrus means that spirit, which dwells in living creatures, also haunts inanimate objects. And the theory is the more interesting because it emerges, not from the Protestant Fundamentalism of Tennessee, not from the Catholic Fundamentalism of Rome, but from the critical Modernism of Paris.

That mind affects matter and that matter affects mind are beliefs fairly to be described as universal. The doctor is convinced of it when he prescribes a rest cure. And the priest is not less convinced of it when he administers a sacrament. And if the bones of men and women may be used in benediction, there is no reason why malediction also should not be attributed to them. It is a theory to be weighed by the evidence. And in this case we are bound to ask if there be any other explanation available.

The doctors certify that all these six deaths are due to natural causes. Let us examine what these causes may be.

The excavator in Egypt is not a casual tourist, intent upon pleasure or health. He is a hard worker. And for his work he often selects the least comfortable season, because he wishes to be free of mere sightseers. The party led by Lord Carnarvon followed such a timetable. Even on the hottest day, then, the excavator takes his risk.

Also his is not normal activity. Like the miner, he spends his hours far underground in small, ventilated chambers, which for thousands of years have been cut off from light and air. In catacombs, as in mines, there collect gases in which no lamp will burn and no creature with lungs will live. In the tombs of Egypt there may not be actual asphyxiation. But the atmosphere is not to be described as sane. It is not Denver or the seashore.

Air carries dust. It is so in the finer mill and in the weaving room. In a tomb, full of debris, disturbed after prolonged entry, dust is probably an irritant. And to dust the only irritant? There exists are the rough caves. They are highly decorated shrines, the walls of which are covered with elaborate designs. All that was put into these caves we do not know and never shall. But, as we are aware when we live in a house that has just been painted, walls may exhale that which upsets the health. And in the tomb, this may have been the actual intention of the decorator. He may not have desired that the tomb should become a sanatorium for bishops enjoying a matutinal year.

Time on Tut's Side

And if the walls breathe a germ it is not for a few brief minutes that the archaeologist is exposed to infinitesimal. For months at a time whatever menace may be in the caves, in the breath of his helper. Time is on the side of the mummy Tut.

The frescos are the least of the excavator's objectives. He is not satisfied unless he invades the innermost privacy of Tut's narrow kingdom. And with every discovery Tut's ire waxes the warmer. As the archaeologist handles his find, fingers unguents which still yield a fragrance, sniffs at perfumes, unfolds fabrics from the weaver's loom, abstracts jewels, catalogues pottery and sprays bouquets of flowers with liquid wax, Tut smiles. The Tut knows what kindly legacies have been left by the accomplished chemist whom he employed as his expert.

We have seen that, in the art of embalming the body, of compound-

AN ACTOR RECALLS HIS STAGE LOVES

Forbes-Robertson Tells of Playing Opposite Famous Women Stars

THE beautiful women to whom Sir Johnston Forbes-Robertson has made stage love fill the pages of an album containing, in the famous English actor's words, "a great and wonderful memory for me."

To some of them he paid graceful tribute the other day in a speech at Stationers' Hall, London. The gallery includes Ellen Terry, Adelaide Neilson, Marion Terry, Mrs. Patrick Campbell, Mme. Modjeska, Mary Anderson, Kate Rorke, Mrs. Rousby, Laura Cowie, Florence Gerrard, Olga Netherscle and Gertrude Elliott, who became his wife. An imposing list. The city of the actor's study, where the writer talked with him afterward, seemed almost to stir as beauty after beauty emerged from the deepening mists of the past.

One Listens Fascinated

Sir Johnston has a charming house, at 22 Bedford Square, in which his hospitality displays itself in an unforgetable fashion. Seated in a comfortable chair before an open fire in the studio, one listens fascinated while he talks. When speaking of the beautiful and famous actresses opposite whom he has played in his long career, Forbes-Robertson somehow makes one forget that he is now retired; that the career so full of glamour and of achievement is at an end. The years fall from him magically as his mind slips back to the days of his first appearance behind the footlights.

He was, it seems, destined from the start to be a lover. Fifty-two years ago, in 1874, Mrs. Rousby, whom he describes as an extremely lovely woman, engaged him to play the juvenile lead in a play by W. G. Wills called "Mary Queen of Scots." That was the actor's initial venture in the difficult art of mimic love-making. In course of time Forbes-Robertson came to be known as the "perfect stage lover."

He spoke of his first meeting with Ellen Terry. "The door opened, and in came a vision of loveliness! She was dressed in a blue kimono, and, with that wonderful golden hair, seemed to melt into the surroundings—she appeared almost intangible."

Of Adelaide Neilson the actor exclaimed: "She was beautiful! Beautiful! This picture," he said, handing the writer a photograph, "does not begin to do her justice. In those days historical dramas were much in vogue. It was in a piece called "Ann Boleyn" that he made love to Miss Neilson—in addition to being denounced by Henry VIII. The play itself was not a success, and was so long that it was deemed expedient to lop off the entire first act, which was done without any loss of coherence!

Forbes-Robertson was a stage-lover of Marion Terry in a play by W. S. Gilbert called "Dan'l Druce," and he wooed her as well in another Gilbert piece, "The Vagabond," one of whose most romantic scenes had a forest for setting.

This play, as he spoke of it, served to recall to Sir Johnston's mind an amusing incident of the long-ago. At the time the incident was of a rather serious nature, though the sequel was happy. It seems that at a certain point in this love scene, as they were rehearsing it, he asked Gilbert's permission to rise from a log upon which he was seated. The playwright replied sharply:

"You may stand on your head if you like."

Now, Gilbert was himself to appear that afternoon in a pantomime arranged by some amateurs for charity, and Forbes-Robertson laughingly shot back in connection with the author's excessive generosity as expressed in his assurance that the young lover might "stand on his head"!

"No. I leave that to you!"

This made Gilbert furious. For many years thereafter, though the two men were frequently thrown together, they never spoke. In fact, thirty years elapsed. Then one day Gilbert wrote Forbes-Robertson a beautiful letter asking for a reconciliation. This plea was met half way, and they became fast friends.

Forbes-Robertson played romantic love to Marion Terry in a forest. This was, however, merely a stage forest, whereas his first appearance with the great Modjeska occurred in a genuine glade, by moonlight.

In the Summer of 1880, Forbes-Robertson was living in the little coast village of Cadgewith, in Cornwall. Poland's most famous actress, Helena Modjeska, was also spending a vacation there with her husband. The rector of the district asked these two players to assist in a benefit for the church. They agreed. There was no theatre, nor was there even a hall large enough for the occasion. A platform was therefore erected out-of-doors, facing a grassy slope for auditorium.

There, in a fairy-like setting, the light of a full moon augmented by oil lamps, he made his first love to Mme. Modjeska. Subsequently he played Valrena to her Frou Frou.

A Beauty Among Beauties

Mary Anderson—breathe the name softly. She was a beauty among beauties. Older theatregoers will remember how America was swept off its feet in 1885-86, when this radiant actress and Forbes-Robertson (her leading man) toured the country in "Ingomar," "Pygmalion and Galatea," "Romeo and Juliet," "The Lady of Lyons" and "As You Like It." Over this memory the actor's eyes glow and his voice takes on what seems a special reverence.

Forbes-Robertson has painted many well-known beauties, too; for his fame as a painter is second only to his renown as an actor. A portrait of Mary Anderson was hanging in the Shakespeare Memorial Theatre at Stratford-on-Avon, recently destroyed by fire. The picture, however, was saved.

As we talked, Lady Forbes-Robertson came into the studio. Beautiful Gertrude Elliott has been courted by her husband many times on the stage. They were married at the conclusion of their first season together. And indeed it may be doubted whether Sir Johnston ever really made "stage love" to her at all.

OLD WORLD CARILLON IN AMERICA

The carillon had its origin in the sixteenth century and through the next three hundred years gradually reached a high degree of excellence—an excellence which the present century has brought to perfection. Joost van der Vondel of Amsterdam, listening to the playing of Solomon Verbeek, carillonneur there, three hundred years ago saw "Heaven's choirs looking out," and Marie Boddaert, a modern Dutch poet, wrote as she heard the children joining in the Spring-songs that rippled down from Middelburg's singing tower, it was "May greeting May with a song."

Perfect tuning of bells is now possible. But alas, it has until recently been but rarely exemplified in the United States. No untuned bell, however, be it single or one of a peal, ring, chime or carillon, should be allowed to offend the ear of a civilized community. Any traveler in the low countries of Europe, even though not able to be present at a recital by the carilloneur, can listen for the brief automatically played tunes which float down just before the striking of the hour and at the quarter and half hours, and thus at least get some faint conception of the beauty of carillon music.

In the low countries the carillon has come to be part of the city's life and each one of its principal bells has its own name and is known by it throughout the community. Cardinal Mercier during the war came to be called the Savior of Carillons because he prevented so many from being carried away, and when he was buried in St. Rombould's Cathedral a few week ago the first words of the cablegram from Malines concerning his funeral were: "The carillon in the cathedral tower was played." And a letter written me by a friend who was present says:

"As the procession bearing the coffin moved across from the Episcopal Palace to the Cathedral, Salvator, Carolus and Rombaldus were sounding together. It was most impressive."

This letter might merely have said "the three largest bells of our Cathedral were rung together." But by calling them by their enduring names, how personified their tones become and how they seem individually to give forth living notes in the city's grief!

"My Name Is Roland"

In the same way this personality exists in the great bell at Ghent.

"My name is Roland. When I toll, there is a fire, and when I ring there is victory in the land," is the old inscription.

At Middelburg "Lange Jan" (Long John) is the affectionate name for the tower. And at Amersfoort the singing tower has come to be in popular speech "The Mother and Child Tower," for a graceful little spire springing from its side is carried by the tower as if in arms.

At Bruges in 1746 when the new automatic drum—nearly six feet in diameter—was to be installed for the carillon, the people themselves drew it through the streets to the belfry, and the second day of February, when it first played the carillon hour tunes, was proclaimed a general holiday. And in 1925 when the garlanded great bass bell of the restored carillon occupied the centre of the market place at Zutphen, the Queen of the Netherlands came from The Hague and, accompanied by the Burgomaster, took part in the dedication ceremony of the new carillon.

Singing tower recitals are already a feature in several localities in this country. Last Summer and Fall such recitals occurred at Morristown, Cohasset, Gloucester, Andover and New York. Two carilloneurs came from Belgium for this purpose and American carilloneurs played from time to time at Morristown and Andover. Thousands thus heard for the first time the beautiful tower music.

At the picturesque sea-coast village of Gloucester, Mass., the loss at sea of a score of fishermen was most impressively marked last August by devoting the usual Wednesday evening carillon recital hour to the playing by Kamiel Lefevere of Chopin's Funeral March and other appropriate music. Listeners were deeply affected by the unique memorial service.

Indicative in a material way of how great has been the awakening, recent expenditures made for this remarkable civic music—the figures being based on careful information from all countries—show that there has been spent on new carillons in the last ten years, or arranged for in the immediate future, approximately $1,052,000. Of this, $902,000 represents the expenditures of the English speaking countries: the United States, Canada, England, Ireland, South Africa and Australia. Expended in the rest of the world—by the Netherlands (new carillons); Belgium (restoration), and French Flanders (restoration), $150,000. For the United States and Canada alone the total is $707,000. In addition a very considerable amount has been spent for the new towers which are crowned by carillons, as at Andover, Loughborough, Zutphen, Ottawa. Still larger sums are to go for yet other memorial singing towers.

All of the best carillons in whatever country existing are the product of the craftsmanship and skill of two firms of bell-makers. These firms are John Taylor & Co. of Loughborough and Gillett & Johnston of Croyden. Unfortunately, American bell-founders have not yet entered the field.

Referring to the tariff tax of 40 per cent. which is imposed on carillons here, the Rev. Dr. Milo Hudson Gates of New York says in a recent issue of the Churchman:

"No one in the United States can make a carillon. No one in the United States has ever made a carillon. There is not even the remotest sign of the beginning of an industry here. For some unknown reason, I suppose because we must protect an infant industry, an enormous tariff is levied upon any carillon. However, such is the beauty of the instrument and so inspiring is this new art, that I do not believe even the high protective tariff wall around an industry which does not exist will keep out the instrument."

As to what a carillon costs, local conditions necessarily affect this to some extent. Nevertheless it can be said that in several instances in America those making purchases have found that the carillon even with the tariff tax of 40 per cent. is no more expensive than a group of unattuned bells having a similar total weight of metal.

Price naturally is not to be ignored, but the high artistic quality of a memorial, its appropriateness and its stimulating community usefulness are among the elements which properly control decisions. The fact that so many carillons have been recently obtained in the United States and Canada by committees and individuals of wide business experience is evidence that the cost of the carillon is not considered unreasonable where a really fine public purpose is to be fulfilled.

SWEEPING OUT THE DEVILS

ON the last night of Winter the festival of "Oni-Kara!" takes place in Japan. This is the time when evil spirits are expelled by scattering beans around the rooms of the house and then sweeping them out, while the exorciser cries, "Out with the devils! In with Good Luck!"

WATCH the
POSTAL LIFE
Beginning Its Second Twenty Years

A New Way and a New Day

Twenty years ago, the Hughes Investigation opened up a new day in life insurance; policies of approved standard form resulted.

Twenty years ago, the Postal Life Insurance Company opened up a new way in life insurance; through it the public is enabled to buy these standard policies direct from the headquarters of the Company. No agent intervenes; no agent is needed.

Its Non-Agency Economies Have Gripped Public Attention Throughout the Country

The constant aim and continuing purpose of this Company is to refine its economies more and more so as to furnish sound legal reserve life insurance protection through its direct method at lower and lower cost. High-pressure methods are avoided in the Postal Life.

THE PRESENT RECORD SHOWS over $50,000,000 of insurance issued, and that there have been paid to policy beneficiaries, $24,247,790.00, as follows:

On claims by death	$11,985,867.00
In maturing endowments	1,573,394.00
In surrender values and dividends	3,069,639.00
In loans on their policies	7,638,890.00

That Postal policyholders prize their policies and keep them in force is shown in the decidedly low lapse rate.

That its policyholders are well selected and have been benefited by the Company's Health Bureau Service is shown in the distinctly low death rate.

That its policyholders in acting for themselves in taking out policies save expense is shown in the 9½% Guaranteed Dividend.

Its policyholders being widely distributed geographically by non-agency method is most valuable to the Company; the policyholders themselves spread a knowledge of the Company's economies in many communities where they reside.

These outstanding conditions in the Company have contributed to low cost of insurance, and will so continue.

Call at the Company's office, or simply use the Coupon, or write and say, "Mail me insurance information as mentioned in The New York Times Magazine, April 11, 1926," and in your letter be sure to give

1. Your full name;
2. Your occupation;
3. Exact date of your birth.

When your inquiry reaches us no agent will be sent to visit you. We desire to co-operate with you directly, and have you think out with us your problems from official documentary matter submitted. Because we employ no agents the resultant commission savings go to you.

THE OLD-FASHIONED SPELLIN' BEE REVIVED

Little Town in Connecticut Finds This Instructive Game of Another Era Highly Exciting—Town Clerk Wins With "Syringa"

By VIRGINIA POPE

EASTHAMPTON, Conn., has revived the old-fashioned spellin' bee as a factor in its community life. That particular night, March 5, when Town Clerk Brown refused to be spelled down, awakened memories of the Hoosier Schoolmaster, and the mighty match that brought forth the sentiment that "spelling is the cornerstone, the grand underlying subterfuge of a good education," from Squire Hawkins's ponderous brain.

"Everybody" was at the Opera House, from Selectman Ralph Bellew to Uncle Ed Mitchell, oldest citizen of the little Connecticut town, which boasts some 2,300 souls. Word had gone forth that the "old-timers" were to be there and would try their luck at unraveling old-time words. Not in many moons had the little town known such a lark.

Why should the talent discovered in cross-work puzzling be lost? Public-spirited Easthamptonians asked each other the question. The old-fashioned has become new-fashioned: fiddlin' contests are the vogue, so are country dances. Easthampton, up and coming in every other respect, could not afford to lag behind.

Letters were despatched to President Coolidge, President Angell of Yale and Henry Ford, asking for words. President Angell answered with the following: Received, separate, occurred, referred and occasion. None of these stumped the contestants; they were brought down to defeat by "bachelor," and "cemetery." In this, the first of the matches, only four entrants took part. But the interest of the onlookers was so great that it was decided to repeat the venture at regular intervals.

That is how the Opera House came to be packed on the evening of March 5. It was no ordinary event, that spellin' bee, but one closely linked up with the innermost community life of Easthampton.

Imagine a little town typical of our northeastern States, American to its backbone, whose charter was signed more than 200 years ago. It nestles peacefully in the midst of the hills of central Connecticut. Entering it, the stranger is first impressed by a cluster of low red brick factory buildings. Prosperity and comfort are the words that come to the mind. The next impression is that made by the delightful steepled New England church, standing high on the village green. Above its pillared entrance one reads the date, 1748. Near by stands the equally characteristic Town Hall. Around these gather the schoolhouse, the bank, the main store, the postoffice, the baseball diamond. All of these elements were drawn upon to make the spellin' bee a success.

By 7:30 little knots of children began to trickle into the Opera House—a spacious hall over Easthampton's ice-cream parlor. By 7:45 the older folks were pouring in a solid stream up the steps.

The committee in charge of the evening was composed of County Commissioner Hubert C. Hodge, Treasurer of the Barton Drug Store, Inc.; T. W. Brown, Town Clerk and Treasurer; insurance man and banker; Howard Scranton, press representative and chief booster of the town.

By 8:30 all was in readiness. Commissioner Hodge, spokesman of the evening, stepped before the curtain to make the announcements regarding the entertainment. The hall was packed. An immense iron stove kept the crowd warm.

As in all successful performances, the headliner of the evening was not the first on the program, which began with a match between a dozen or more school children. Then came a harmonica contest. Soon the audience was swaying from side to side.

The adults' contest was in charge of Mrs. Marshall Bevin, wife of State Representative Bevin. With the welfare of her town at heart she threw herself enthusiastically into the lark. "Never admit that you don't know a word! Look wise and go home and consult your dictionary."

Two captains, Miss Bertha Luntz, champion speller of the county, and T. Wolcott Brown, the Town Clerk, chose sides. Behind them the backdrop represented a turbulent sea on which tossed storm-rocked ships; above these a lighthouse cast its glowing rays of hope.

"Gee, this is goin' to be great!" muttered the kids, wriggling on the edges of their seats.

By drawing lots, Mr. Brown got first pick.

"Mrs. Starr," he called.

There was a scraping and shuffling of feet. A tall, spare woman took her place at the Town Clerk's side.

"Mrs. Brown." It was the opposition captain calling.

A ripple of laughter ran over the house. The sweet-faced woman, whose white hair was combed smoothly over her ears, and whose wine-colored dress was buttoned close up to her chin, was none other than the Town Clerk's mother.

Many Called, Few Willing

The delight of the onlookers knew no bounds when Milton Carpenter and Charles Bruggemen, both owners of large factories, broke up the solid front of fearless females. Male representatives were decidedly in the minority. It was whispered about that many had been called but that few had allowed themselves to be chosen.

Clerk Brown and Miss Luntz flashed looks of encouragement at their armies as Mrs. Bevin's gavel came down on the boards with a thump. The women clasped their hands. The men straightened their neckties.

The fight was on. It was not until Mrs. Bevin hurled "peccadillo" across the footlights that any real consternation was manifested.

"Peccadillo," repeated the first one, and failed. "Peccadillo" said the next with a troubled frown, and tried a different way. "Peccadillo," echoed a third. Back and forth the spellers' peccadillos flew.

"Say, this is great!" cried the youngsters.

The women were strong on everything pertaining to household and dress. "Naphtha" and "sieve" had no terrors for them, nor had "sauque" and "basque."

When the alloted fifteen minutes were up, it became evident that Mr. Brown had chosen wisely and well. His successful supporters stretched out in a triumphant line across the stage. The survivors of Miss Luntz's cohorts had taken refuge behind the wings. Battle-worn, they were glad to accept Mrs. Bevin's offer of truce. Then spell-down began.

Valiant Miss Luntz was knocked out by "goatee." As the number of those on the platform began to dwindle, a tense silence fell among the spectators with the challenging ring of each word. "Calcimine" and "weevil" both proved fatal.

"Bologna" snapped Mrs. Bevin.

"Bolony?" queried Mr. Bruggeman, peering forth from behind the canvas shrubbery where he had taken refuge.

"Bolony?" repeated the leader.

They stood bowing back and forth at each other like two Chinese idols. The gavel fell. Only Carpenter and Brown were left of the men.

"Anodyne," "rhinoceros," "reconnoitre," "lachrimal"—each brought down a new victim.

"Millionaire," ejaculated Mr. Carpenter, manufacturer of boxes. "Millionaire! M-i-l-l-i-o-n——" His eyes became two question marks. "I-e-r," he concluded abruptly, and joined in the laughter that accompanied his exit.

The end was fast approaching. Only four were left—the lean and wiry Mr. Brown, his sparse red hair standing on end, his smile indicating that he enjoyed the sport—and three ladies. It was "syringa" that gave the Town Clerk his final victory. Even "hallelujah," which he had to tackle standing alone in the centre of the stage could not down this undaunted speller.

Mrs. Bevin's faithful ally during the match was a small blue book on the fly-leaf of which was printed:

A new Common School Dictionary
A speller and a Definer or
A Sequel to Webster's Elementary Spelling Book Containing 12,000 words.

The date it bore was 1842.

Was it not our friend Squire Hawkins who said: "I put the Spelling Book prepared by the great Daniel Webster alongside the Bible?"

HUNTING THE PERFECT FOOT

THERE is a job open for any woman with a perfect foot. Recently a Geneva, Switzerland, newspaper carried an advertisement for such a woman and the sculptor promised high pay for the mere privilege of using her foot as a model. But it would appear that the perfect foot is difficult to find, for the sculptor's advertisement has been repeated.

Will he ever find it? That is the question. From time to time one hears of other physical perfections. There is the woman with the "form divine," and again one hears of this, that or the other stage celebrity insuring her legs or her arms against possible injury—for in them lies her road to fame and fortune. But the feet!

There is an anecdote still told in London regarding the perfect hands of Harriet Lane Johnson, at one time mistress of the White House. At a dinner in London, attended by many celebrities, there was much speculation regarding the alleged perfection of the hands of Miss Johnson, who was the guest of honor.

During dinner the man seated next her lifted one of her hands high above the table in plain sight of all and quoted the line from Gray's "Elegy":

"Hands that the rods of empire might have swayed."

Quick as a flash Miss Johnson quoted the succeeding line:

"Or waked to ecstasy the living lyre."

The play on the word caught instantly and the crestfallen gentleman was the butt of the evening.

But this is about feet. Present styles for women tend to hide rather than expose. It was not long ago that galoshes covered all the feminine feet which stepped down the fashionable thoroughfares of the great cities of the world. Now many flappers and their mothers galavant along in Russian boots, which not only hide any imperfections of feet proper but give an air of mystery to the contour of the ankle.

Room for Wiggling

These Russians boots—judging from their size—give the foot ample room for exercise. My lady may wiggle her toes to her heart's content; for they are so far apart in Russian boots that when they touch, they must seem like visitors rather than members of one family.

Yet this freedom, we are told, is not all that is needed for perfect feet.

Not so long ago the Chinese ladies strove for foot perfection by binding them up and making them four inches long. This did not work, although it had a fair trial lasting many centuries. The pendulum has now swung in the other direction.

And still the perfect foot cannot be found.

KEMAL TEACHES THE TURK HOW TO FARM

Soldier-President Sees That His Country's Next Battle Will Be With the Soil, and He Is Developing a Model Farm That Is Well Stocked With American Implements of Husbandry

BY ROSE LEE

ANGORA.

ON a brown hilltop of Mustapha Kemal Pasha's farm near Angora there is a miniature Sea of Marmora. From the Bosporus to the Dardanelles it is complete, islands and all. The only detail that is lacking as yet is water, so brilliantly blue in the real Marmora. No waves are lapping this cement basin, and the islands are still mere pillars of masonry. But in the Spring the little sea will be filled, and the defender of the Dardanelles will swim in it, covering miles of geography at a stroke.

The Marmora pool is a fantasy of Mustapha Kemal, just as the acres all around are his preoccupation. It is the last trademark of a warrior who has finished his battles and is now devoting himself seriously to the arts of husbandry. It will serve not merely for a pleasure pond but also as a reservoir for watering the trees that are being planted near by.

All around the basin Turkish peasants—their traditional red sashes and home-spun trousers contrasting oddly with the headgear demanded by law—are working the Gazi's farm. Most of the men have twisted their caps around, visors behind, so that their necks are shaded as they lean down to spade the earth for the planting of forests. Already 100,000 saplings have been set to help cover the nakedness of these Anatolian hills; and the workmen are busy planting more. They only stop long enough to salute when the Gazi passes on a tour of inspection.

Today he is ascending the hill on foot, leaving the heavy motor car to plow unloaded through the mud. He walks easily, with hardly any motion of his shoulders. There is something leonine in the smoothness of his movements, as there is in the tawny head and the broad modeling of the face. Like the fabled king of the beasts, Mustapha Kemal Pasha shows a powerful head affixed to a slim body. He cannot be more than five feet ten inches tall. His personality is concentrated in his eyes—blue as any Nordic's, but with extraordinary powers of dilation and contraction.

At the top of the hill the Gazi smiles; his eyes relax; for the time being he is not the statesman but the courteous host. He turns to his companion walking beside him:

"Where on the Sea of Marmora would you like to go?"

"To Mudania, please," I reply.

So, half-laughing, we pace along the Asiatic coast of Marmora, stopping at the spot where the antique port of Mudania should be. Here, at the close of the Turkish War of Independence, the interallied commissioners traveled to sign an armistice with the General Mustapha Kemal. Every niche of the coast line is filled for him with the memory of past battles. He stops finally at the narrow channel that ends the pool. "Here," he says, "are the Dardanelles."

"Your own ground," I suggest, remembering how Mustapha Kemal, as a Colonel, held the straits for his country after every one else had pronounced it hopeless.

He assents with a flicker of his eyelids, and adds with an ironic smile: "The straits are open, you see. But in reality, they are still shut."

That is the way the Gazi speaks—briefly, dramatically, in symbols.

The Sea of Marmora disposed of, that amazingly steadfast glance of his swept the countryside. The spot on which we stood commanded the whole circle of the horizon, bounded by a triple tier of hills. There was a skyline of snow-streaked peaks and, a little nearer, the bare, brown hummocks of the Anatolian plateau. It is a bleak pioneer region, softened only by the colors of sunlight and shadow—that stretch of land Mustapha Kemal Pasha has chosen to make fertile.

The farm extends beyond the horizon on the north and west and south. It covers some 10,000 hectares, of which a tenth are already under cultivation. To the east it follows the Anatolian railway track almost as far as Angora, and infant oak forests alternate with embryonic fields of wheat. Thousands of lambs are nibbling the sparse grass on one hillside, and in the fields tractors from Michigan and seeding machines from Wisconsin ply merrily up and down.

In compliance with new nationalist ideas, the labor is exclusively Turkish—even the skilled technicians in their khaki uniforms. But the methods of this model farm are borrowed from the American Middle West. Wheat is to be the prime preoccupation, though experiments are being made with other grains as well. It will be a long time before this vast, half-mountainous estate rivals the fat wheat fields of Kansas; but money and devotion are at work, and—most potent of all—the will of Mustapha Kemal Pasha.

It was no idle fancy that converted Kemal into a gentleman farmer during his spare hours. Rather it was that clairvoyance of mind for which he is famed. He has seen clearly that Turkey's next battle must be with her own soil; that her future prosperity depends upon agricultural improvement. This philosophy is expressed in the recent law exempting products of the soil from taxation. Until now, the people of Anatolia—85 per cent. agricultural—have had every inducement that a tithe system could offer to make them unenterprising.

Because many farms in Asia Minor are still in a lamentably primitive state, and stolid peasants still hitch their oxen to plows of biblical model, the Gazi has undertaken to create a perfect farm. It is designed as a practical school of agriculture for the peasants who work upon it.

So farming has become the personal hobby of the President, just as railroads are the enthusiasm of his Prime Minister. Mustapha Kemal watches each new acre go into cultivation as eagerly as Ismet Pasha looks to the laying of every additional meter of rail along the Angora-Sivas line. The President has directly supervised the buying of fruit, fir and shade trees; seeds of all descriptions. Hardly a week passes that he does not ride out once or more to oversee the progress of his experiment. When it is finished and flourishing, he will present his farm to the republic as a sample of how cultivation should proceed.

Economically, as well as politically, Kemal has furnished New Turkey with the common-sense philosophy of Voltaire's Candide: "We must cultivate our gardens." And he is not above applying the principle quite literally himself. Last Summer, when the farm (or Tchiflik) was just begun, the Gazi went out on many torrid days and dug side by side with the laborers in the fields. When Mustapha Kemal stands on a hilltop and looks out over the rolling lands below, it is not as a rich man counting his acres. It is with a narrowing of the eyes and a calculation in his mind of the things that still remain to be done.

On this particular occasion I had been permitted to accompany the President to Tchiflik. I believe that I am the only foreigner who has ever done this, and with me it was a wholly unlooked-for piece of good fortune. It all happened very simply. After ten days of hoping for an interview with Mustapha Kemal Pasha, word came that he would receive me in his office near the station, provided I would avoid the doubtful theme of politics. At the graystone house near the railroad, in a reception room where sunlight lay warm on heavy silk hangings, I saw Kemal for the first time—a man of 45, simple in manner and possessed of the most extraordinary personal magnetism. One soon begins to comprehend the persuasive force of this man who is making Turkey shed her oldest customs and superstitions.

For a little while we talked of the direction of future reform in Turkey, the Gazi replying to my questions with great reserve. He has had reason in the past, it seems, to distrust the journalistic breed. Concerning the matter of votes for women, he admitted that this was bound to come in time. Asked about the substitution of the Latin script for the picturesque but impractical Turkish characters, he nodded slightly and said with a significant smile, "Perhaps!"

Finally I mentioned my wish to see his farm, which is so symbolic of the new salvaging of Turkey.

"Shall we go together?" said the Gazi politely.

I found myself pacing up and down the railway platform with the President of the Turkish Republic, waiting for the little train that would take us to the farm. To the left of the station lay the long bare fields which were malarial swamps until they were partially drained at the Gazi's orders. A mile or more beyond was the pioneer capital of Turkey—old Angora clustered upon the hill behind its ruined Roman ramparts; new Angora below, with its files of half-finished white buildings, and further away the scattered handful of houses forming the Presidential suburb of Djankaya. Against the eastern skyline, barely visible, was the dome of a wild mountain monastery.

"There are no people in the monastery any more," said the Gazi. "We have closed all the religious houses and are slowly driving superstition out of the country. Our men no longer wear the fez, our women are dropping their veils and our children are going to school."

"How do you feel when you see all this?"

"I am content," said the Gazi.

The President's car had arrived and presently we were chugging down the tracks to the westward, accompanied by the Gazi's military aid and his secretary, the genial Colonel Tewfik Bey. At intervals along the way we descended to admire the wheatfields being sowed. Finally we reached the diminutive railway station, fitted up as a kind of half-way house where the Gazi may rest and entertain his friends before proceeding to a tour of the farm. OLD WORLD CARILLON FINDS FAVOR IN AMERICA

Bells in Singing Towers Are Multiplying Rapidly and Their Music Attracts and Charms Many Listeners

By WILLIAM GORHAM RICE

AMERICA'S interest in the carillon today is properly characterized as "intense." Nor is it strange that so great an interest should exist. The carillon, new to our people, yet, nevertheless, a fully developed mechanical musical instrument, has revealed unexpected domains of sound and awakened thousands to the power and beauty of attuned bell music. The number of singing towers increases steadily.

The carillon, it must be borne in mind, is not a chime. Much less is it a ring or peal. The carillon surpasses the chime, ring or peal, much as the cathedral organ surpasses the child's one-finger toy piano. It is a complete musical instrument, having three, four or more chromatic octaves of notes of perfect pitch. The keyboards of a carillon employ both hands and feet of a player, as with an organ. He is thus able to strike as many as eight notes at a time, and can produce with expression and without ramification substantially any musical composition. The chime, with its approximately one diatonic octave and sounding one note at a time, is a limited and primitive affair and must be relegated more and more to a kindergarten stage of bell music.

The carillon already has earned its place in literature. Its range, beauty and appeal have been noted abroad for many years. Robert Louis Stevenson in his "Ode in Flood," heard the sweet sounds in Belgium and exclaimed, "We thought we had never heard bells speak so intelligently." Arnold Bennett calls the music "magic from the skies," and our own Longfellow eighty years ago wrote in his "Belfry of Bruges" of this unique music.

Already there exist in America many carillons of the finest type. These are in the United States, at New York, 53 bells; Morristown, N. J., 35 bells; Cohasset, Mass., 43 bells; Andover, Mass., Phillip's Academy, 37 bells; Gloucester, Mass., which had the first singing tower in the United States, 31 bells; Birmingham, Ala., 25 bells; Detroit, Mich., 23 bells; Cranbrook, Mich., 80 bells, soon to be increased in number; Plainfield, N. J., 23 bells; and at St. Chrysostom's Church, Chicago, to be dedicated next Christmas, 43 bells. In 1927 the Mercersburg, Pa., Academy, will have 43 bells and Germantown, Pa., will have 35 bells.

Other Bell Towers

Canada has at Ottawa, soon to be inaugurated, 53 bells; Toronto, 23 bells; Simcoe, 23 bells; and at Guelph, 23 bells.

A public fund is approaching completion at Albany, N. Y., to provide a carillon of 42 bells for the City Hall Tower. Contributions to this fund have ranged from $1 to $5,000, and considerably more than 5,000 persons have subscribed. This will be the first municipal singing tower in the United States, and the first carillon in the United States obtained by a wide public subscription.

New York City already possesses in the Park Avenue Baptist Church Tower at Sixty-fourth Street perhaps the most majestic of all carillons. Its fifty-three bells are unsurpassed in their accuracy of pitch and its keyboards are of the most perfect responsiveness. Not only have the superb recitals upon this carillon by Anton Brees of Antwerp been heard by multitudes of listeners in the neighboring streets, but it has given delight by means of the radio transmission to thousands throughout the land. Eagerly awaited is the resumption of evening recitals on this superb instrument in the approaching Spring. A young Canadian, T. Percival Price of Toronto, at the present time a pupil of Josef Denyn at Malines, is then to become the player in New York. Denyn is the Paderewski of the carillon and the director of the free school of carillon instruction, sustained in part by the generous gifts of music-loving Americans.

This Park Avenue carillon, the gift of John D. Rockefeller Jr., in memory of his mother, will be transferred eventually to the commanding tower of the great church on Riverside Drive at 122d Street, which is to succeed the Park Avenue structure. The carillon chamber in the new edifice will be 300 feet from the ground. With ample unobstructed space about it, the setting of this splendid singing tower will allow thousands to listen to the melodies which float down from its height.

The carillon is also definitely in contemplation for two other structures in New York City. A carillon is planned for Washington, D. C., as part of the William Jennings Bryan memorial, and others form part of the design of two other buildings projected there.

In the Netherlands Amsterdam has six carillons and Rotterdam three. There is no interference in their music. The Dutch have a saying that good schools and good bells are two signs of a well-managed city. New York, Washington and other large American cities could well enjoy several carillons.

Other cities of the United States have singing towers in view. In a number of these, while the carillon has been assured, the time has not yet arrived for actual announcement. There is every indication that in two years time this country will have twice as many carillons of large compass and perfect tune as are to be found in either Belgium or the Netherlands.

Even before the New York carillon is moved to its new home uptown, Ottawa, Canada, will have equally noble bells in a tower already constructed, at a height no less. The fifty-three bells of this memorial crowning the Victory Tower of the new Houses of Parliament will be slightly heavier than those in the Park Avenue, New York, carillon. The commanding situation of this Canadian Tower, set on a picturesque bluff above the Ottawa River, together with the surrounding open space, the dignity of the belfry itself, and the beauty of the whole group of buildings of which it is a part, combine to place it in the very front rank of the singing towers of the world.

Carillons Spread Over World

Nor is it in America alone that the carillon is receiving such increased public consideration. Sydney, Australia; Cape Town, South Africa; Queenstown and Armagh in Ireland; Loughborough and Parkgate in England, and in the Netherlands Almelo, Appingedam, Bennebroeck, Tilburg, the City Hall in Rotterdam and Zutphen, where one was restored after the burning of the tower, have all lately become possessors of modern carillons. And Arnhem, Bois-le-Duc, Eindhoven, Flushing, Nykerk in the Netherlands and a number of Belgian towns by their improvements and renewals are showing continued devotion to their long-existing community music.

Added to the list of new or improved carillons already mentioned should be the dozen or more now in process of restoration in Belgium and French Flanders. Finally in such an enumeration comes the singing tower which it is proposed shall dominate the library of Louvain; for the American architects intend that it shall be crowned by one of the best carillons in the low countries.

NEW DECORATIVE ART IDEAS

many copies for a larger number of patrons.

While most of the cretonnes and hand-block prints are either old designs or modern ones inspired by Indian prints, European brocades and other fabric designs reminiscent of past periods, the newer note of art is represented by a small but virile group. Paul Frankl has pointed out that the present fashion of walls and floor coverings in plain colorings, instead of figured wall paper and carpets and rugs of many-hued design, has made the window draperies and furniture coverings logical places for decoration.

Most of the modern printed fabrics come from Paris, where the greatest artists of the new art movement have lent their skill to this work. Not only a novel arrangement of color and designs but gay figures amid branching foliage may be seen. One piece shows fishermen in a stream, another discloses a promenading couple. These are, to be sure, subjects found in older prints, but there is a world of difference in the treatment.

A bit of human psychology is sometimes disclosed in the choice of these modern prints. Women with a flair for brilliant color or novel design in their costume often buy the kind of drapery material that is suggestive of the fabric they might choose for a dress. In fact, some feminine patrons buy very decorative prints to be made up into costumes. The reverse of this interesting sidelight upon women's ways is that sometimes a dress fabric design created by Paul Poiret in Paris is afterward used for room decoration.

THE recent exhibition of the Keramic Society of New York at the Museum of Natural History is suggestive of the part that color now plays in household pottery, especially teapots and tea sets. Not that Wedgwood, Lowestoft or Derby ware and their modern followers will be forgotten, but those who want the newer color note in china and pottery for their homes may now have their desires gratified.

The work of most of the members of the Keramic Society had one important quality of good art, and that was an air of delight in its execution. Accomplishment in any art is hard work, but it is greater art when it looks unlabored. The charm of a sketch is that it appears as if the artist has had a wonderful time doing it. Many of the plates and teapots and creamers in this exhibit carried their polychrome decoration in that spirit.

This use of color in a playful and almost amusing manner was illustrated in a tea set by Nina Hatfield, where Chinese vermilion, a color beloved by all artists, was employed in a seemingly naïve manner. In this set the centre of the plates was decorated with outline drawings in vermilion, green, yellow ochre and black, suggestive of peasant drawing. Scenes of old New York, such as the Broadway of early days and the Dutch City Hall with its tall peaked roof, were the subjects.

Another interesting example in a less unconventional and more reserved manner was a set decorated by Isabelle S. Knoblock, the design carried out in lavender, yellow, blue and green.

A significant detail of the Keramic Society exhibition was the colorful table lines which harmonized with or accented the tea sets themselves. Even the drinking glasses for the table harmonized in color with the china.

This desire for brilliant and naïve color stimulated the importation, beginning a few years ago, of peasant wares from Czechoslovakia, Italy, Spain and Brittany. Apparently the liking for gayly colored china for informal teas is growing, along with a similar development in other forms of decoration.

While formal china is still in use for dining services, tea sets are now being more generally selected with regard to the scheme of decoration of the room in which they will be used. Table linen in brilliant colors, and perhaps with touches of decoration on the edge, is also an important part of the entire effect. Sometimes the table itself reflects in a touch of painted color the dominant note of the room decoration.

The spirit of the design, as well as its color, must also be in accord with the room. A colorful tea set in the newer style would be sadly out of place in an apartment suggestive of Georgian days or the stately Empire period. Here old English china, such as Bow or Chelsea ware, would be at home. For the room with a touch of the Renaissance the delightful, rather formal designs in Italian china are appropriate. And the Spanish home of any period can have its brilliant Hispanic ware.

All this shows that happily the time is passing when a room well planned in general effect will be weakened or spoiled by the introduction of details of furnishing that bring a discordant note into the apartment.

SPAIN BUYS COLUMBUS PAPERS

Admiral of the Indies and a grandee of Spain. It sounds like the title of a painting on the walls of the Velasquez room at the Prado.

When the Duke entered that dark oak-paneled library I saw a tall, slender figure in light gray, as immaculate as the Spanish Ambassador to the Court of Pomdetaris. As a matter of fact, however, he had spent the day on his farm on the rim of La Mancha choosing the bulls for the Easter Sunday fight in the Madrid ring. La Mancha, you will recall, is the upland south of Madrid where Don Quixote tilted at his little windmills, an arid upland where, if you put your ear to the ground at night, you can hear the dry earth cracking its yellow knuckles.

Tall, slender, the eyes black, the nose a little long and the lower lip a little full, the cheeks prominent and net-worked with tiny wrinkles, which appear and disappear as he talks—thus appeared the "Excellentissimo Señor Duque de Veragua." He speaks Spanish and French. He knows no English.

"It is reported that your Grace is disposing of your Columbus archives to the country."

"I could do nothing else," he replied. "Some Americans made a very generous offer for them, but Spain has a prior right."

"Has the Government given any indication of what it intends to do with them?"

"Not as far as I know. I really can't say."

"Have you any preferences of your own regarding its disposition?"

He shrugged his shoulders and flung out his hands: "But—it is not for me to say."

An American buyer, who, according to Americans in Madrid, represented Harvard University, offered 2,000,000 pesetas (roughly $428,000) for the collection two years ago; but rather than permit it to be sold out of the country the Duke offered it to the Spanish Directory. Since the Directory could not finance its purchase for the Government, it submitted the Duke's offer to the provincial Mayors, who came to Madrid for the King's birthday celebration on May 17 last year. The Mayors made as good an offer as they could, and a price of 1,150,000 pesetas (about $164,000) was eventually agreed upon with the Duke. The raising of the money then began.

Although the Duke is playing only a passive and waiting part in the sale of his collection, he talked of it for an hour before we returned to the entrance hall, that little gallery of famous bulls and famous matadors, where he repeated the Spanish formula of farewell:

"My house is your house."

KEMAL TEACHES FARMING

over the roof, in Gazi—the conqueror. It was finished only a few weeks ago. When the President celebrated its inauguration he and his friends danced from tea time until morning in the bright-tiled waiting room.

We stopped there and drank coffee. Then, leaving his overcoat behind that he might climb more easily, the Gazi walked out into the mild Winter sunlight. All around, tiny red-roofed cottages were being finished—the first modern workmen's cottages in Turkey. The President inspected them all, peering into the windows where the doors of the rooms were locked. He ran his finger over a faulty door jamb and gave a brusque order to the carpenter in command.

We lingered in one low building where the grain of the last harvest was being sorted by machine; hastily toured the kitchens, where an odorous mass of pilaf was being cooked for the farmhands. In the unfinished parlor of the director's cottage, bowls of sour milk and slabs of flat brown peasant bread were served to us. I choked over my bowl of curds, but the Gazi ate his with democratic relish, remarking that they are good for the health.

Before climbing the hill where the pool of Marmora lies empty under the sky, we rested on the tiled roof of the director's cottage. The air about was clear and dry, a little sharp now that the sun was sinking. A herd of black cows was trailing home to the stables just across the way. A river curled silverly through the neighboring fields. From the west came the whistle of a freight train carrying lumber for building to Angora. The Gazi looked quietly down upon the scene, taking in every detail of the red-brown, sunny hills.

"It is only eight months since we began this farm," he said.

Another half hour of walking in the thick loamy soil and we were ready to return. We went back by motor, in order to pass through the portion of the farm on the other side of the railway. There were soldiers on the road from Tchiflik, Turkish soldiers wearing the tall, visored caps of khaki that have replaced the kalpak and the fez. Ranged at intervals of 200 feet, the soldiers stood at attention. The sunlight glistened on their bayonets. It is only on fine days that Mustapha Kemal Pasha rides out to his farm at Tchiflik.

The Gazi Fears Nothing

In the time of the Caliphate as many as 9,000 soldiers surrounded the gates of the seraglio when Abdul Hamid went to the mosque near by. The little Sultan would sit in his curtained carriage crouched in one corner and shivering with fear for his life. But the hero of the Turkish revolution rides with the top of his motor car down and the wind whistling about his ears. His fair hair blows a little as he lifts his hat to the sentries along the road. His blue eyes look straight ahead with that unblinking gaze to which he has trained himself. He leans back in his armchair with a faint smile, and it is perfectly clear that he has never been afraid—of death or of anything else.

The long Benz motor car sped down the road, spraying mud to right and left. Turning to climb the tall hill where the Summer residence of the Gazi will stand, the wheels of the motor car whirled helplessly in the mud and could not go forward. Mustapha Kemal sighed a little as he gave the order to turn back. Then, with the flaming Anatolian sunset behind him and his face toward the pioneer town of Angora, the Gazi spoke with a certain defiant pride:

"Everything in Turkey is in process of construction today. Roads, railroads, houses—and heads!"

NEW RACE OF HOBOES ON ROADS

tions, as was shown in a statement made by an auto gypsy encountered near Tacoma recently.

"If I live in town," he said, "I have to pay rent—$30, maybe $40. I have to buy coal and pay light bills and carfare. We have to dress better. I can keep a car for less than it costs to pay rent and buy coal. In the city my wife and children have to be cooped up in a dirty little flat. Everywhere you turn it costs money. And what do we have? A home? No, we merely rent. Now we have a car, go when we please and where we please. All we need pay for is gas."

There is no basis for estimating the number of auto gypsies, yet a fair idea of their prevalence in the West may be had by visiting the auto wrecking and used-car sections in Los Angeles. In this area of several blocks near the heart of the city will be found hundreds of old cars bearing the license plates of other States. Follow the highways of the State and the same thing holds true. Old cars from almost every State are observed, particularly in the tourist camps, which have been converted into camps of refuge. The irony of the situation appears when we remember that these camps were generally donated by the towns and business associations as welcome spots for the genuine tourist, who, because of the auto gypsies, now avoids them.

If the Pacific Coast is burdened with auto gypsies more than is any other section of the country, must the climate be held altogether accountable? While the climate has its attractions, there is also the matter of advertising, which is equally important. On the Western Coast they are too anxious to tell the world about it. Even of the ink that is sold here they proclaim: "Made in California, under the best climatic conditions in the world." There is no objection when this salesmanship brings in tourists and investors; but the same net drags in other fish. The pauper likes sunshine as well as does the prince—and probably needs it more, for in the cold clime he has not the means to buy comforts. So well is this campaign carried on that all types are moved to come, "rich man, poor man, beggar man, thief." Though they are not all welcome, they are not easily weeded out.

Many hard things are said about auto gypsies. Since they have become the bane of town and countryside, this is only to be expected. Like the older hoboes they are displacing, these newcomers often help themselves to food and fuel along the way. They invade fields, orchards and chicken coops. If wood is scarce they may even take lumber from vacant buildings, and cut down fence posts. Such behavior, even on the part of a few of their number, throws a shadow of suspicion over all migrating families. On the other hand, the auto gypsy is often blamed for offenses against property of which he is not guilty. The tourist who pays his way is rarely suspected. If he does offend, the accusing finger will generally be pointed at the auto gypsy, who already has a reputation.

The new era in travel has offered restless workers a pleasant escape from the tyranny of factory whistles and alarm clocks.

SPAIN BUYS THE PAPERS OF COLUMBUS

Duke of Veragua, Turns Over His Treasured Documents To the State

By CLAIR PRICE

MADRID.

IN every bull ring in Spain they know the white and red badge of the Duke of Veragua's herd. This article, however, is concerned not so much with the fighting bulls, for which the Dukes of Veragua have been famous for more than a hundred years, as with the letters and other documents of Columbus, from whom the family's descent has been traced for more than four hundred years.

It is a little difficult deliberately to turn your back on the blood, sand and sunshine of Spain's national sport and to contemplate instead the fragile paper and parchment contents of a steel box in the electric-lit vaults of the Bank of Spain. But Veragua bulls are nothing new, while the contents of that steel box in the Bank of Spain are at this moment in process of sale to the Spanish Nation for preservation as a national monument.

Of the forty-two undisputed signatures of Columbus now in existence, fifteen are in that steel box. Ten of them are affixed to letters which Columbus wrote from Seville to his son, Diego. Four are affixed to letters written to Father Gaspar Gorricio, the Carthusian monk at Seville who acted as Columbus's lawyer. One is affixed to the navigator's will. The will is signed "Christo Ferens," but the letters are signed with the acrosticlike cipher of seven letters which Columbus customarily used in addition either to his name or to his title of Admiral:

.S. A .S.
X M Y
Xpo FERENS

Ferdinand and Isabella were expanding the kingdoms of Castile and Aragon into the powerful Spain of the sixteenth century by stamping out every trace of religious dissent, and Columbus's cipher is regarded by authorities as attesting his religious orthodoxy. Taking the line "X M Y" as the initials of the words, and the line "S A S" as the final letters, the entire cipher is usually interpreted to read: "Salve Christus, Maria, Yosephus."

Ninety-seven original letters and documents are in that steel box in the vaults of the Bank of Spain; fifteen of them written and signed by Columbus himself; thirty-six of them written to Columbus or given him for presentation to others by Ferdinand and Isabella; two written to Columbus by Isabella; ten written to Columbus's son, Diego, by Ferdinand; six to Columbus's grandson, Luis, by the Emperor Charles V; one to the third Duke of Veragua by Philip IV, and some written to Columbus and his early heirs by Kings, Cardinals, royal treasurers and officials in the Indies. Many of those addressed to Columbus bear marginal notes in his handwriting.

The steel box contains a small portion of the personal files of Columbus himself, his son, Diego, and his grandson, Luis. It contains nothing like the complete files that Columbus and his son and grandson amassed during their lifetimes. These must have been very extensive. It does not even contain the scanty proportion of the original files that have survived, for the Berwick-Liria families were the accepted heirs of Columbus down to 1790 and the Duke of Berwick and Alba still has a share of the original files, which include twenty signatures of Columbus.

Legal Value Is Gone

No other collection of Columbus's own documents now exists that bears comparison with these two, both of them kept here in Madrid. Of the forty-two surviving signatures of Columbus, only seven exist outside these two collections—two of them in the national library in Madrid, two in the royal academy of history in Madrid and three in the municipal palace in Genoa.

This collection represents only a small part of the original files establishing the claims of the legal heirs of Columbus, and we must be thankful that its contents are not in worse condition than they are. Only five of the ninety-seven originals are written on stout parchment and weighted with heavy leaden seals. The rest are on paper and are now so fragile that the box in which they lie carefully wrapped is opened only under the most urgent circumstances.

Except the titles, all the claims of the legal heirs of Columbus have long been dead, and the titles are never again apt to be called in question. This mass of fragile paper is no longer of any actual legal value to the heirs. Its only remaining value is its historical value, which is beyond calculation. As a relic of one of the supreme episodes of history, it belongs to the world.

Of all the New World that Columbus presented to Castile and Aragon "as something which was mine," the heirs today possess not one square inch. Of all the thirds, the eighths, the tenths which Columbus was promised, the heirs now possess not one peseta of income. Their empty titles they enjoy at last in peace. All the rest has gone. Yet the present heir, the fifteenth Duke of Veragua, talks of the steel box and its famous contents not only calmly, but almost with relish, as if he enjoyed both the subject and the occasional foreigner whom it brings to Madrid. In fact, when he was a boy of 14 (he is 47 now), it gave him a trip to Chicago, where his father was a guest of honor at the 1893 Exposition, at which the 400th anniversary of Columbus's first voyage was commemorated.

In his opinion, the most interesting of all the letters and documents is the original of the agreement with Columbus which Ferdinand and Isabella signed at Santa Fé near Granada on April 17, 1492. That was the source of all the glories and the misfortunes of Columbus—and of his heirs. It gave Columbus the title of Admiral and a tenth share in all the products of any lands he might discover.

The title of Admiral still remains. The Duke of Veragua is still Grand Admiral of the Indies. But neither Columbus himself nor Diego nor Luis ever succeeded in collecting the tenths to which they were entitled—to say nothing of the thirds and eighths which Columbus was promised in later agreements.

The dispute dragged on so interminably that Luis finally sent it to arbitration and, in return for renouncing his thirds and eighths and tenths, he accepted for himself and his heirs two estates in the New World, one in the Central American province of Veragua, the other in La Vega of Santo Domingo, retaining his grandfather's title of Admiral and adding the new titles of Duke of Veragua and Marquis of La Vega and the dignity of a grandee of Spain. A little later the Veragua and La Vega estates were traded back to the Spanish crown for the island of Jamaica, which carried the title of Marquis of Jamaica. Then Luis died and the storm broke.

The Tomb of Columbus in Seville Cathedral.

The Unfortunate Luis

Luis himself has always been regarded by the heirs as one of their chief misfortunes. Not only did he renounce the enormous revenues promised to Columbus but, what was even worse, he died without leaving a direct heir, throwing the succession into litigation in which it remained for more than 200 years. Jamaica was lost to England in 1713 and there was then nothing left to fight about except the empty titles. Still the case dragged on.

It was not until 1790 that the Council of the Indies finally handed down a judgment transferring the titles from the Berwick-Liria family to the Larreategui family, and peace came at last to the heirs of Columbus.

Two hundred years of litigation have given the Larreategui family at least a legal right to the peaceful enjoyment of all the glories and misfortunes which lie in that steel box in the Bank of Spain.

If the titles had lost all their New World meaning when the Larreategui family finally won them, Don Pedro, the second head of the family to become Duke of Veragua and Marquis of Jamaica, soon invested the titles with a new and exclusively Spanish meaning. It was he who, becoming a great cattle raiser, laid the foundation of the herd that has given the name of Veragua its modern meaning.

Still Marquis of Jamaica

You may see it blazoned upon the billboards of Madrid at any time from Holy Week to November. Wherever you see the words "Corrida de Toros" splashed in huge letters along the top of a Madrid wall you will see not far below it the name of Veragua in equally big letters and a little farther below, in letters of equal size, the names of the matadors. If you stop to read it you will find that it promises you "eight bulls, colors red and white, from the Excellentissima Senor Duque de Veragua."

When you enter the modest palace in the Calle de San Mateo, in which the present Duke lives, you will find the entrance hall lined with scores of small framed paintings of famous bulls and famous matadors. I passed through that entrance hall the other day and into the library to wait for the Duke, and it all came back to me—the breathless silence of 15,000 people as they watched the matador and the bull alone down in the centre of that sandy yellow glare; the bull, big and black and tired, his massive armored head drooping uneasily, his great horns touched with red, his shoulders hung with the blood-stained badge of his herd and with drooping darts that rattled against each other as he pawed the sand; the matador, slight and bare-headed and nimble as a shadow, spreading his red cloth and stamping his foot. "Eso! Entra! O e e e e!"

Old titles rarely die. The Duke of Veragua is still Marquis of Jamaica.

"The Auto Hobo Has Arrived—With His Family."

A NEW RACE OF HOBOES TAKES THE ROAD

"Hitch Hikers" and Auto Gypsies Have Replaced the Old "Blanket Stiffs" Who Rode Free on the Railroads

By HELS ANDERSON

...ype hobo is a child of the road, by which he was created. So responsive is he to the nature of roads that in no way can routes of travel or the modes of travel be changed without touching the life and habits. Always the road determined whether wanderers should be many or few, whether their travels should be near or far, as well as the pace and manner of their movements. Always it has offered prodigious an avenue of escape from life's burdens. The more numerous and the better the roads, the more inviting the invitation to fly from unpleasant things of life.

...ost conspicuous and romantic of the hoboes was the "blanket stiff," who followed the early trails westward and crowded the frontier to the ocean. Like other pioneers, the "blanket stiff" has all but vanished. He it was who built the railroads, or by whom they were financed. It was the brawn of this pioneer worker that built them. Once built, the railroads spelled the doom of the old-style hobo and created in his stead a train rider.

As the railroad eliminated the hobo with his bundle, so a new kind of road, the paved highway, and a new mode of travel, the automobile, threaten the existence of the train-riding hobo. The "blanket stiff's" successor, who is now building great stretches of motor roads, is likely to yield to a new variety of wanderers. The fact is that the automobile tramp has already arrived.

Old Hoboes Took Risks

Hoboes of the old school took great risks. They courted danger. For them the road was a checkerboard of lights and shadows. There were adventure and hardship, hungry days and bedless nights. Then, too, there were hilarity and feasting. It was a man's game from beginning to end, and only men played it. If women ventured on the road they were cleverly disguised. The automobile invaded hoboland to spoil all this, to make the life so attractive that it may now be followed by women and even by children. In the words of "Muggy," who has retired to the Bowery to spend his waning years, "in these days hoboing is as soft and safe as lawn tennis."

Of course, there is the other side, even for the hobbies of the new school, just as there is a shady side to every phase of human existence. The shady side of the auto tramp's life involves the burden he is casting on the rest of society in his exploitation of new avenues of travel. The old-style hobo was a social problem because he was a transient and homeless man. A few meals, a few days on the job or a few days in jail would fix him up. But the automobile has given us entire hobo families, from which a legion of social and economic problems have come.

Hoboes of the new school may be divided into two classes—the "hitch hikers" without cars of their own and the car owners. There are types in each class, ranging from the carefree hitch hiker with money in his pocket to the penniless, jobless family.

Hitch hikers are generally young people, khaki clad, with packs on their backs. Though they are arrayed for hiking they hike little, once they have learned to court favor with passing motorists. Sometimes they are honeymooners too poor to own a car and too energetic to stay at home. Again, they are young women out for experience or young men spending their vacations. In any case, they have seized their opportunity to break with conventional life and to gain a little worldly wisdom, or perhaps the thrills that their sedentary home lives deny them.

Hitch hikers occasionally work, but not seriously; nor have they learned seriously to dodge work. They pause now and then to take a restaurant job, to wash windows, mow lawns, paint signs. They are playing with life. Temporarily it may become necessary to call for help, but most of them have resources upon which they can draw. They know where they are going and how to get there. Unlike hoboes who have succumbed to the road, these have not lost their sense of direction.

The woman hitch hiker is an interesting symbol of the feminist movement. Even when stranded in some Y. W. C. A. without job, clothes or money, she is light of heart. She may have reason for her self-satisfaction, for hers is the rôle of a pioneer in what may some day be a great outdoor sport for women. She has dared to do the thing that women have longed to do; to break with taboos and to step out of the circle of thou-shalt-nots. What if for a few days one must lodge at the "Y. W." or some other institution? "For what else are such institutions made?" And triumphantly she squanders her last few dimes for post cards to send to the folks and friends back home.

A Pest in Some Towns

Then there are the wandering families, the "fly-by-Fords," the "Lizzie families," the "auto gypsies." In these we have an ancient brand of wanderers in a new guise, brought back by a new highway and a new means of travel. From all indications the auto gypsies are on the increase. They are most numerous in the West, particularly along the Pacific Coast, where food is cheap, where fuel is plentiful and where the climate is kind. In these regions they have become a pest to the towns and a trial to the cities.

We are all familiar with the stories of Coxey's "army" and other bands of homeless men that at various times have monopolized freight trains, traversing the country, begging and pillaging as they went. While these exploits were spectacular, the social problems involved were not difficult. These men could be fed and passed on, or even driven out of town. Such methods, however, cannot be applied to the wandering family, because here there are women and children to be considered. They cannot be driven and they must not be sent away hungry.

The police could swoop down on the hoboes in the old-time "jungle," or roadside camp, and they would scatter. That was considered the proper thing to do. But other methods must be found in handling the auto gypsies that crowd the camp grounds so generously provided by most towns and cities.

The life of the auto gypsy is not unlike that of the vanishing hobo. Both wander through life, and neither is averse to tarrying by the way—the only difference between the two being that the auto gypsy is a family group.

When auto gypsies come to town the usual procedure, if funds are low and food and gas are gone, is to approach some welfare agency; if there is no agency in town, then the town officials. An appeal is made for work, and in the meanwhile the family throws itself on charity. There is no choice but to care for them pending the search for a job. If no work is found, the usual thing is to stock the family with a couple of days' rations, fill their gas tank and pass them on. This is the easiest way out, and both sides have gained a point. The agency has relieved itself of another impossible family and the family has made another welfare body "come across."

The man in the case is only a hobo plus his family. Instead of leaving his family and wandering in search of a job he takes the family along. The hobo who ventures abroad alone frequently becomes a family deserter, but in the case of the auto gypsies the family cling together. It is the home that is deserted. They have shaken themselves free from all movables that cannot be carried in a car or tied on its sides. Train-riding hoboes are always restless and often radical. Auto gypsies are restless, but not radical. They only envy people with better cars.

How fare the children in this fly-by-auto life, with a dozen States to play in? Obviously there is danger of breeding pauperism as the family wanders here and there eating the bread of charity. If experience with dependency has taught us nothing more, of this we are sure: Alms rarely cure the beggar. There are other equally detrimental effects. Lingering in camps, riding in a crowded car with bags and bundles and living day after day the improvised ways of the camper may teach the child many tricks; but they are not tricks that he can use in the ordinary walks of life. He learns none of the graces, and the ordinary social duties are foreign to him. Such an experience is truly a preparation, but only for a continued life on the road.

The Truant Gypsy Child

The education of the road child is interrupted again and again as the family migrate. Often these children are out of school as much as a whole term. A glorious childhood, indeed! What plodding schoolboy wouldn't give an eyetooth to be the son of an auto tramp! But since the world we live in is not a child's world, the concern of Boards of Education need not surprise us. Already they are reaching for the truant child of the auto gypsy. Some counties in California have even mounted truant officers on motorcycles. They ride about like speed cops in search of these dodgers of the three R's.

The outstanding reasons for auto gypsies are good roads, low-price cars and cheap gas. But there are negative as well as positive explana-

BIRTH OF "LA MARSEILLAISE"

Famous French National Hymn Was Written By a Captain of Engineers in Strasbourg

By JOHN FRANCIS STEELE

ON the night of April 24, 1792, a French captain of engineers wrote the world's greatest battle song. The old City of Strasbourg was in great excitement, for the volunteers of the Bas Rhin had received orders to join Marechal Luckner's forces in the district between Lauterbourg and Basle. Mayor Dietrich of Strasbourg lamented the fact that the young soldiers had no patriotic air to sing as they marched through the streets. Burning with enthusiasm, Captain Claude Rouget de l'Isle hurried to his lodgings at the Maison Boeckel, Grande Rue, and with the aid of his violin, composed "La Marseillaise," which brought him undying fame.

The martial air dedicated to Luckner, was sung at the Mayor's house the next day under the title, "Chant de Guerre pour Armée du Rhin." It was then arranged for band and orchestra, and on Sunday, the 29th of April, it was played by the band at a review.

It had numerous titles—"Cries des Patriotes," "Hymne de Liberté à la Patrie," "Air Chéri des Patriotes"—but finally, "La Marseillaise." Its stirring, vibrant notes won instant acceptance and convention ordained that it be played by the corps of music of the Garde Nationale, the troops of the line, and each day at the mounting of the guards. The couplet, "Tremblez, tyrans, et vous perfides, &c." excited wild enthusiasm.

Mireur, a French singer, rendered it with such effect at a civic banquet at Marseilles that it was hurriedly sent to the printing press and copies distributed to volunteers of the battalion leaving for Paris. They entered Paris on July 30 singing the hymn. It swept Paris, like a flame and intensified the madness of the proletariat that culminated in a frenzied attack on the Tuileries on Aug. 10, 1792. Unwittingly Captain de l'Isle had supplied the spark for the powder; his expressed disapproval of the events of that day landed him in a prison cell, from which he was not released until the fall of Robespierre on July 28, 1794.

Louis Philippe conferred a pension upon de l'Isle. His authorship of the words has never been questioned but many others have claimed to have composed the music. However, when de l'Isle was in prison Dubois, editor of Journale de Littérature, added a seventh couplet to complete the characterization when it was being dramatized for the Fête of the Federation. Edelmann, Grétry, and chiefly, Gossec, have been credited with enriching the harmonies of "La Marseillaise" in their arrangements for pianoforte and orchestra.

Schumann Liked It

Although the vigor and dash of the chanson is characteristically French, some have declared it to be a German hymn. In F. K. Mayer's Versaillir, Berlin, 1872, an article said the tune was the same as the German folk-song, "Stand ich hohen Hergen," as sung in Upper Bavaria. The author of the article asserted he had heard it sung by an elderly woman of 70 in 1842, who informed him it was an old tune which had been taught her by her mother and grandmother. The tune also was said to exist in the Credo of a manuscript mass composed by Holtzmann in 1776, which was preserved at the parish church of Meirsburg. Subsequent inquiry on the spot proved that no such manuscript existed.

It is evident that Schumann coquetted with the air in "Faschingsschwank," used it boldly and with wonderful effect in the "Two Grenadiers," and employed it in his overture, "Hermann and Dorothea." Kotzebue, the poet, plainly disclaimed its origin as German when he called de l'Isle a "cruel barbarian" and charged him with slaying his brothers. Klopstock declared the hymn had mown down 50,000 Germans, while Goethe gave it the title of "Le te Deum Revolutionnaire."

Fetis in 1863 alleged it to be the work of Navoiille and reiterated the statement in the second edition of his "Biographie Universelle. Georges Kastner (Revue of Gazette Musicale, Paris, 1848) clearly refuted this allegation and it was finally settled by a pamphlet entitled "La Vérité sur la paternité de La Marseillaise," written in Paris, 1865, by A. de l'Isle, nephew of the composer. Precise information and documentary evidence established the authorship beyond a doubt.

At the end of a dinner at the house of General Dumouriez, after the Battle of Jemappes, de l'Isle sat by the side of the Duc de Chartres, afterward Louis Philippe, and felicitated him for his glorious part in the war. "It is not to me but to you," replied the Duke, "to whom the honor is due. To rally to battle young conscripts who had begun to lose their heads, it was only necessary to put a hat on a sword and chant in full voice, 'Allons, enfants, de la patrie'."

Rouget de l'Isle was born in 1760 in Lons le Saulnier, a picturesque little village nestling in the Jura Mountains. A stone's throw away is Montaigu, where he spent years of his youth and where now stands a bronze statue by Bartholdi erected to his memory.

When a small child he was stolen by a band of nomads and carried beyond the village. His dor aroused the household. Thus was preserved for normal citizenship one who was to embolden his country's instinct for liberty and France has proved her gratitude to this captain of engineers by immortalising his name in drama, painting and sculpture.

In his native village Rouget de l'Isle passed his last days and as he was dying said: "J'ai fait chanter le monde et maintenant je vais mourir." (I have made the world sing and now I am going to die.)

DISCOVERER OF AMPERES

IN this electrically driven age we talk glibly of "amperes," "amperemeters" and "amperage." How many people know how these terms originated? In the centre of a tiny square in the ancient Perrache district section of Lyons, France, is the monument to Marie André Ampère, the great physicist and mathematician, whose name has been given to the electric unit in acknowledgment of his many notable discoveries.

Walking along the rue Victor Hugo one comes upon it quite unexpectedly. The figure of the famous scientist rests in a huge chair. At night the lights near by are so few and so dim that it is difficult to realize that the monument they reveal so indistinctly is that of the man whose discoveries helped to make possible the brilliancy of our Broadways.

Ampère's mathematical genius was evidenced when he was a mere infant. It is said that with pebbles and bread crumbs he worked out complicated and elaborate arithmetical problems before he even knew the figures by sight. He is reputed to have said that he knew as much about mathematics at 18 as he did in the later years of his life. Quite a startling statement when one recalls him as one of the chiefest authorities on mathematics in the nineteenth century.

Ampère's most important contributions to science were the establishment of the relations between electricity and magnetism and the development of the science of electromagnetism, which followed. He wrote many interesting works on other subjects. Among them was a short treatise on gambling. In this he applied the theories of mathematics to prove that the odds were against the man who engaged in gambling habitually.

Courses for Home Study

If you are one of the many to whom circumstances have denied academic careers or who have been unable to carry them on as far as they wished; or if you want to renew your grasp of earlier studies and become familiar with them in their latest developments; if you recognize the business, professional or social handicap laid upon you by lack of broader training; if you desire to reach out to a wider culture and get more out of the worthwhile things of life—you will welcome the opportunity now offered by Columbia University. After the most careful consideration Columbia decided that, under conditions of supervision rigidly and exactly regulated, instruction of University grade could be given, away from the University. Now through Columbia's Home Study Department you may have at home the benefits of study under the personal supervision of regular members of the University teaching staff.

If You Can Not Come to Columbia Columbia Will Come to You

Columbia University Home Study Courses are genuine Columbia courses adapted to the special requirements of mail instruction. A wide range of subjects is now available, such as:

Applied Grammar
Business English
Elementary English Composition
Fundamentals of Composition
Speech Composition
Technique of the Short Story
Magazine Articles
Juvenile Story Writing
Dramatic Composition
Harmony
Composition of Lyric Poetry
Photoplay Composition
High School and College Preparatory Courses
French Italian Spanish
Greek Latin
Psychology Religion
Philosophy History
Astronomy Drafting Accounting
Mathematics Economics
Banking Business Law
Business Administration
Personnel Administration

There are many more courses available. If the subject in which you are interested is not listed above, mention it specifically when writing for information.

Courses Conducted by Regular Members of The University Teaching Staff

In every Home Study Course direct contact is maintained throughout between the student and the instructor personally. Papers are corrected and returned with the instructor's personal detailed comment. Throughout the course, the instructor guides the student's progress, offers constructive criticism of his work, makes individual adaptations and gives special assistance in his own particular problems.

Write to the University for Full Information

For Rheumatism
Thermolite

THE pain and discomfort of rheumatism yield quickly to the penetrating, vitalizing rays of Thermolite.

Heat is Nature's best relief for pain, and the healing action of sunlight has always been recognized.

Thermolite gives you radiant heat, which, unlike ordinary hot applications that heat only the surface, penetrates the tissues and relieves the most deep-seated pain. Furthermore, Thermolite heat is combined with radiant light—Nature's best stimulant.

It will be found invaluable in every home for the relief of any pain and the treatment of conditions benefited by heat.

Also, by relaxing the nerves, it relieves mental and physical fatigue and composes the body and mind for healthful rest.

Simple to operate, absolutely safe. Can be attached to any electric lamp socket.

Thermolite is not offered as a cure-all, but on its proven merits, and is endorsed by progressive physicians everywhere.

There is only one Thermolite

CHERRY BLOSSOM TIME

Joyous Season in Japan Officially Begins With the Emperor's Annual Garden Party

FLOWERS exert a great influence on the life of the Japanese, and in Japan their beauty and fragility are fully appreciated. But it is not flowers in general that are beloved, only certain special flowers, enshrined in the hearts of the people by centuries of custom. For the Buddhist idea of the preservation of animal life gradually came to apply to plant life also.

The Japanese show appreciation of the delicate, the ethereal, in nature and in art; minor tones in music; subtle gradations in coloring. They delight in flower-viewing, snow-viewing and moon-viewing parties, for, to the Japanese sense of beauty, the most beautiful objects in nature are snow, the full-moon, and the first delicate plum blossoms.

The cherry blossom is really much more the national flower of Japan than is the chrysanthemum of the Imperial crest or the delicate plum blossom, beloved of poet and scholar. The cherry blossom is the badge of the warrior, the Samurai.

During the first week of April, the single cherry trees begin to blossom, the double cherry coming into bloom during the second half of the month. The Emperor of Japan gives an annual Cherry Blossom Garden Party on April 3 at the Detached Palace in Akasaka, to which invitations are eagerly sought by foreigners. It is a ceremonious and formal affair. The American Ambassador has even a dress rehearsal at the Embassy for the people he is to chaperon.

At Mukojima, on the Sumida River, avenues of blossoming trees extend along the banks. At Koganei, along the Tamagawa (the River of Jewels) thousands of the famous double cherries make a perfect tunnel of blossoming trees for miles. Their blossoms show many gradations in color, ranging from pure white to pale pink, deep rose, pale yellow, orange and even light green.

During April, the whole city of Tokio seems to be covered with a rosy cloud of blossoms. Uyeno Park, Shiba Park and the Temple of Kwannon in Asakusa, are filled with pleasure-seekers.

At Sakurada-mon; the Cherry Gate of the Imperial Palace, guarded old green pine trees form a contrast to the cherry trees whose branches droop over the still waters of the Inner Moat, and scatter clouds of petals on its mirror-like surface.

In Uyeno Park, where the mortuary temples of the Shoguns stand, the population wanders under the blossoming trees, carrying branches in their hands; enjoying the vernal beauty; watching the side-shows; looking on at "O Kagura," the sacred temple-dance; praying in the temple, or resting and refreshing themselves at one of the little tea-houses scattered through the park.

Innocent Happiness

They trip to and fro, perched on their wooden "gets" or clogs; laugh and chatter; bow, smile, and are innocently happy. The children are dressed in their gayest clothes; the young girls wear their fresh, Spring-time kimonos, with patterns of cherry blossom on their colorful "obi," their hair, fragrant with camellia oil, shining like lacquer in the sun.

The "Daibutsu," the great Buddha, contemplates from the hilltop. High and calm in his serene repose he watches the humanity swarming below him.

Little Japanese "neesans" or maids, trip busily to and fro in the tea-houses. There are "senbei" or salt crackers and rice-cakes of pink and white, in the form of cherry blossoms. As a final touch, a salted cherry-blossom floats in your tiny bowl of tea.

In Shiba Park, the gorgeous scarlet, lacquer and gold of the Temple of the Shogun Iyeyasu contrasts with the gray-green, ancient cryptomeria trees and the delicate pink of the cherry blossoms. Shiba Park is also filled with pleasure seekers. The people seem to flow along the avenue of blossoming trees like a many-colored stream, and down every steep flight of temple steps flows a human, vari-colored waterfall. Cherry blossoms cover the park like drifted snow.

Throngs of people hurry through the huge "Aka-Mon," the red lacquer gate of the temple. From the dim interior of the temple comes the sound of music. Gorgeous carving, gilding, scarlet lacquer and many-colored frescos flash out from the dim depths and from the holy of holies gleams the golden image of Kwannon, the All Merciful, and from a side gallery comes music of flutes, reed instruments and drums.

A procession of white-robed priests enters bowing; in their hands they carry tabourets with offerings of rice, fruits, vegetables and white saké, which they will sacrifice to the gods. Bowing toward the shrine, they deposit their offerings before a priest clad in green robes. He takes them, turns and offers them to the altar; incense is lit; the drums beat; the fifes shrill. The high priest, clad in violet robe, the high black cap, the golden stole, intones a prayer. The incense curls up in blue smoke; the dim lights, the fragrant incense, the candles and the chanting of the priests seem to exert a hypnotic effect. The white-robed priests take up wooden prayer-clappers, strike them together, bow to the sanctuary, and vanish.

PHARAOH'S CURSE CLINGS STILL

ing cosmetics and perfumes and spices, and in the use of color, the skill of the Egyptians has been seldom equaled and never surpassed. It is also true that in the use of poison they were past masters. To the magician of Tut's dynasty, as to the Italian taught by Machiavelli, poison was not a weapon of murder but a step in diplomacy. In devising defenses for a tomb, a cunning barrage of deadly deposit would be regarded as we regard an electric alarm against burglars. As Queen Cleopatra well knew, no palace lacked the pharmacopoeia of death. In fact, as an Indian princess would dwell in the mosque that was to be her mausoleum, so in her final days did Cleopatra find refuge in the shrine that was to be her tomb. There she had her snakes and other instruments for facilitating mortality.

We think of poison as a bite of the serpent, a draught of arsenic in milk, a varnish on the tip of a dagger. But that is only poison in the crude. Open your Dumas and you will find one of the most remarkable forecasts in all literature.

"Go either to Aleppo or Cairo," says Monte Cristo, "and you will see people passing by you in the streets—people erect, smiling and fresh-colored, of whom Asmodeus, if you were holding on by the skirt of his mantle, would say, That man was poisoned three weeks ago; he will be a dead man in a month. * * * The poison brings on a cough, the cough an inflammation of the lungs, or some other complaint catalogued in the book of science, which, however, by no means precludes it from being decidedly mortal."

After all, there is something to be said for King Tut-ankh-Amen's attitude.

If, then, the magicians laid a curse on the excavator, it is possible that they added a deed to their words. For those who examine tombs, there is something to be said in favor of wearing gloves and a gas-mask. The archaeologist should also say his prayers. No potentate likes to be disinterred. It is contrary to etiquette.

DECORATIVE ARTS EVOLVE NEW IDEAS IN COLOR

Painted Furniture Comes Back Into Favor—Gay Hangings and Tea Sets Help Carry Out Room Harmonies

By WALTER RENDELL STOREY

BUYING chairs and tables in an unfinished state and having them decorated to suit the color scheme of their surroundings is a growing practice among home-makers who like the warmth that color in furniture gives to a room. A table lacquered in the delicate refinement of Heppelwhite, or a chair gayly reflecting the colorful peasant woodwork of Tyrol, or pieces suggestive of the painted chests and cupboards of early Colonial days may well add a touch of individuality to an apartment.

An idea prevails in some quarters that painted furniture is a little undignified and suitable only for bungalows. This is easily disproved by the fine examples now being made as well as by the choice eighteenth century pieces shown at the Leverhulme sale and exhibited at our museums. Recent archaeological finds in Egypt include wonderful examples of painted and gilded couches and chairs which suggest the ancient lineage of painted furniture.

The amateur home decorator today may have the delightful experience of going into a shop and viewing a wide range of furniture in the unfinished wood. The clean, white surfaces reflect the charm of the wood-worker's craft and have their own appeal for any one interested in furniture as something that some one has made and not merely as something one may buy. Here are found Windsor chairs and gate-legged tables of Colonial lines, dressing tables of Sheraton style and chests of drawers well-proportioned and simple in design.

Unpainted furniture in fact is now supplied in a wide choice of styles, many of them copied from or inspired by the best types of the past. The latter part of the eighteenth century—that great period of English designing when Heppelwhite and Adam and Chippendale made painted and lacquered furniture, together with other styles—has supplied examples that can be fitted into the company of the finest pieces of sophisticated cabinetwork. The delicate and subdued greens, blues and yellows, together with the flower sprays with which they embellished their painted furniture are suggested today with charming effect.

If your room needs a lighter touch, there is the great range of effects developed by French designers of the eighteenth century. They bequeathed us the popular French gray, which gives a piece finished in that hue an additional note of beauty and distinction.

Modes of Decoration

But painted furniture has prototypes much nearer home, which designers are utilising today. The early American settlers naturally painted their crudely constructed tables and chairs and heavy chests, because the use of fine woods and their finish was something which was not yet developed in pioneering communities. Some of the early pieces made in New York, Long Island and the Hudson Valley by the Dutch settlers show solid color decorated with a touch of painted ornamentation. The kas, or cupboard, found in every Dutch home of the period was generally made of pine and painted over with large and gorgeous bunches of fruits, flowers and garlands of ribbon.

The earliest pieces of American Colonial painted furniture are to be found in New England, where pieces of the seventeenth century have been discovered, with simple ornamentation of flowers and leaves applied either upon the natural surface of the wood or upon the painted surface. Sometimes the carved space of a chest had either the background of the carving painted or even the surface of the carving itself.

In no other department of home furnishing, perhaps, is there such a generally high standard of design as is shown in unpainted furniture. This may be because the decorator is one of the largest users of unfinished furniture, buying it in this form and then having it finished to meet his requirements. Another reason may be that in buying unpainted furniture the appeal must be made to the buyer's sense of form and line, since finish and decoration are perforce absent.

After one has picked out just the desired low four-poster bed or birch settee or folding breakfast table, there comes the serious question of deciding how the pieces are to be painted. Any color will not do for every piece of furniture; and, above all, the room in which the piece will be placed must be considered.

If the pieces are to be treated somewhat informally, perhaps with bright colors and gay decorations suggestive of Brittany, Norway or the Pennsylvania Dutch or Colonial days, one must not think of placing them in a room to which Sheraton mahogany has given a formal tone. In an apartment already cosmopolitan in its feeling, a piece or two of gayly painted furniture will not seem out of place. Nor will it seem unsuitable in an informally furnished living room that already has some bright notes of color. And the reverse is, of course, true. That piece suggestive of Heppelwhite's reserved delicacy should not be compelled to live the rest of its life among rude, although beautiful, peasant styles of painted furniture.

THOSE who viewed the collection of crotonnes and hand-block printed linens from the Paris Exhibition at the Metropolitan Museum recently did not realize, perhaps, that in many carefully decorated homes just as interesting examples of this art modestly grace windows or cover chairs or settees. And some printed linens and crotonnes, of which pieces are already being treasured in museums, may be bought in decorators' shops.

It is astonishing how much art and beauty are embodied in these fabrics of printed linen and cotton. Some of the designs that we take for granted have a longer lineage than many old families. One beautiful pattern seen recently consists of a graceful branch bearing exotic flowers and birds on its stems. The design is effectively developed in lavender and light olive green against a background of blue reminiscent of Persia. This hand-made print on linen was inspired by an Indian cotton print of the eighteenth century, and reflects much of the Oriental style so favored in England nearly three hundred years ago.

While some of the hand-block prints are made from blocks cut a century ago by Egyptian or Persian craftsmen, patterns are also produced today by American designers to meet the decorative demand for designs that have not been previously used. All kinds of beautiful things serve as inspiration to the creators of these patterns. Perhaps a Chinese vase will give a motif. In one case a picture by the great Dutch painter of flowers, Jan Van Huysum, supplied the inspiration.

Machine Work Limited

Although machinery has done wonders in lessening the amount of labor in the making of printed cottons and linens, it has not been able to replace the craftsmanship found in the finer sorts of prints. In machine printing, for example, not more than twelve colors can be used. In hand-work the number of hues is limited only by the cost. The slight irregularities in the pattern and the delicate variation of tone noticeable in hand-work give a character to a piece which gives pleasure, although a machine print which is almost absolutely perfect may satisfy at first glance.

In some hand-made fabrics a separate wooden block must be cut for a small part of the pattern, and those blocks must be placed in exactly the right position on the fabric; then, with a fine thread of material, just the right amount of color is impressed upon the cotton or linen. This method has been employed since the first half of the seventeenth century, when the hand-block process of printing on linen and cotton was introduced into Europe from the Orient.

In India, where these decorative fabrics originated, the designs were at first drawn and painted by hand. The early examples, brought to England by ships of the East India Company, were highly prized. The block process was a later development, an early compromise with trade for a greater output. Slow and laborious as it still is, the block print method allowed an art to develop, from the making of a single piece for an Indian Rajah to the furnishing of Erastus D. Palmer, born a year ter than Rimmer, is the exponent excess in mildness. His "White aptive" is delicately null in her ntle modeling, yet to compare it ith contemporary French and Ital-n sculpture in the same kind is to e that it has its personal stamp nd is far from being the work of a opyist who copies at second hand. s great defect is that nothing stirs contour of form or in the region thought where activity immedi-tely is passed to the sensitive line a feature or a gesture. Its next reatest defect is the physical frail-y apparent in the narrow, con-racted chest and passive muscles of he waist, those muscles that record truly the will to live in the normal ody. Its principal virtue is a cer-tain "sweet, attractive kind of grace," a naturalness that exists without ostentation, and is free from neo-classic pose.

Turning to Hiram Powers and his symbolic figure of California, it is apparent, in spite of the conventionality and coldness of the modeling, that neo-classicism with the early Italianates of this country at least could lead to a certain realization of what would have been avoided by a well-trained Greek. The educated Greek certainly never would have permitted a nude figure to suggest physical frailty or abnormality, and unlike Palmer's little Captive, the "California" gives more than a suggestion of that "uplift" of the breath which has been so much the subject of recent discussion by students of Greek art, and is notable for the broad and simple plane of the chest. Nevertheless, the little Captive, skilfully carved by the ex-carpenter, is a pleasanter thing to look at, more human and personal, and perhaps in her defective proportions more radically right.

A Bust of Andrew Jackson

Somewhere in the Museum, not included in the sculpture section of the wing, is a bust of Andrew Jackson, which is given, correctly, no doubt, to Hiram Powers, although no signature appears upon the photograph. If we were to rely entirely upon the evidence of the sculptor's allegorical figures we should swear that he could never have done anything so full of character and the life of the mind, eloquently insisting upon the salient traits by which Old Hickory is known, his fearlessness and aggressiveness, his iron will, his masterly generalship in political battle, his intrinsically romantic temper. As a matter of fact, Powers showed his ability more clearly in his busts of men than in the nudes which he himself compared favorably with the Venus de Medici. Mr. Taft says in his history of American sculpture that while more accomplished sculptors followed Powers, "few indeed down to our own day have produced more faithful, vivid portraits of men."

Other early men are represented in the wing, and the line is carried sequently through the middle periods to the present time. The largest number of exhibited works, forming a kind of memorial group, is given to Saint-Gaudens, whose mantelpiece in Numidian marble, made for the Cornelius Vanderbilt house, is at one end of the first sculpture room. This mantelpiece was carried through in collaboration with John La Farge, who designed the mosaic panel above the shelf. It is a performance of great historic interest, marking as it does a period of daring alliance between architect and sculptor. Saint-Gaudens describes the character of the enterprise in his Reminiscences, which are quoted in the current Bulletin:

"Soon after taking the Thirty-sixth Street studio, Mr. George B. Post gave me an order to make all the models for the great entrance hall in the residence of Mr. Cornelius Vanderbilt, which the architect was just about to erect on the corner of Fifty-seventh Street and Fifth Avenue. The undertaking required not only the two caryatids for the monumental mantelpiece and the mosaic that surmounted it, but as well the superintendence of the models for all the wood carving in the hall, which was enormous, besides the creating of medallion family portraits to be introduced in certain of the panels. For some reason these were not entirely completed. Those that I did do were the portraits of young Cornelius and George Vanderbilt, Gertrude Vanderbilt, now Mrs. Harry Payne Whitney; William H. Vanderbilt and Cornelius Vanderbilt, the first of the family. Besides these, I, with my brother, Louis Saint-Gaudens, was associated with Mr. La Farge in composing the models for the superb ceiling that he designed for the main dining room. Mr. Post evidently had the same confidence in me that I had in myself. Wherefore I undertook the task in the belief that here again I was going to reform things in matters of that kind in this country, and worked with great earnestness at my commissions, particularly at the two caryatids, despite the fact that the absolute necessity for the completion of this work before a given date, its extent and its complexity, added perhaps more than anything else to the distressing confusion of my affairs that prevailed during these years."

"Death and the Sculptor"

At the other end of the room from the historic mantelpiece is an almost equally historic relief by Daniel C. French, which at the Columbian Exposition moved hearts and impressed the minds of all who saw it. This relief, "Death and the Sculptor," was undertaken as a memorial for Martin Milmore. Its technical appeal lies in the mystery of blurred forms modeled with clear understanding but with an impressionistic concealment of sharp edges and angles. Its emotional appeal is deep and fervent, with, nevertheless, the restraint imposed by an aristocratic mental attitude. After more than thirty years of familiarity with reproductions of this relief, long enough to kill any enthusiasm for a mediocrity, the essential force of its living beauty affirms itself as strongly as at the first seeing.

Between these salient features of the collection one may traverse an enlivening diversity of achievement. Here are J. Q. A. Ward's studies for the horse in the equestrian statue of General Thomas, heading a long list of excellent work by American ani-

"The Fish and the Man," by Charles W. Hawthorne.

UNCHANGING CIRCUS

League of Nations and the great war look very shy and small.

"Yes, essentially, it is the same; all color, noise, chaos, confusion, abandonment: so it starts and so it ends; you are prepared for anything, and take everything that comes.

"It is the same. The circus is unchanged; though it may be that those chariot horses from Sicily, Spain and Cappadocia, which entranced Domitian and Nero, did not 'foxtrot,' 'goosestep' or 'Charleston' round the arena as they do today in the circus at the transported Garden. It may be that the circus of Caesar's day did not so much as conceive of a boxing kangaroo, much less realize it as an actual feature of the performance (Oh, where are Dempsey and Carpentier rolled in one before that delicious sight!).

"It may be that in the circus of Hannibal's day there were no bears on scooters, no elephants on roller skates, and a team of forty-odd elephants playing football (or would not Hannibal have stayed home from the Punic Wars for such a sight?) and yet, the circus is not really different. It is the great leveler. You go in palpitating and come out pulverized — physically, emotionally. Man, woman, child, it is all the same; you find your unfamiliar level. All chaos—all ecstasy!

What Nero Missed

"It is only that there are additions: that fashions and features change outside and a few creep in to mingle with the changeless. I cannot help regretting that Nero never had the indescribable joy of seeing those French poodles disguised as race horses; that the equestrian 'Charleston' was not a feature of the circus of Tiberius' day; for if these fierce gentlemen had seen these things the face of history might have been transformed as the circus n[illegible]

What a cha[illegible]man history Gibbon might h[illegible]ten had those arenas of old, smelling of blood and sawdust, included anything so indescribably fantastic as the freaks who parade the day round at the Garden! What a theme for his long and somnolent sentences! Surely the Roman circus had nothing so horrific to show as that collection of nightmares. Tirelessly, good-humoredly they parade round and round the arena at intervals of the circus proper, recurring and again recurring, like a Greek chorus.

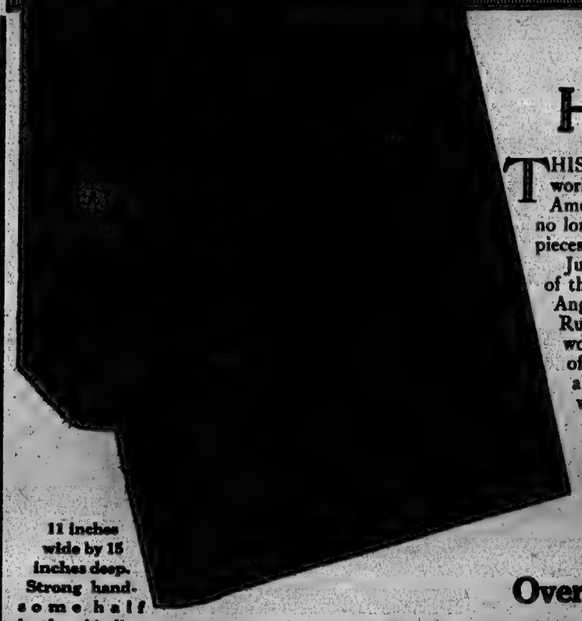
Major Mite, smaller far than De La Mare's "Midgetina," with his placid grin, reaching from ear to ear, his striking composure and his immaculate dress suit, or the "Rocky Mountain" that follows hard on the heels of Major Mite, in that processional, for sheer breadth and massiveness, looking for all the world like one of those Miltonic warriors who assisted in Pandemonium, the high capital of Satan; midget bushmen from the backwoods—half bird, half beast; mammoth ladies of uncontrollable dimensions, bursting through a single gossamer frock, followed up by gentlemen who look like walking stilts; ambassadors from Mars (one falls back on thee terminology of the circus, for there truly is nothing else on earth like them), and Krao, the Minning Link, who should really never have been found.

WHEELBARROW RIDES

WHEN rickshaws and sedan chairs fail, count on the humble wheelbarrow. It's not so bad as it sounds, even though it hasn't rubber tires. In Peking and even in sophisticated Shanghai the wheelbarrow is a favorite conveyance among the Chinese. The wheels are of solid wood, and every jolt the coolie gives makes the bones rattle.

In Tsingtao in pre-war days the Germans, with their passion for efficiency, determined to stop the squeaking, and fined every coolie whose wheelbarrow was too musical.

FAMOUS PAINTI[illegible]



11 inches wide by 15 inches deep. Strong handsome half leather binding beautifully embossed and decorated in gold.

In Two Large, Handsome Volumes

THIS magnificent work contains actual color reproductions of the world-famous "Old Masters" which thousands upon thousands of Americans yearly travel all over Europe to see and study. You no longer need leave your own home to see these famous masterpieces. We bring them to you—to your very doorstep.

Just think of possessing in actual colors a beautiful reproduction of the Mona Lisa—the most famous picture in the world—"The Angelus" by Francois Millet; "The Judgment of Paris" by Rubens; "Venus and Adonis" by the great Titian; Turner's wonderful Marine Pictures, the famous portrait of King Philip of Spain by the immortal Velasquez, and nearly 100 others—almost equally famous—the choice of the entire art-loving world!

It's just as though you visited the Louvre and Luxembourg Galleries in Paris—the National, Tate and Guildhall in London, the Wallace Collection, and many others—yet you don't even have to stir from your chair. And instead of seeing the pictures once and then hurriedly, as you do in visiting the galleries, you can have them to own and live with year in and year out.

Over $5,000,000 Worth of Paintings

The paintings in this great collection are those which are talked of and discussed by intellectual people everywhere—paintings with which every well-educated person should be familiar. They represent canvases valued at more than Five Million Dollars.

There could be no more elevating, pleasurable way to spend leisure hours than in studying the works of these masters—like fine books, they become dear old friends in whose companionship you will find untold inspiration and happiness.

This is true whether you have ever seen the originals or not. If you have, these volumes will enable you to live over and over again your visits to the great galleries—if you have not seen the originals, they will open up an entirely new field of almost ecstatic pleasure.

And the children—don't let them grow up without the refining influence of these great painters—give them an opportunity to learn and appreciate the real and the beautiful. Art is as much of a requisite to a liberal education as music—nay, more so, for every one with eyesight can find a wonderful satisfaction in art, and not every one has an ear for music.

"Famous Paintings" is more than a mere collection of pictures. It is published in co-operation with Cassell & Company, the famous London publishers. The paintings are reproduced on a specially prepared canvas paper which perfectly conveys the color values of the original. Each one is mounted by hand on heavy white art board, which can easily be detached for framing, and the whole is handsomely bound in two large volumes—11 x 15 inches. The introduction is by G. K. Chesterton, and each picture is accompanied by a lucid explanation of the motif of the painting itself and a brief sketch of the life of the artist.

You not only become thoroughly acquainted with the character of each man's work, but you learn the chief points about the artist's life and habits, so that you'll be able to talk about them with authority. It is a comprehensive reference library ever at your elbow. You'll be proud to possess such beautiful volumes, and proud to show them to your friends.

Enthusiastic Comments From Owners

"'Famous Paintings' have been the source of much pleasure to the members of our family and a number of our friends. Am very proud of them."
Hugh Parks, Franklinsville, N. C.

"My family and I have had much pleasure in viewing the splendid paintings represented in the volumes. I consider the set of great educational value in the right appreciation of the beautiful in art."
H. H. Price, D. D., Aurora, Nebraska.

"The volumes have brought to me, as they will do any one, many happy moments. Their educational value in the highest and best sense is immense."
S. G. Heiskell, Former Mayor of Knoxville, Tenn.

"Surely these volumes are exceptional, as well for the beauty and artistic merit of subjects selected as perfection in reproduction. To be in possession of such a collection of rare and distinguished paintings so faithfully copied in beautiful coloring and effects is a privilege."
(Mrs.) Clara B. Whinnery, Findlay, Ohio.

THE SPRING BOATCLEANING

Owners of Small Craft Spend Many Loving Hours Preparing for the Summer

MARCH rains washed away Winter's snow, high winds backed by increasing warmth of the sun have dried up the ground and thousands of amateur boatmen in the metropolitan and near-by districts are encouraged to strip the canvas overcoats from their pleasure craft preparatory to fitting out the annual Spring launching. Now shipyards, sheltered beaches and snug coves of Great South Bay, Long Island Sound, Staten Island and New Jersey are a-bustle. They present scenes that are recognized by watermen as true harbingers of Spring.

This early preparation recalls a book written by an enthusiastic angler, scarcely a third of which was devoted to actual fishing, the bulk of it being descriptive of preparation for the game with its accompanying happy anticipations. So with the small boat owner, the family man who has carried his love for the water over into middle age and is innoculating his small sons and daughters with the salt sea virus. To him more than half of the enjoyment of boat owning lies in the labor of lavishing loving care upon the craft. Most of this care is demanded in the latter part of March and the beginning of April.

Sport for Sport's Sake

This sort of boat owner is numbered by the thousands in cities, towns and villages along the North Atlantic seaboard and millions of dollars are spent every year in catering to his hobby. So rapidly has the demand for small pleasure craft spread within the past decade that many shipyards have put on the market standardized boats, sail and motor, or a combination of the two known as auxiliary. Reasonable buyers, those who know boats and those who are still on the threshold of their sailing experiences, can now obtain safe models of various types. The expense of engaging a naval architect to design a suitable boat may be dispensed with, excepting, of course, in the matter of a racing craft or a boat to be used for a particular or unusual purpose.

The "old-timer," who has had a boat for years, is usually an amateur in the literal sense of the word, a lover of sport for sport's sake. He knows every inch of his boat and holds her many qualities in affectionate regard. In the Spring he does his own work in preparing her for the launching, assisted, perhaps, by the boys and girls of the family and maybe by some of "junior's" chums, who get their reward in sailing in "the old tub" when Dad is plugging away at the office in the city. Just how an old hardshell goes about his Spring task may be enlightening to those who furled sail or cranked a motor for the first time last year.

The little vessel lies on a sheltered beach in a cove of Great South Bay. All Winter she has been protected from the weather by a stout canvas tarpaulin stretched over a ridge pole, held up by A-struts. The old-timer, thoroughly versed in seamanlike methods, had put this frame together with screws and hooks in preference to the landlubber's nails, so he has no difficulty in taking it apart without splitting or otherwise wrecking it. Once apart the pieces are stored in the boathouse for use next Fall.

It is a sunny day, so the tarpaulin is spread on the ground for a thorough drying before being rolled, tied up and put into the storehouse. The boat, an auxiliary, presents a naked appearance without her Winter clothes. The mast, boom, gaff, standing and running rigging and sails had been taken off last Fall; at odd times in March these parts of the boat were carefully gone over. They were brought out and laid in the sunlight in advance of the time when they would be taken aboard again.

The owner climbs aboard, opens the companion slide and hatchway forward and all the portlights, permitting the welcome sun to flood the interior. Then he makes a fire in the galley stove to chase away the dampness of Winter. Now comes the cleaning process. With warm water and soap, the cabin is thoroughly scrubbed. Of course there will be places where the old paint is spotched, rubbed off or blistered, but these blemishes will be attended to later.

Next the owner goes over the side and takes a long searching look at the bottom of the hull. He traces it seam by seam. If there are barnacles, a wire bristle brush and a scraper backed by elbow grease will remove them. Often the old paint here and on the superstructure will have to be burned off and then sandpapered to a smoothness unknown to the amateur painter on a job ashore. Some seams there will be from which the cotton—oakum is seldom used on small boats—will be stringing forlornly in the March wind. These call for recalking. A great deal of the hull will need to be reputtied and all of it repainted.

On deck, the companion slide may have to be scraped of old varnish, the skylight refinished and the bright work furbished. It is a good plan not to do any painting or varnishing until the sun is well up in the morning and to stop before the sun goes down in the afternoon. This assures a dry surface and also gives the varnish a chance to set before the dew falls. The cabin will demand just as much repainting and fixing as suits the taste of the owner. White picked out with mahogany trim is, perhaps, as satisfying as any.

The amateur will discover among other things that paint for the top sides and paint for the bottom are two different things. A boat may, of course, be painted any color that appeals to the owner and some queer color combinations are afloat around New York, but whatever the general color scheme the bottom paint, which is in constant contact with salt water, must be one of several mixtures known as "anti-fouling" paint. The major part of the painting, scraping and varnishing done, the owner steps the mast and puts the rigging into place.

Power Craft Most Popular

In auxiliaries or straight motor boats there is the engine to consider. Sail boats are becoming fewer in number every year; even the auxiliary is giving way to the gasoline motor craft. With a comparatively new motor, one that has been well cared for and is known to be in condition, a general cleaning to get rid of accumulations of grease, oil and dirt, overhauling of the important connections and installation of a new set of batteries may be all that is required. But few motor-boat owners can satisfy themselves with so cursory a method. To begin with it is not seamanlike. It is too much like taking a chance on a hidden trouble that may burst into activity in the middle of Long Island Sound or ten miles off shore with wind and wave rising every minute.

The wise owner dismantles his motor every Spring. It is not much work—it is part of his hobby, in fact, and affords him the best possible opportunity to satisfy curiosity regarding the internal construction of the engine.

Oil and grease should be applied as the engine is put together again, and, particularly, the reverse gear should not be overlooked. It will need packing with hard grease and, perhaps, tightening or readjusting.

Launching is a ceremony in which the individual owner will be governed by surroundings—the distance from the water, the manner in which the boat has been shored up during Winter, the presence or absence of a marine railway and other details.

"Why Was I Fired?"

"I've worked my head off for them people!" exclaimed Jones to his wife. "Yet the very minute business gets slack, out I go!"

"AND THIS IS THE SECOND JOB YOU'VE LOST, DEAR," answered his wife sorrowfully. "We're surely up against hard luck."

A few hours before this conversation, Jones was himself the subject of a conversation between the business manager and his assistant.

"I don't like to let Jones go," the manager said. "Married man with a wife to support. But I simply must. He's willing enough and faithful, too. But his English: You know how he talks, Bill. Maybe he didn't go to school long enough—but if that's the case why doesn't he try to improve himself? After hearing him talk to customers and hearing him dictate letters I can understand why his sales record stands still. He's not a very big asset to the house and it would never do to advance him."

Don't Be a Job Hunter

And so, Jones, because he was careless in his use of English, like many another man and woman before him, not only fails to advance, but is ACTUALLY REDUCED TO A JOB-HUNTING STATE—a condition he would never have reached if he had spent a few minutes of his spare time every day improving his speech by a little study.

Use Your Spare Moments

This line of easy study places in your hands the systematized knowledge that others go to colleges for years to obtain—and sometimes leave without.

mallers. The ideal figures which are firmly established upon close study of nature show how far we have traveled from the little Captive and the California. Here is the culminating triumph in the splendor of the nude—the "Volupte," by Arthur Lee, a figure that breathes and moves with the great deep inspiration of Greek art in its golden days. Here is the lighter but charming conception of the nude that makes Edward MacCartan's garden figures so much more than merely decorative accessories. Polasak's "Pastoral," with its burly piper and loud-singing children, strikes a very different pagan note from the piping Pan of Saint-Gaudens and the dancing Bacchante of MacMonnies. Eugenie Shonnard's "Breton Peasant" is impressive by the indomitable obstinacy of the mouth, a feature toward which the whole creation moves. There are moments of vivacity and resilience as various sculptors submit themselves to the test of the dance: Malvina Hoffman's "Pavlowa Gavotte," Renee Prahar's "Dancing Woman," Bessi Potter Vonnoh's dancer daintily lifting voluminous skirts. Mahonri Young's figures in honor of labor are here.

Dignity of Composition

A special word should be given to Edmund Austen Stewardson, a sculptor who died before he was 30, but had time to produce the beautiful "Bather," with its learned anatomy, its expression of intelligence, and its refinement and dignity of composition.

Many a special word would be needed, however, to give the objects in this stimulating gallery even as much of their due as lies within a reviewer's province. Later opportunities to visit the new wing will include opportunity for something of the kind.

Japanese art has placed itself definitely upon the American map. Not with Ukoiye prints or Korin lacquers or paintings from the early periods, although these have and never can lack their ardent connoisseurs in this country. The Japanese art that is making itself felt in the exhibition rooms today, however, belongs entirely to the present. From much of it the past is intentionally and sometimes violently thrust out; in a little of it the past lingers under a delicately fashioned mask of modernity.

With a number of Japanese painters in the exhibition of the Independents; with Foujicka recently at the Valentine Dudensing Gallery; Kuniyoshi last week at the Daniel Gallery; Kyohei Inukai taking the Isaac N. Maynard Prize at the National Academy of Design; the modern Japanese painters at the Kleycamp Galleries, and widely scattered examples of work by Japanese artists exhibiting in various parts of the country, a special interest attaches to the importation of Professor Serge Elisseev's volume on contemporary painting in Japan, where the author has lived and studied for many years, and hence is able to see his subject in a perspective close enough for detail and sufficiently remote for a generalized impression.

After a few preliminary pages on the development of Japanese art down to the middle of the nineteenth century, when a school of Occidental art with professors who taught painting in accordance with European models and European books was established under Shogun Government, Professor Elisseev describes the beginnings of the new movement toward Europeanizing the Japanese style. Many European influences already had filtered into the country by way of the Port of Nagasaki, the port through which the Dutch were permitted to enter their goods and through which passed the oil paintings that made so deep an impression upon the youth of the eighteenth century. It was not, however, until the restoration of 1868, when the young Emperor pushed European principles and methods as far and as rapidly as possible for the advancement of his nation, that the various streams of tendency previously fed by individual enterprises united in a great volume of activity drawing toward Western ideals.

Keeping Art at Home

Among the artists who played a direct part in leading the young schools of Japan away from their traditional methods were Charles Wirgman of The London Illustrated News and a number of Italians who taught painting, sculpture and decorative art at the School of Fine Arts established by the Japanese Government in 1876. In 1878 Fenollosa arrived at Tokio, and his influence, that of a man of taste and a connoisseur in the arts, was used to encourage appreciation in Japan of the ancient masterpieces which were falling into a pitiable state through neglect. It was under his influence that the Government passed a law classing works of art as national property and prohibited the sale by convents and temples of works of art belonging to them, allowing subsidies for the conservation of such treasures.

Okakura Kakuzo, who was professionally associated with Fenollosa on a European trip, threw his influence on the side of the Chinese and Japanese traditions in painting, and the usual conflict between the old and the new inevitably raged as the followers of Western art grew more numerous and returned from European study to teach others what they themselves had learned.

Professor Elisseev traces the ramifications of the different schools and the growth of exhibitions, a feature of the field of art unknown in ancient Japan, whose artists avoided rather than sought contact with the general public. The characteristic traits of modern Japanese painting are analyzed and the analysis supported by descriptions of individual artists and their pictures.

At the close the author finds that new influences prevail, and while many may desire that the painters of Japan should continue their purely national art without adopting the newly found technique of oil painting, to expect them to stand aside from the methods and ideas of countries with which they now are in close relation is to expect an impossibility. Nevertheless, he adds a sympathetic and encouraging passage to the effect that while European realism has had its influence in modern Japanese art, the most recent development of the latter is toward the idealism which always has been at the root of pictorial conception in Japan, and the conviction that "reality is modified by all that which in man goes beyond the real."

The exhibition now open at the Keppel Galleries, drawings and etchings by Karr Eby, includes a number of recent things that show the movement or tendency in the direction of emphasis upon the essential and elimination of what is non-essential and, in consequence, debilitating to the force of the design. About the hardest lesson for a young, sincere and talented artist to learn is that the incident or detail, which, in itself, is delightful and interesting and calls for the exercise of his best technical skill, may practically destroy the impressive effect of his composition. That Mr. Eby has learned or is learning this hard and sharp lesson is apparent. His "Porthleven" tells the story of his deep initiation and final grasp of the important element in his subject. The important element here is the tremendous lift of the ocean in its attack upon the strongly fortified coast. The rocks that stand as defense against this terrific onslaught are black as iron and corrugated in fissures and ridges. The artist could not forbear to show us this rugose impregnable mass with some detail of feature. His point caressed the small, courageous buildings that raise their heads just beyond the danger of the flooding tides. But in his treatment of the ocean itself he has pruned and reduced his line to the furthest limit of economy, and with his synthesis achieves the effect of grandeur and elemental force.

In the neighboring plate, "Isles of Shoals," the sea approaches with a more civilized gesture, not as a foe, but with an ardent swiftness, a reader falling back. The artist has made us feel the shallower character of the waves, the lightness of the cresting foam. Here also he has used a stringent economy. The two plates well may stand as a turning point in his career, the important moment that found him able to dispense with superfluities.

Not all subjects call for such stripped methods. The charming plate, "The Curé's Garden—Aries," probably would lose not a little of its charm if all the pretty circumstance of planting and blooming and scattering visible fragrance into the hot air were omitted. The design is compact, the detail varied and delicate, the contrast between the rugged structure and the evanescent lightness of tree and bush sensitively shown; a beautiful little plate good to live with and an undoubted joy in its associative values for those to whom the associations mean something.

Among the other plates are the war series, a number of Algerian subjects contrasting rather quaintly with the Gloucester, Cape Cod and Provincetown records; one very fine Winter landscape, "Snow Fields," in which the depth and quality of the snow are suggested by untouched spaces; one portrait plate, "Granny," a straight-sitting old English lady of the type that persists through all the modernism in the world. "Boston Stump" is a note on the tower of the Church of St. Botolph in the ancient seaport at the mouth of the Witham, which Baedeker used reassuringly to tell us was "perhaps chiefly interesting from its association with its famous namesake on the other side of the Atlantic." Mr. Eby has made it look decidedly interesting on its own account.

FOR THE GUMS

SEA FLOOR'S RAINBOW

THE mud on the bottom of the sea, instead of being black or brown, is all the colors of the rainbow. Marine deposits in either deep or shallow water at a distance of from 100 to 200 miles from the coast of the United States and of Europe are whitish, being largely composed of minute shells reduced to powder and mingled with volcanic dust and tiny mineral fragments torn away from shore by the action of waves and currents. In Arctic and Antarctic waters continental rock fragments are mixed with the other deposits.

In greater depths far from land under the Northeast Pacific the ocean floor is carpeted with clay ranging from a brick red to a reddish chocolate. This clay is soft, plastic and greasy to the touch while wet, but when dried it takes compactly, can only be broken by a hammer blow, and should make good building material. When rubbed with any hard substance the fragments become glazed and shining like earthenware, though less brittle. In this red clay minute red worms almost invisible to the naked eye are found, but whether the worms are colored by the ooze they inhabit, or whether the ooze owes its ruddy hue to them, is a question undecided by marine scientists.

Another kind of mud is of a straw color that becomes cream white when dry, when it is soft and light as ashes and sticks to the fingers like fine flour. In tropical seas at considerable distances from land mud is found of a deep-rose color shading to milky white. Nearer land this mud is gray or bluish gray.

Blue mud is only found on the bottom of an arm of the sea. The blue color is caused by organic matter and sulphide of iron. The unpleasant odor of blue mud is due to sulphuretted hydrogen.

Green mud and sand are developed along bold and exposed coasts, such as the Atlantic Coast of the Southern United States. The green-colored sand, which sparkles in the sun like pulverized emeralds, is usually found in shallower water than the green mud. Neither is discovered at less than 100 nor more than 900 fathoms.

Around islands of volcanic origin the mud varies from light gray to brown and black. Coral mud, red and white, is found, of course, near the coral reefs and islands. Along the Brazilian coast the ooze is identical with that in the Yellow Sea near the mouth of the Yangtse-Kiang, being red-brown in color and yielding the same deposits on analysis.

A United States warship taking soundings 800 miles from Cape Town brought up in brown ooze from a depth of 2,988 fathoms two long worms exactly like earthworms, except for the head. One was 26 inches long and the other 19, and both were lively. They were considered of sufficient importance to be carefully preserved in alcohol and sent to the Smithsonian Institution.

The enormous pressure above these wriggling bits of sea-bottom life may be estimated by the fact that the sounding was made at 7:20 P. M., and it took until 11:08 P. M. to reel in the line—probably one of the deepest soundings ever made, except the famous deep hole near San Juan, Porto Rico, where no line has ever reached bottom.

MOTHERS' CAMPSTOOLS

IN parts of New York crowded with multi-family houses, where parks are not easily available, baby carriages stand for hours on the sunny side of the street in charge of young mothers or nurses.

While the babies are sunning, their guardians sew, embroider, read or chat among themselves. They are equipped with campstools, which can be folded and easily carried back and forth on the springs of the go-carts. In Manhattan apartment house districts campstools are carried as a staple line by hardware shops, stationery stores and even by the branches of chain groceries.

A man who has invested with us for 30 years says: "For more than thirty years I have been doing business with your company and my transactions have always been handled satisfactorily. I have never lost any money on my investments with you, which is a very gratifying experience."

A Washington bank says: "We have known The F. H. Smith Company for a great many years. This company is one of the oldest in Washington dealing in first mortgage securities. We have owned bonds which they have underwritten and have regarded them as conservative investments."

From one who uses our Savings Plan: "For a person receiving a moderate income I have found your Investment Savings Plan a most liberal and practical plan for the systematic accumulation of capital."

A woman investor in South Africa writes: "The purchase of a bond from you was made quite as conveniently from this distance of about 10,000 miles via the mail route as if I had been in Washington."

An American in Paris says: "My own experience, both while living in the Middle West of the United States and since I have been living in Paris, has demonstrated to my complete satisfaction the possibility and practicability of investing by mail."

A missionary in China says: "Your long history of safety gives one a feeling of assurance that is not at all diminished by the 10,000 miles intervening between your office and my domicile. I discover that this distance is in no way a barrier to perfectly satisfactory business relations with you."

A CHOICE site in one of America's great cities, improved by a modern residential or business structure, is the security behind each issue of SMITH BONDS. Every SMITH BOND is a First Mortgage Bond, secured by a direct first lien on the land and building, and also in effect on the earnings of a modern, income-producing city property.

In every instance there is a wide margin of security for investors between the amount of the First Mortgage Bond issue and the property value.

In every instance we require monthly sinking fund payments toward the annual reduction of the mortgage, so that the margin of security for investors is constantly increased.

In every instance we require monthly sinking fund payments toward the semi-annual interest, so that prompt payment of interest is assured.

In every instance we require that the earning capacity of the building be considerably more than the amount required to make these sinking fund payments.

Our booklet, "Fifty-three Years of Proven Safety," contains a further explanation of the safeguards that protect every investment in SMITH BONDS, and that have resulted in our record of no loss to any investor in 53 years.

Our booklet, "How to Build an Independent Income," tells how you may buy a $1,000, $500 or $100 SMITH BOND by payments extended over 10 months, and get the full rate of bond interest—now 7%—on every payment.

Volume production has no place in Nettleton shoemaking

IF you want shoes made under the driving pressure of quantity production—don't buy Nettletons. You can find the others in almost every store.

Nettletons, however, are different. They are carefully made with every attention to detail—producing better workmanship—better shoes. They are sold with careful attention to personal tastes and individual needs—assuring better appearance—greater comfort—longer wear.

Nettletons are quality shoes exclusively, and are priced accordingly. They are sold by the most prominent retailer in every locality.

Nature herself has provided the way—to keep teeth lovely and sound

Lovely white teeth make the charm of a dazzling smile

IN your own mouth lies the only real protection for your beautiful teeth—six tiny salivary glands.

Their alkaline fluids should wash your teeth day and night. Just brushing away the acids two or three times a day is not enough. To prevent decay the continuous flow of your salivary glands must counteract these acids of decay as they form.

But our soft, sweet foods today do not give the glands enough exercise to insure a continuous flow. They slow down and allow the acids to collect—your teeth decay.

The latest dental authority knows that your salivary glands must be gently stimulated to a full natural flow.

Pebeco keeps glands active

Pebeco is a marvelously effective, salivary stimulant. As soon as Pebeco enters your mouth the salivary glands flow more freely.

With regular daily use Pebeco entirely restores the normal, protective flow of your glands. Their alkaline fluids again bathe your teeth day and night. The acids of decay are neutralized as fast as they form.

Your salivary glands must keep your teeth healthy

Pebeco keeps your glands active

Pebeco will give you the beautiful, healthy teeth everyone admires. Send today for a ten days' trial of Pebeco. Made only by Pebeco, Inc., for Lehn & Fink, Inc., Sole Distributors. In the blue tube, at all druggists.

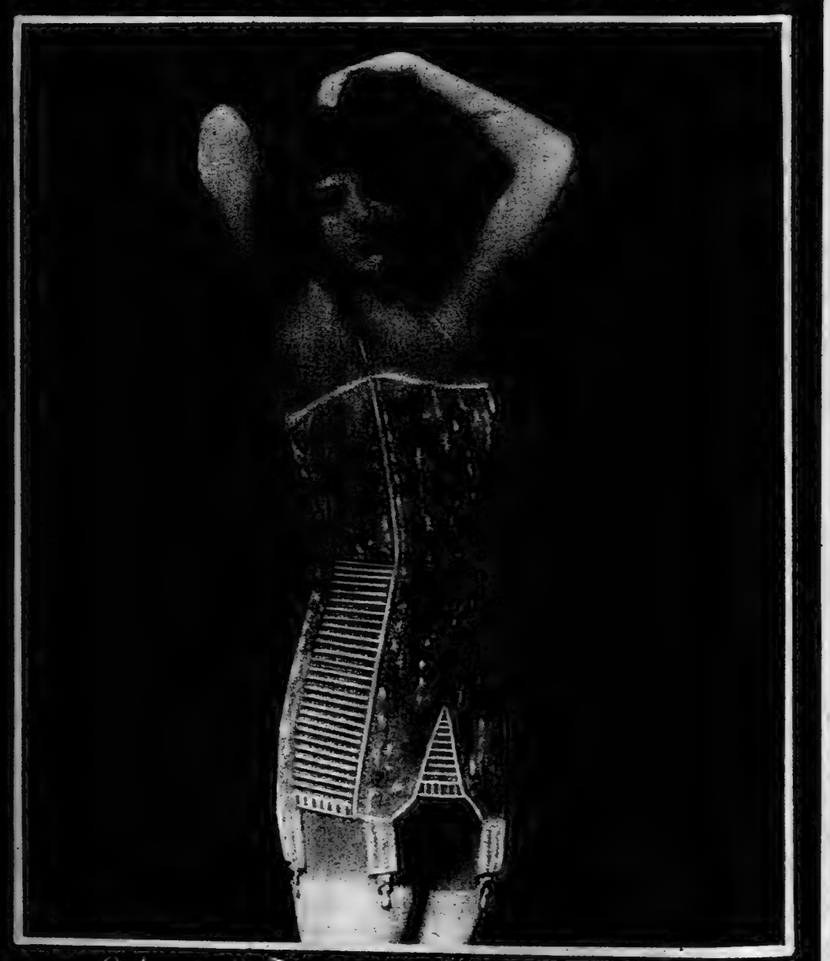
LILY of FRANCE CORSET



Lily of France Duo-Sette
Makes every figure lovely

YOU need only remember the famous name—Lily of France"—to find body-support that are marvels of supple ease. Fascinating in their sculptured line, tantalizing in their invisibility. They trans-late body lines into beauty lines.

The Lily of France is the beautiful corset worn by beautiful women to make them more beautiful

ROLLS-ROYCE

Rolls-Royce cars, with new-car guarantees, are offered at resale to a few motorists at a saving of 30%

THE Rolls-Royce sweeps up to the curb. Numbers of people admire it. Perhaps you are among those admirers who say, "I wish I could afford such a superb automobile." You can.

A number of Rolls-Royce cars are now being offered for resale in a variety of coach work designs. Their complete mechanical history is known. Each car has been carefully examined and any part showing evidence of wear has been replaced. Consequently, these cars carry the same 3-year guarantee as new Rolls-Royce cars.

They cannot be told from new Rolls-Royce cars, for they will be repainted and reupholstered to suit your own taste. In performance they respond like new cars, free from mechanical ills, riding with that comfort and luxury attainable only in Rolls-Royce.

THE PICKWICK—A 6-passenger closed model of special design, appropriate for either owner or chauffeur to drive. A division back of the front seat. Price $10,500.

Open models at $9500. Closed models at $10,500. Complete Rolls-Royce accessories, new tires, freedom from tax and delivery charges. Satisfactory terms without expensive financing charges.

All Rolls-Royce owners, whether the car has been bought at resale or not, have access to the interested, helpful service of every member of our organization. The delivery of the car is the beginning, not the end, of our obligation. Direct works branches in every part of the United States and throughout the world.

You are invited to examine these cars and try them, or to write for a booklet which answers the questions many purchasers ask.

Four Smart Variations of the Spring Coat Theme

WOMEN'S AND MISSES' COATS: FOURTH FLOOR

In women's coats for dress wear, Fashion acclaims the wrap of silk. It particularly emphasizes the bloused silhouette and the trend of gathered fullness.

For misses, the silk coat is equally smart, particularly when it features a shawl collar and gaunt sleeves. A sports model will be useful for town and country purposes.

Shoes and Millinery by McCreery

Women's fitted coat with cape sleeves. The straight line of the cape effect is very much in vogue. In black and pink, with collar of white or natural muskrat. Sizes 34 to 44.

98.00

Women's coat in black and navy broadcloth. Trimmed with fine beaver. Interesting cape. In black or navy with natural beaver collar and gray. Sizes 34 to 44.

89.50

Misses' coat of [illegible] cloth, with gaunt sleeves and [illegible] collar. In [illegible] with collar of [illegible] which has also been used for the lining. Sizes 14 to 20.

59.50

Misses' coat of [illegible] cloth, with [illegible] collar. In [illegible] with collar and cuffs of natural squirrel. Sizes 14 to 20.

The Gird-O Band is a step-in girdle with a patented diaphragm control belt —a 1 inch band of silk boot elastic simply confining the body lines through the steady but gentle downward pull of the back garters.

Gird-O-Band

The Step-in Girdle and Diaphragm Band with the Patented "Poise-Line"

Of course, you want the perfect, fashionable foundation for your spring gown. Gird-O-Band is comfortable, snug, smooth-fitting as your silk hose, and gives the silhouette just the desired illusion of slender smartness.

Gird-O-Band controls one's diaphragm at all times, without pressure at any time. Flattens the hips and back lines, and gives the figure the correct and erect poise of distinction.

Always holds firmly in position—can't shift up. As easy to slip on and off as your bloomer.

If you can't come to our Studio, you may quite safely order a Gird-O-Band by mail. Give waist and hip measure, with length required—12", 14" or 16"

In lovely Brocades—$18.50 and up

Of the Many Style Innovations in the Easter Parade . . .

Ahead of all marched

SCANTIES

REG U.S. PAT. OFF. PATENTED

On Fifth Avenue—on Michigan Boulevard or the Boardwalk at Atlantic City—wherever Fashion staged her great yearly pageant, the Easter Parade—one out of every five smartly dressed women wore Scanties for her one and only underneath garment.

Scanties is the one garment that cares for all—combining vest, girdle, brassiere and panties all-in-one. Convenient as bobbed hair—weighs but a scant eight ounces—has one pair of shoulder straps holding all and adds but one thickness to the waist line instead of a padding of four overlapping garments. And so economical compared to your usual lingerie bills—one article to buy and only one to launder.

Never was there a style innovation that so appealed to smart women—especially for spring and summer wear when one must wear underneath just enough to give style but not enough to be uncomfortable. Ask to see Scanties. Featured at every leading store.

A Summer of SPORT, HEALTH and PLEASURE Awaits you at AWOSTING

WHAT are your plans for the summer? Now is the time to decide. Do you long to split the waves at express speed at the wheel of a racing beauty responsive to your every whim? Or to fight it to a finish with that king of fish, the small mouth black bass? Are the golden summer hours of sunshine to be squandered in an ill conceived, last moment dash to a teeming resort among milling thousands? Or will you rest and revel in the clean outdoors at Awosting?

But an hour or so from New York is the perfect environment for a summer home. You are surrounded by an outdoor playground which only nature at her best could supply. There is swimming, sporty fishing, every kind of boating, tennis, and golf nearby. Fifty thousand acres of woodland provide miles of mountain trails for hikes and horseback rides. There are many excellent trout streams—and in season, protected hunting. Awosting is away from crowds yet near enough to the city to be possible for the men of the family. It is a community of homes at the edge of Greenwood Lake, with its miles of sparkling water.

Cottages have been built to accord with an architectural ideal, each conforms to the general artistic plan and each is original in its design. Each offers every convenience, modern plumbing, electricity, telephone facilities; groceries, fresh milk and ice delivered to your door. In fact every city service. The community has its own fire protection and a modern sewage system. The Awosting Inn serves a limited clientele and the residents and their guests.

Best of all you can own and maintain a home in this delightful community for less than you spend for your annual vacation. Cottages are for sale or for season rental, completely furnished. Every assistance is rendered the builder.

The coupon will bring a complete description of Awosting with photographs and plans of the thirty homes available this year.

Among Philadelphia Debutantes

this soap is seven times as popular as any other

GOLD slippers above the asphalt pavement . . . the flash of jewels under the softness of furs . . . low purring of motor cars, crowding to the curb . . . drift of music through heavy, half-opened doors:—a debutante coming-out dance, with all the smart world in attendance.

The lovely young girls who make up the debutante lists in our great cities—girls brought up in an atmosphere of fastidious personal luxury—how do they care for their skin? What soap do they find, pure enough and fine enough, to trust their complexions to?

From the debutantes of five leading American cities—New York, Boston, Washington, Baltimore, Philadelphia—the answer is overwhelmingly, "Woodbury's Facial Soap!"

Among Philadelphia debutantes alone, Woodbury's is seven times as popular as any other toilet soap.

"Gives me good color," they commented.

"I use it because of its pleasant and softening effect on the skin."

"Imparts a smooth glow to the skin and relieves an oily condition."

"I find it delightfully soothing."

A SKIN SPECIALIST worked out the formula by which Woodbury's is made. This formula not only calls for absolutely pure ingredients; it also demands greater refinement in the manufacturing than is commercially possible with ordinary toilet soap.

Around each cake of Woodbury's Facial Soap is wrapped a booklet of special treatments for overcoming common skin defects. The same qualities that give Woodbury's its beneficial effect in overcoming these common skin troubles, make it ideal for regular toilet use.

"Motor cars crowding to the curb . . . a debutante dance, with all the smart world in attendance."

A 25-cent cake lasts a month or six weeks.

Within a week after beginning to use Woodbury's you will see an improvement in your complexion. Get your Woodbury's today—begin your treatment tonight!

Spring
and the tailored shoe style

Spring comes to New York — and New York comes to Walk-Over.

Here, in all their daintiness and charm, are the tailored shoes for Spring that well dressed women must have, and every woman should have.

Tailored shoes, in their simplicity and grace, are the season's vogue, but tailored shoes must fit the costume. Choose here and find a style array extensive enough to let you choose the most graceful, the most harmonious style for any costume.

Choose here and find that personal fit which makes correctly tailored shoes so smart. For more than fifty years Walk-Over has made shoes to fit. Combinations of width and length, extra width or extra slimness, make Walk-Overs give you a personal gift.

It is that personal fit which has created the Walk-Over world wide reputation for women's "Fashion Welt" shoes. It is that personal fit which makes you understand why Walk-Overs are the largest selling trade-marked shoes in the world.

Smart style is put into shoes by design. Smartness is maintained in shoes by craftsmanship in making them. Choose Walk-Overs, in the newest pastel shades of kid, in soft and supple calfskins, or in gleaming patent leather, and know that Walk-Over skill will make the shoes you like keep the style you want.

Now is the time of Year most critical for your Skin!

Give it each day this gentle care. See how soon it will bloom again with youth and loveliness.

BRILLIANT April sunlight on your mirror tells you how sallow and lifeless your skin has grown from its struggle against chapping winter cold, dry indoor heat and soft coal soot. March winds have choked its delicate pores with gritty dust. And now comes April with cold windy days and more dust!

Renew the youth of your skin by cleansing it deeply with the fine oils of Pond's Cold Cream. And then protect it against raw winds with the delicate Vanishing Cream Pond's also makes.

FIRST STEP: Every night before retiring and during the day whenever your skin needs cleansing—pat Pond's Cold Cream on generously. Leave it on a moment that its fine oils may rid the depths of the pores of all accumulations. With a soft cloth wipe it off, repeat, and finish with a dash of cold water or a rub with ice. If your skin is dry from winter weathering, after the bedtime cleansing pat on more Pond's Cold Cream and leave until morning.

SECOND STEP: After every cleansing with Pond's Cold Cream except the bedtime one, smooth on a delicate film of Pond's Vanishing Cream. At once a new soft, even finish, a velvety glow! And now how your powder clings, with an evenness that defies detection! Moreover you are perfectly protected against April winds, disastrous dust and soot. The Pond's Extract Company, 131 Hudson Street, New York City.

She doesn't fear the dentist

Wise men and women go to the dentist at least twice a year for a thorough mouth inspection. They don't put off the dental appointment until forced to seek relief from pain and the dentist has to hurt. If you see your dentist in time he can keep your teeth and gums healthy and may prevent serious illness.

Neglect Punishes 4 out of 5

Failure to take a few simple precautions lets pyorrhea, dread disease of the gums, become entrenched in the mouths of four out of five at forty, and many younger, according to dental statistics.

Start today to brush teeth and gums night and morning with Forhan's if you would be with the lucky who escape pyorrhea's ravages. Forhan's firms the gums and keeps them pink and healthy. It doesn't give this insidious infection chance to steal upon you.

If you have tender bleeding gums go to your dentist immediately for treatment and use Forhan's regularly. The chances are your own dentist will recommend it. It contains Forhan's Pyorrhea Liquid dentists use to combat pyorrhea.

Besides safeguarding your health, Forhan's is a pleasant tasting dentifrice that gives the teeth perfect cleansing; and forestalls decay.

Include Forhan's in your daily hygiene for your health's sake. Pyorrhea is no respecter of persons. Four out of five is its grim count. At all druggists', 35c and 60c in tubes.

"I AM AN EDITOR and naturally am chained to my desk most of the day. I find activity in a small farm and a kennel of dogs. Three or four years ago I was afflicted with a painful boil. The doctor said, 'Eat yeast.' The boil gradually disappeared. Last month I was troubled with an itching rash like mosquito bites. I remembered the boil. If yeast could cure that, it could easily conquer pimples. I changed to three yeast cakes a day. In two weeks I had to look for the pimples."
Henry W. Lacy, Wakefield, Mass.

"DURING THE WORLD WAR while nursing, I became ill with influenza. After more than a year's illness, I was completely run down. My system needed a tonic. The doctor in attendance prescribed Fleischmann's Yeast. The results were wonderfully good—noticeable even the first week. Since that time I have used Fleischmann's Yeast for patients with chronic constipation and as a tonic in general with the same good results."
Fern L. Locke, R. N., New York City

These Vigorous People . . Once Half Sick

Their ills have vanished—
thanks to this remarkable food

NOT a "cure-all," not a medicine in any sense—Fleischmann's Yeast is simply a remarkable fresh food.

The millions of tiny active yeast plants in every cake invigorate the whole system. They aid digestion—clear the skin—banish the poisons of constipation. Where catharties give only temporary relief, yeast strengthens the intestinal muscles and makes them healthy and active. And day by day it releases new stores of energy.

Eat two or three cakes regularly every day before meals: on crackers—in fruit juices, water or milk—or just plain, nibbled from the cake. For constipation especially, dissolve one cake in hot water (not scalding) before breakfast and at bedtime. Buy several cakes at a time—they will keep fresh in a cool dry place for two or three days. All grocers have Fleischmann's Yeast. Start eating it today!

And let us send you a free copy of our latest booklet on Yeast for Health. Health Research Dept. N-67, The Fleischmann Company, 701 Washington Street, New York.

THIS FAMOUS FOOD tones up the entire system—aids digestion—clears the skin—banishes constipation.

BELOW

"FOR YEARS I suffered from constipation that nothing could relieve. I also suffered agonies after meals. Morning saw me tired, headachy, cross and discouraged. To top it all off, my complexion was sallow and covered with pimples and blackheads. I decided to try Fleischmann's Yeast. I took it patiently for months. I was well rewarded, for the improvement was really miraculous. Gradually all troubles cleared up. I now weigh what I should. I was made healthy and happy by using Fleischmann's Yeast."
Louise Reiter, Detroit, Mich.

"I SUFFERED TERRIBLY from indigestion. My complexion was sallow. My appetite was bad and food seemed tasteless. I read of the efficiency of Fleischmann's Yeast and gave it a fair trial. I found it to be the cheapest and best remedy I had ever tried. Eating a cake of yeast after each meal did away with that unpleasant feeling of fullness after a meal. It cleared my complexion. Fleischmann's Yeast is a boon to humanity."
Ernest F. Dukes, Bridgeville, Del.

"The Attractive Home—How to Plan its Decoration"

Hazel Dell Brown has outlined her simple rules for planning prettier rooms in the twenty-four pages of this book. And she has illustrated these rules with photographs and color reproductions of model interiors and the newer linoleum patterns. Well worth sending for—it's free.

THE director of the "movie" screen, the editor of a magazine that touches home decoration—both have sensed the quickened interest of women in decorative floors of color and pattern.

And have you noticed the "lift," the cheer, the added modernity that a pretty floor can lend to the entire room?

To meet this demand of fashion, the designers of Armstrong's Linoleum now present new linoleum patterns, patterns that are unusual achievements in floor designs. Good department, furniture, and linoleum specialty stores are displaying them this week.

NEW Marbleized linoleum radically different

Possibly you have seen linoleum with a pattern in which the design was marbled. But this new group of Armstrong patterns is truly inlaid—both pattern and graining run clear through to the burlap back.

All patterns of Armstrong's Inlaid Linoleum are waxed to a soft, lustrous sheen at the factory. These fine floors will give a lifetime service if cemented in place over a lining of builders' deadening felt. An occasional waxing keeps them always good-looking—and easy to care for.

Embossed Handcraft Tile Inlaids

Here is the first linoleum ever made with a "textured" surface; that is, tiles, whose framing interliners are actually pressed in or countersunk. Patterned in this natural relief, a soft play of lights and shadows is reflected from the surface of this doubly beautiful floor. This New Embossed Inlaid Linoleum is exclusively Armstrong's.

Look for the CIRCLE A trademark on the burlap back

Printed linoleum of real beauty

Even if you only want to buy inexpensive printed linoleum, you can make your choice from new Armstrong designs and colors.

Armstrong's Printed Linoleum simply doesn't look low-priced. There is quality in the colors, a taste in the patterns, and a substantialness in the linoleum itself that says, "Here is wear as well as looks." Armstrong's Linoleum Rugs—"A superior rug of genuine cork linoleum"—sizes 6′ x 9′ to 12′ x 15′.

"Mannish Bob" Shows You're Behind Times, Milady, Paris Dictator Warns

If women still bob their hair in the manner of their fathers, brothers, uncles or husbands, they are no longer up-to-the-minute; for "the mannish bob is fast becoming a fad of the past. It was an unlovely mode, and although a good many women still cling to it because of its neatness, it is doomed to give way to the more feminine styles of the coiffure."

This is the verdict of a dictator of hair fashions, M. Manuel, of New York, who recently opened a branch house in the rue de la Paix for smart women on the Continent. He declares he will sponsor graceful and womanly ways of hairdressing, lines that will slant from the face toward the ear and hair that is long enough in the back to betucked up as a first precursor to the low knot.

Elaborate waves and curls, however, will not return to fashion, M. Manuel is convinced. "Women, in these days of rush and hurry, when one is so full up with sport and social engagements, cannot spare time for an elaborate coiffure. Her way out is the wig in a shade that suits her complexion or that harmonizes with the color of her costume. White wigs are admirably fitted for young women, as the beauties of the Rococo period have proved."

Consequently, M. Manuel offers wigs or "transformations" for those who are overburdened with everything except time, and designs for each client the wig that, in his expert judgment, suits best her individual type of hair and complexion. Each wig is a little wonder of careful detail work, every single hair being crocheted on gauze, and the whole being washed, combed, oiled and waved to perfection like the hair that actually grows on Madame's head.

"The well-dressed woman of to-day," M. Manuel avers, "is wearing the modern transformation as she wears a little rouge; for it improves the appearance of an already lovely face and beautifies the head that else might appear to disadvantage. The sore question of arrangement no longer exists, for the hair 'grows' as one would wish it to grow; the possibilities are no longer limited by the fact that your hair parts in the wrong place and will not fall gracefully over the ears."

Is your bathroom ready for guests?

OR DO you wish, perhaps, that the toilet seat were a little more up-to-date. It is a fact, surprising as it may seem, that a great improvement can be made in the appearance of the bathroom by replacing an old, dark-colored, cracked or otherwise unsightly toilet seat with a modern, all-white Church Toilet Seat.

Bathroom Luxury Everyone Can Afford

A HANDSOME, smooth, white seat lends an air of refinement and luxury to the bathroom such as you find in the bathrooms of luxurious hotels and apartments. Yet its price brings it within reach of all.

You do not have to make the bathroom entirely over. This simple change adds new beauty. The toilet seat is the one fixture which guests are sure to criticise just as they would criticise bad manners. It means a lot to any hostess to know that the bathroom is a room she can be proud to have guests use.

The "Church" Toilet Seat is all-white and stays white permanently—a sanitary seat that washes as easily as porcelain. Its white surface is neither paint, varnish nor enamel, but a durable sheathing as handsome as ivory. It won't crack, splinter, chip, wear off or stain. You can install it yourself if you wish, it goes on so easily. Obtainable at any plumber's. Think what a difference it would make!

These experts at the VANDERBILT and the BILTMORE HOTELS advise this treatment for the Hair and Scalp

THE Hairdressing Parlor and the Barber Shop of S. H. Butts Inc., at the Vanderbilt, and the famous barber, Gene Schmolze, at the Biltmore care for the hair and scalps of New York's best groomed men and women.

They both say: "We advise the regular use of Ed. Pinaud's Eau de Quinine to free the hair from dandruff and keep it always smooth, glossy and alive."

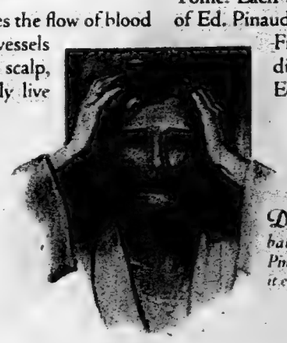
This famous French tonic contains special ingredients which do for the hair and scalp the two things specialists say are necessary to free the scalp of dandruff and nourish the roots so the hair grows strong and luxuriant.

FIRST—Ed. Pinaud's Eau de Quinine is a safe, gentle disinfectant, killing the germs which cause unsightly dandruff scales and keeping the scalp exquisitely clean between shampoos.

SECOND—it stimulates the flow of blood to the tiny blood vessels and glands of the scalp, keeping it muscularly live and free and feeding the hair roots.

AN Ed. Pinaud treatment gives its most wonderful effects when worked into the scalp in this way. Help the liquid down into the roots of the hair by pressing the finger tips down firmly and moving the scalp in all directions until all the small muscles are well exercised. Its remarkable health-giving ingredients reach the hair roots and feed them so that the hair does not get thinner but grows luxuriant and beautiful.

All druggists and department stores have Ed. Pinaud's Eau de Quinine Hair Tonic. Each bottle bears the signature of Ed. Pinaud. Pinaud Incorporated, 90 Fifth Ave., New York, sole distributors for Parfumerie Ed. Pinaud, Paris.



Dandruff is the commonest cause of baldness. The regular use of Ed. Pinaud's Eau de Quinine will remove it entirely and keep the hair strong and healthy.

Bobbed hair needs more care than long. To keep it free from dandruff, smooth, glossy and manageable, use Ed. Pinaud's Eau de Quinine regularly.

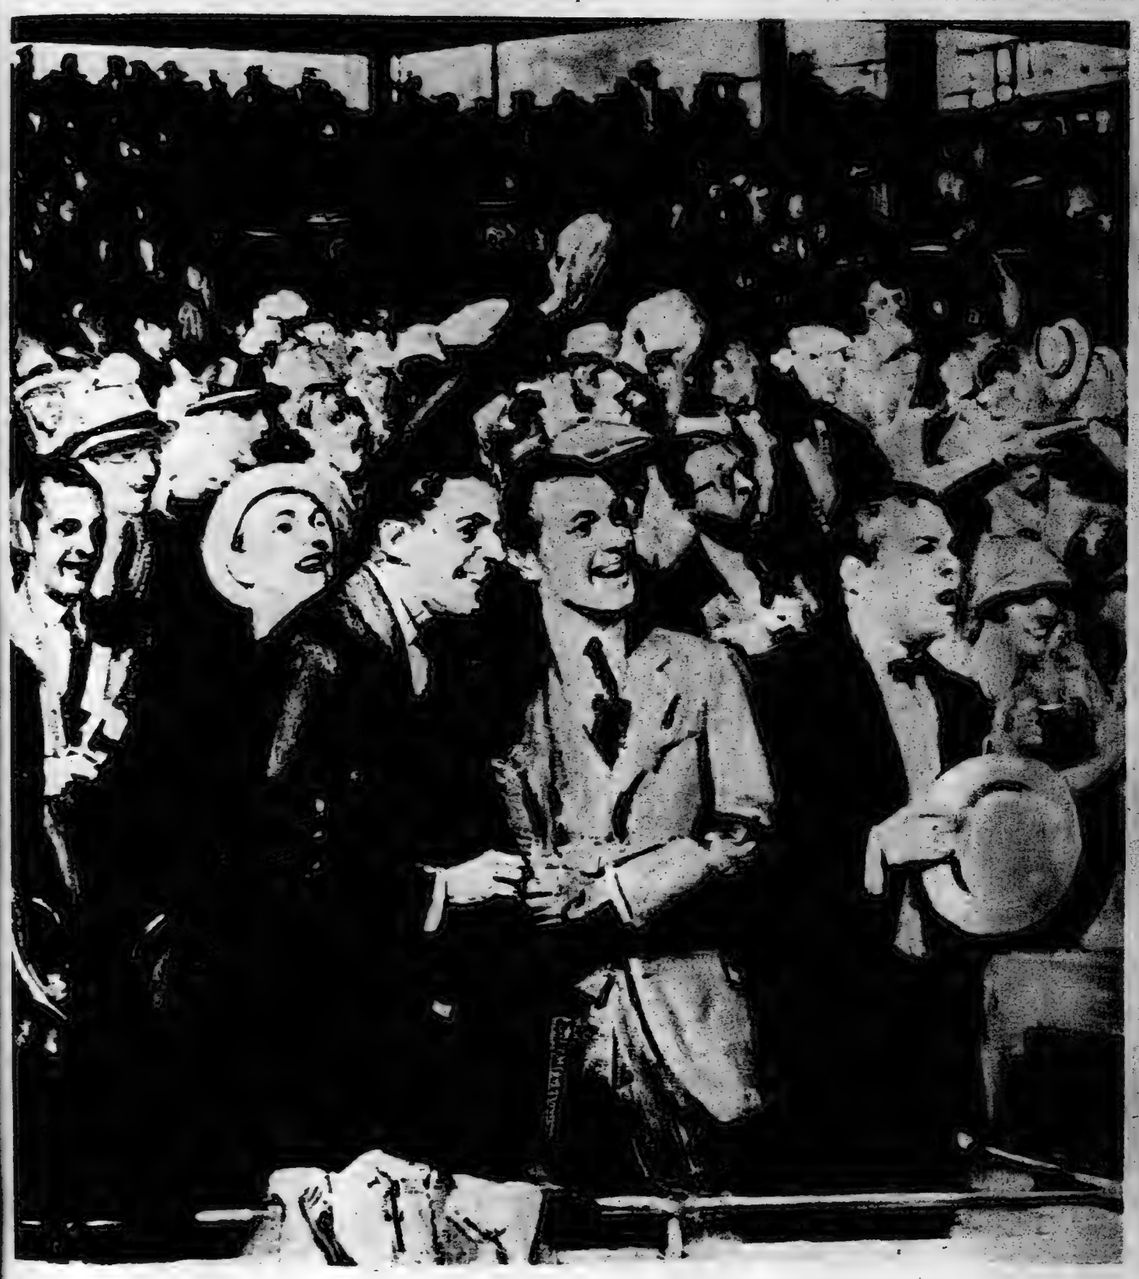
FOR THE PAINT JOBS YOU DO YOURSELF

When you and spring are thrilling to the first ball game of the year—and your favorite player drives out a homer—when the stands rise, roaring with cheers —have a Camel!



WHEN spring's first ball game is here. And the shouting banter flings out on the sunlit air. When a heavy hitter cracks the ball, shrieking into centerfield for a home run—oh, happy mortal, as the stands roar with glee—have a Camel!

For Camel floods every friendly view with greater brightness, adds the magic of its own fragrance to life's most festive days. Camels are of such choice tobaccos that they never tire the taste, no matter how zestfully you smoke them. Camels are so skilfully made that they never leave a cigaretty after-taste. Search where you will and spend what you may—you'll get more pleasure out of Camels than any other cigarette you ever put a match to.

So this fair spring day as the bases fill and a hefty batter lofts out one that it seems will never stop flying—oh, then, taste the smoke that means completed enchantment. Strike a light and know then the mellowest flavor, the most blithesome fragrance that ever came from a cigarette.

Have a Camel!

Camels contain the very choicest tobaccos grown in all the world. Camels are blended by the world's most expert blenders. Nothing is too good for Camels. In the making of this one brand we concentrate the tobacco knowledge and skill of the largest organization of tobacco experts in the world. No other cigarette made is like Camels. They are the overwhelming choice of experienced smokers.

Our highest wish, if you do not yet know Camel quality, is that you try them. We invite you to compare Camels with any other cigarette made at any price.

The Favorites of Broadway Play Dance Music Exclusively for

The DUO-ART Reproducing Piano

A DANCE? Yes, of course—played on the Duo-Art! Pull back the rugs. Slip a roll into the piano. Touch a lever. There is a crash of descending "blue" chords, a shower of brilliant runs—and the inimitable Phil Ohman, king of piano syncopation, is playing for us!

Every night on Broadway, during the performance of "Tip Toes," Phil "stops the show" with his amazing pianistic feats. And his new Duo-Art rolls represent Phil at his best.

Oh, but wait! Have you heard the famous "Rhapsody in Blue" by George Gershwin, the number that Paul Whiteman and his Orchestra have featured during their tour of the country? Gershwin himself recorded this Duo-Art roll. Listen to the daring harmonies, the beat of its rhythms. One moment a languorous, entrancing melody. Then a riot of colorful jazz!

Let Edythe Baker play for us! Edythe is the Darling of the Gods of Broadway. She was featured in Al Jolson's "Big Boy" and dances and sings in one of those intimate, exclusive supper clubs, where smart Broadwayites gather after the theatre.

One dance after another—each more fascinating than the last. Frank Milne, Freddie Rich, Alan Moran, and a host of others are recording the newest and most popular hits for the Duo-Art. You never need worry about keeping the dancing youngsters happy at home when you can call upon these players to perform on the Duo-Art.

The WEBER DUO-ART Period Grand

And on each Duo-Art song roll appear the words, where all may see and sing them.

Popular songs, dance music, salon and operatic selections, the finest classic music—all recorded by the masters. No member of the home circle will fail to find his favorite music in this superb Duo-Art library of rolls!

VERY GRAVE MATTERS

Intellectualism Giving Way to the Emotions in Modern Drama—Affairs Of the Last Week

By J. BROOKS ATKINSON.

If the current season has been marked by a preponderance of unsatisfying plays, it has been distinguished no less by several abortive sallies into intellectualism; and one suspects that the two phenomena are vaguely related. Playgoers are bidden to think. However laudable that febrile invitation may be (especially in an art notorious for anesthetizing the mind) this post-war era is not the Age of Reason; nor is thinking the apotheosis of culture. We can be moved; but we refuse to be excited. Only six or seven years ago our serious thinkers were all passing for prophets in a benighted land; their carefully reasoned adumbrations, their portents and alarms, spread terror in the strongest camps; and accordingly the guards were well armed and sometimes doubled. What a bedlam of threat, rebuke and recrimination! Nevertheless, nothing happened; Zeus did not fire his thunderbolt, and the income tax has been lowered considerably. And now comes Floyd Dell, once an unrepentant intellectual radical, with his prophecy that the new "younger generation" will develop an art "which, among other things, will help them to love generously, to work honestly, to think clearly, to fight bravely, to live nobly." How sensible and how commonplace! For the time being, inside the theatre as well as outside, intellectualism is bankrupt; reason is now no Ruthless King.

JUST what the current era means, and whither it goes, and just what readjustments it entails in the theatre, may be left to those who know—if any such breathe mortal air. But certainly art generally begins to place fresh confidence in the emotions as guides more broadly useful than pure intellect, and the emotions transpire from the mass rather than from the individual. "The Dybbuk," "Goat Song," "Nirvana" and "The Great God Brown" speak for no man as an individual, and subordinate ratiocination to feeling. Indeed, from this point of view, the weakness of "Nirvana" was its superimposition of the playwright's intellect on the feelings of his characters; Mr. Lawson's brain was cerebrating so feverishly that his characters could seldom express themselves honestly. (As a matter of fact, characters drawn from the intelligentsia have the narrowest general significance.) All the other dramas mentioned in this connection, however, communicated group emotions working toward some vague relationship with life in general; some release, some flowering of human aspirations. And the impetus came, not from the brain of the dramatist but from the rich and volatile flood of humanity in the mass. When it breaks through, the proscenium arch will be no barrier in the theatre.

Although "The Great God Brown" does not provide a full, sweet outlet to the emotions that underlie its composition, it may illustrate best the course of this sort of drama. If this pulsating and amorphous play comes to no single conclusion, possible of statement in a succinct phrase, it also yields paradoxically a thousand conclusions that may be spun from its intimations. And in spite of the fact that no one understands it by intellectual processes (least of all its author) the playgoers, who flock to it in increasing numbers, pass through a profound emotional experience in which all recognize something of themselves. For Mr. O'Neill has dramatized emotional relationships, if that phrase has any meaning. In the first place, the characters are less individuals than representative members of society, varying according to their sensitivity and their fitness for social life. By temperament Brown harmonizes with the material world in which he lives and succeeds as a practical architect. By ins inct Margaret knows her way through the worldly labyrinth, although, being a free-born woman, she marries a dreamer for love. Dion, of course, a poet by temperament if not by profession, is wholly unsuited to organized social living. In the second place, all these characters (or symbols of human life, if you wish) struggle for an elusive happiness just beyond their reach, for beauty more lustrous than they have ever known, for the peace and the plenty that only the gods enjoy. Only to Cybele, symbol of Mother Earth, does the world appear simple and divinely satisfying.

The earth, that is sufficient;
I do not want the constellations any nearer.

The fly in the ointment is not only the inadequacy of human nature but the lack of understanding in other people. Truth is complicated enough to the individual; in a social group it fairly defies recognition.

ALTHOUGH the profoundest group emotions communicating a desire for liberation, for beauty and "the living colors of earth and sky and sea" must always be thwarted and melancholy, since they cannot quite touch the stars for which they reach, such drama need not be perennially tragic, as most have been this season. As gavottes and mazurkas suggest, the emotions of the human carnival also touch lighter chords and express joy, ecstacy and gayety. "Life is at once the quintessence and the sum of madness." And plays that grow, as opposed to those artfully constructed, may dance in mad abandon quite as honestly as at present they torture the soul; for surely we starve for comedy and surely we may legitimately ask simply for a "good time." Only the actor can bring us that. However facetious and comic the playwright may be, the immediate source of merriment is the actor in his respective vein of buffoon, harlequin, droll clown or comedian. The actor's life and training, however, lean toward restriction, toward manners, artifice and general refinement, and too frequently he expresses quality of emotion rather than the fullness of emotion itself. For sheer enjoyment, what have we to equal the undisciplined fun of the Marx Brothers? Their horseplay, satire, punning and broad mimicry pour forth abundantly in the wildest, most chaotic form of comic abandon to be seen anywhere on our stage, and they set free the universal longing for high spirits. A few directors have come to realize that acting need not be forever strapped in the straitjacket of formal good taste. Mr. Boleslavsky, for instance, does not eschew the slap-stick even in Shakespeare. If dramas of social emotion do appear more frequently in the American theatre, one phase of their expression must be the rag-tag and bobtail of robust comedy. Intellectualism will suffice for the lugubrious halls of Academe and the critical columns of the newspapers.

Raquel Meller at Last. She Will Make Her American Debut at the Empire Theatre on Wednesday Night of This Week.

THE WEEK'S EVENTS

WILL ROGERS—Tonight at Carnegie Hall. The season's only appearance of the erstwhile star of the "Follies," who has been spending the season in a tour of the hinterland and points south.

RUTH DRAPER—Tonight at the Sam H. Harris Theatre. The return of a great favorite for three Sunday night recitals, with a few matinees for good measure.

LOVE-IN-A-MIST—Tomorrow night at the Gaiety Theatre. Amelie Rives and Gilbert Emery—an unexpected collaboration, that—are the authors of this new comedy. Madge Kennedy and Sidney Blackmer will have the principal rôles; also in the company will be Tom Powers, Frieda Inescort and Alice John.

WHITE CARGO—Tomorrow night at Daly's Sixty-third Street Theatre. A return engagement of a play with a long record here.

WHAT EVERY WOMAN KNOWS—Tuesday night at the Bijou Theatre. Here is Barrie's famous comedy, originally acted here by Maude Adams, with Richard Bennett as John Shand. This time Helen Hayes will be the heroine and Kenneth MacKenna will have the Bennett rôle. Lumsden Hare will be another in the cast.

THE BELLS—Tuesday night at the Bayes Theatre. Here is another celebrated play, linked primarily with the name of Henry Irving, and, it must also be added, likewise that of Thomas E. Shea. Rollo Lloyd, hitherto better known as stage director than as player, will be the Matthias of the revival.

RAQUEL MELLER—Wednesday night at the Empire Theatre. The first American appearance of the Spanish singer, who seems to have aroused not a single dissenting opinion among the many Americans who have heard her abroad. Her schedule for this week calls for appearances on Wednesday and Saturday nights and Friday afternoon.

CHERRY PIE—Wednesday night at the Cherry Lane Playhouse. This is a revue by Carroll Carroll, with music by Eugene L. Berton. It has been "compiled and staged" by Harry Wagstaff Gribble.

BY THE WAY—Thursday night at the Central Theatre. The same old title, but said to be more than half of a new revue. Cicely Courtneidge and Jack Hulbert will continue to head the cast.

cosmetics and hard cash retained on various pretexts:

There were other tricks. One concerned the sick roommate. Your roommate was ill — couldn't leave town unless she had a doctor—other necessary expenses. She was very poor. If worked properly, you could get tears from the boob's eyes and money from his pocketbook. Then there was a cute little way of keeping the change when the boob ordered dinner. You said gayly, "Whatever is left over from the check belongs to me." If the boob had any decent instincts, he didn't dare allow the "left-over" to be less than a few dollars. Then you could bet on things that were certainties—seemingly in fun—and have another girl as witness and then take it for granted that you'd get the money when you proved you had won. The boob didn't dare not pay—didn't want to look cheap. More graft.

That does well enough for the recent grasping season "when blood is nipp'd and ways be foul." Now that the morning air is gentler we know the chorus girls to be, not vulgar or common, but Queen Mab's own little sprites, as light as a new-blown blossom pirouetting gracefully on the gossamer strands of a spider's web. Before long you will see them flitting buoyantly through the dells of Central Park and gamboling innocently over the green lawns. For already the steam of Spring begins to blow through the woodlands there and the earliest Spring birds • • •

Spring Reaches Broadway.

BROADWAY still invites attention to itself by the usual means of announcements and fanfares of publicity as if th icy grip of Winter had not been already loosed. Within the past few weeks the "Greenwich Village Follies" and "Sweetheart Time" have capitalized the advance of the new season with Spring editions as if, like a hothouse, the theatre remained oblivious of the weather, and "By the Way" will soon put forth new shoots and bright green leaves. The new jokes and new buffonnades are supposedly a little more limpid than those of the Winter; but it is more to the point that the nymphs, orsads and dryads of the chorus trip airly through new dance numbers. In her new novel, "Show Business," Mrs. Winslow may insist that the ladies of the chorus, pleasantly grouped under the euphemistic term "ensemble," make use of the stage-door Johnnies for such vulgar purposes as steak and onions, jewelry, In the acting the older players come off best, with their attitudinizing and mannered expression softened into loveliness by a truly affecting art. And although their speaking voices may not roar with the vigor of their associated players, their diction, clear and deliberate, makes them by far the more intelligible. When th y hold the stage this romantic melodrama of the '70s retains a peculiar sentimental glamour, respectable if not quite plausible. For, as a matter of fact, its style and technique betray its years, to our sententious ears more senile than mellow. Upon all plays of that kidney Autumn sits heavily. In the Botanical Gardens the willows already burn with color and the crocuses are pushing through the dead leaves near the railroad station. All the ducks are mated. In spite of the fact that the white-throated sparrows do not pipe their plaintive aria with full tonal inflection until they reach the mountains a month from now, they are clearin,' their voices on bright mornings at the far end of the Gardens. The silver-throated fox sparrows • • •

WE were speaking of the theatre. For the space of one act "Glory Hallelujah," by Thomas Mitchell and Bertram Bloch runs swiftly to a stirring climax. Able and sordid characterization, pungent dialogue and rapid movement describe a group of Bowery bums adjusting their worldly horizons to the more particular necessities of Doomsday. Inefficiency in the management of the solar system has put a comet between the earth and the sun; the human race, unstable at best, prepares to be frozen to death in eight days. As the authors gradually introduce the astronomical threat into a soporific Summer morning on the Bowery the response of the beggars and human derelicts is strictly according to character, and uncanny as well. For the realistic "Glory Hallelujah" absorbs the fantastic without marring the smoothly woven pattern of its dramatic design. In the next two acts, revealing the spectacle of these same people faced by destruction, "Glory Hallelujah" becomes somewhat turgid and develops neither its characters nor its story; and the authors make a desperate attempt to substitute the perquisites of profanity and low life in general for the requisites of drama in particular. Nor do they penetrate beneath the surface of their fable. Nevertheless, "Glory Hallelujah" remains flavorsome and piquant throughout its course; and its visual qualities alone, portraying the approach of the comet and the fading of the sun, the dark, frigid hotel lobby several days later, the maudlin group of humans huddled nervously about the stove, go far toward redeeming the inadequacy of drama. Their best ammunition the authors wisely leave to the end. For two acts an ignorant, wretched drudge of the hotel has been preparing herself for Heaven; her hopes of sweet life in a celestial eternity make her eager for mortal destruction. Indeed, so ecstatic has she become that when the sun inexplicably returns to save humanity, she kills herself to escape further living in a cruel world. Played vibrantly by the preternatural June Walker, this concluding scene rings true. For beauty is the quality of transition to nobler existence. And Spring bathes the whole world in fresh, glorious life. Long delayed by inclement weather, the robins are back in good number. The golden wing-linings of the flickers, the yellow breasts of the meadowlarks, the azure hue of the bluebirds lighten the sombre tints of wood and field with gleaming color. In a patch of woods beyond City Island three red-headed woodpeckers appear to have come for the season. Soon the first warblers will be drifting through Central Park.

Spring, the sweet Spring, is the year's pleasant King;
Then blooms each thing, then maids
dance in a ring,
Cold doth not sting, the pretty birds
do sing,
Cuckoo, jug-jug, pee-wee, to-witta-
woo!

GOSSIP OF THE RIALTO

Miss Taylor and a Paris Play—Frank Fay in "The Smart Alec"—Miss Anglin Revives "Caroline"

RUNNING somewhere in Paris is a play entitled "The Cardboard Lover," or the French equivalent thereof, and Laurette Taylor is making a journey to the other side to see whether she would not like to act the play here. It is Mr. Woods who controls the American rights, and already the Messrs. Leslie Howard and Basil Rathbone have signified a willingness to act in it. The author is Jacques Deval, represented here this season by "A Weak Woman."

"The Smart Alec," by William A. Graw and Frank Fay, will open at Mr. Werba's Brooklyn Theatre a week hence, with Mr. Fay in the leading rôle. It is an announcement of considerable potential interest, as all will agree who have seen Mr. Fay in vaudeville in recent seasons. Incidentally, the play is "a comedy with songs and a jazz band."

Margaret Anglin, without saying a word about it—to the newspapers, at all events—has quietly revived the Somerset Maugham comedy entitled "Caroline," which she first acted back in 1916. She will play it in Albany early in the week, and will then proceed by easy stages to the coast. Out there, among other things, she will be seen again in the classic Greek drama.

The ways of the producers are sometimes devious, and it is not always easy to explain all of the minor happenings in the theatre. All of which is preamble to the information that the posters proclaiming "Artists and Models" at the Winter Garden started out by crediting the authorship of the skits therein to Harold Attaridge and Harry Wagstaff Gribble, but that the name of Mr. Gribble is now obliterated by strips of white paper.

The company that is to act "The Dybbuk" in Chicago will have Mary Fowler in the rôle that Mary Ellis is acting down at the Neighborhood. This company will open a week from tomorrow night in Newark and in Chicago a week later. One may be pardoned (pardoned by Chicago, that is) a reasonable doubt as to just how that town will receive it.

The Hopwood adaptation entitled "The Duchess of Elba," after a bit of tinkering here and there, will open tomorrow night in Chicago. This is the play in which Francine Larrimore and Philip Merivale have the principal rôles. Its period is Napoleonic, but the Emperor himself does not appear on the stage. He does get as far, however, as casting a shadow on a door.

Speaking of Chicago, Mr. Charlot's revue was a pleasant hit in that town, but earlier bookings—there are times when these prior bookings are the truth, not merely a device for closing an unsuccessful show—made necessary a departure last night. A year ago the Charlot show was a Chicago failure, but at that time the company included neither Miss Lawrence nor Mr. Buchanan. The troupe, as already reported in these columns, is heading for Los Angeles. There, according to plans, it will run for twelve weeks, while its three stars plunge into movie work.

A week ago, in this column, E. E. Clive was carelessly attached to Henry Jewett's Repertory Theatre company in Boston—and that, of course, was a mistake. Mr. Jewett it is who operates the Repertory Theatre, and Mr. Clive who concerns himself with the Copley, as the managements of those two playhouses quite promptly and justifiably reported. . . . Further news of the Copley is that it has just made the first American presentation of "The Young Person in Pink," a comedy written by the English playwright, Gertrude E. Jennings, and popular in London about three seasons ago. It is mildly surprising, in fact, that the play never has been given a Broadway production.

Sam H. Harris is rehearsing a play entitled "We Americans," written by Milton Herbert Gropper. Mr. Gropper was the man who wrote "Ladies of the Evening."

Vincent Lawrence, who has written several successful plays and some exceedingly close with several others, has now turned out a comedy entitled "Sour Grapes." William Harris has acquired it.

At the moment only three productions are announced for the week beyond this. On Monday will come Claire Kummer's comedy, "Pomeroy's Past," which will arrive at the Longacre with Ernest Truex and Laura Hope Crews as its principal players, and on the same night Mr. Ames will present his revival of "Telantha," of which great things are expected, at the Plymouth.

The revival of "Last Lynne" will come to an end at the Provincetown tonight, and for their next production the group at the Provincetown will turn to opera, believe it or not. They will offer—probably on Tuesday night, April 20—Gluck's "Orpheus," with Mischa Leon in the title rôle.

The plays which went on their ways last night were "The Enemy," after a run of more than six months; "Easy Virtue," also after a successful engagement; "The Jest," entitled to rank as a successful revival; "Devils," a failure despite high critical praise; "The Virgin," which likewise failed to make a go of it; "What's the Big Idea?" a lamentable little comedy, and the Stagers' production of "Easter." There are a number of playhouses available at the moment, but not many plays to go into them.

The comedy called "Square Crooks," which has been showing pleasant signs of life as far north as the Sixty-third Street Theatre, will be moved tomorrow night to the Maxine Elliott.

The play known here—known for a while, at least—as "Solid Ivory" is presently to be acted in Chicago, probably under the name of "A Diamond in the Rough." Shows are as scarce in Chicago as they are in New York, and theatre owners are turning hopefully to plays that did not quite get by in New York.

A play called "Over Here," written by Albert Cowles and William Blatt, will open tomorrow night in Atlantic City. The advance announcements in the Atlantic City newspapers thus describe it:

"'Over Here' deals with the adventures, grave and gay, of a number of young veterans who find themselves compelled to begin life all over and discover that peace has its problems as well as war. Heroes all, in spite of the dubious past of some of them, they find themselves in a series of exciting and amusing adventures that lead to a surprising and happy solution of their troubles."

Well, perhaps "describe" was not exactly the word.

The next production at the Neighborhood Playhouse will be a comedy entitled "The Romantic Young Lady." It is a play adapted from the Spanish by the Granville Barkers, and was acted several years ago in London, with at least reasonable success. Ever since then it has been a favorite among the little theatres of the land, but the production at the Neighborhood, so far as the records show, will be its first "regular" presentation.

It is said that one of the reasons why Mr. Belasco did not announce the identity of the author of Fannie Brice's play, in his recent pronunciamento on that piece, was just plain, old-fashioned modesty. In other words, the rumor lays the authorship to Mr. Belasco himself. . . . Mr. Belasco is also preparing to produce a play by Willard Mack—as who is not?—and still another which will have Katharine Cornell as its star.

"Ghosts," now a goodly and rather surprising success at the Comedy, will be continued on three afternoons of the week—Tuesdays, Thursdays, Fridays.

VARIED NEWS OF THE THEATRE AND ITS PEOPLE

WHO'S WHO

WHETHER or not he belongs in a list of real New Yorkers according to the present controversy over those representative, if mythical persons, Bertram Bloch, collaborator with Thomas Mitchell on "Glory Hallelujah," which came last Tuesday to the Broadhurst, certainly is a member of the minority class which was born here. Just one year before Manhattan spread protective wings over Brooklyn, Queens and Richmond and became Greater New York, Mr. Bloch first saw the light of day. That, it should be added, was also before soft-coal smoke had made this impossible.

The routine procedure of education and early training brought out what he and more probably his family thought were leanings toward the law, and Mr. Bloch in course of time graduated from the New York Law School but never practiced. He devoted himself for a while to what is rather vaguely known as social work, and in the meantime began to write short stories. A not uncommon hankering for the theatre led to associations with various Little Theatre groups and finally turned his footsteps to Washington, where he directed the Drama League players for three years. In the meantime he was writing one-act plays which were being presented throughout the country and one of which even was the recipient of some reward or other.

Thus began a career which has resulted in "Glory Hallelujah." Ever present on the outskirts of the New York play marts and sometimes represented by such undertakings as a sketch in the "Music Box Revue" and another one in "The Forty-niners," he has crashed his way through to the inner circle of the theatre with this provocative work done in association with Mr. Mitchell. But previous to this Mr. Bloch has written a number of full-length pieces and several of them have been produced. His initial play of three acts or more was "The Emancipation of Anne," and it probably still rests in the secret closet of William A. Brady, who bought it but did not put it on.

Mr. Bloch did achieve production in "The Third Shot," a melodrama, whose cast included Florence Johns, Ruth Shepley and Alphoeus Ethier. It was played out of town, but never came to New York. Another long play, "The Princess Who Wouldn't Say Die," was recently done on the Coast and may find its way Eastward by next season. Recently, too, has Mr. Bloch contributed to Life and written several scenarios in association with Robert E. Sherwood, one of which, a picture for Syd Chaplin, has been released.

EXCEPT for a season spent in the chorus of "Apple Blossoms," the Kreisler-Jacobi operetta of six years back, a two weeks' engagement with the Belasco stock company in Washington was the sole preparation for a Broadway engagement required by Mary Philips, the Sally Field of Marc Connelly's fantastic comedy, "The Wisdom Tooth," at The Little Theatre.

Miss Philips's first Broadway part was that of a chorus girl—another evidence of type casting—in "The Old Soak." The following season she went on tour with Harry Beresford, and last season she appeared in the short-lived "Nerves." During the run of "The Best People" she handled Frances Howard's part on matinee days while Miss Howard was working on the motion picture version of "The Swan." After that she understudied Ina Claire in "Grounds for Divorce." Earlier in the season she was in "One of the Family" with Grant Mitchell, leaving that play for her present engagement.

Miss Philips was born in New London, Conn., and was educated at Lauralton Hall and at a convent in New Haven, thereby restoring to all its past prestige the list of actresses who have been educated in convents. She admits to an ambition for the stage since childhood. A bashfulness and timidity made her a complete failure at school theatricals. After her school days were finished she set out to conquer her shortcomings, and she actually obtained her engagement in "Apple Blossoms" by forcing herself to go to New York and canvass the producers' offices. It was also without introductions, not even the casual sort, that one gets to a man close to Mr. Shubert, or Mr. Ettinger, or Mr. Dillingham, that she found herself the engagement in stock in Washington and after that in "The Old Soak."

TESSA KOSTA, currently the Aniuta of "Song of the Flame," was born in Chicago, educated in San Francisco and Salt Lake City and made her first professional appearance in the city that is Lake Michigan's biggest single attraction under the guidance of George W. Lederer, who placed her in the chorus of several musical comedies then playing in Chicago, in order to give her the training for what she refers to as the "better things."

The meager records in Salt Lake City newspapers which first brought the attention of any single group of readers to Miss Kosta indicated an ability to play the piano at a time when the stool was raised to its limit to permit her chubby fingers to manipulate the keys. At the same time there was noted her ability to sing in what for a child was a deep contralto voice, and would have appreciated that in any one else. These accomplishments, according to contemporary notices, were displayed without nervousness or the slightest hesitancy on her part, which may be accounted for in the fact that Miss Kosta's family for some generations back were players and singers who had entertained Vienna and Budapest audiences for years.

Following a tour in "Madame Sherry," in the Lina Abarbanell role arranged for her by the same Mr. Lederer, who incidentally added a few years to her age at the time to avoid complications with the municipal authorities wherever she played, Miss Kosta came to New York with Raymond Hitchcock in "The Beauty Shop." Followed a part in "The Love Mill" and then she assumed the rôle of Marjanah in "Chu Chin Chow." As the singing slave girl in that opulent operetta she came to the attention of George M. Cohan, who gave her the prima donna part in "The Royal Vagabond." "Lassie," the Cushing-Feltz-Royce musical play, was the next work to engage Miss Kosta's talent, and then in order were "Princess April" and the Gilbert and Sullivan revival of "Princess Ida" last Spring, which brings her history more or less up to date.

RUSSELL MACK, playing the rôle of Eddie in "Square Crooks," which, after a career uptown at Daly's Sixty-third Street Theatre, moves tomorrow to Maxine Elliott's Theatre, admits that he used to be a newspaper man himself. That is he was a reporter before he made his début on the stage. Mack was born in Providence, R. I., where his father, Fred Mack, also is a newspaper man, and when he left high school he went to work on The Providence Journal. On several occasions he assisted the dramatic editor of the paper and thus became acquainted with the manager of a local playhouse. The, according to its many admirers, silent drama then triumphed over journalism, and young Mack was made manager of a motion picture house. Vaudeville was a part of the entertainments, and in a few months the new manager had another idea.

For his services Mack was receiving $30 a week, working from early in the morning until midnight, while the performers on the stage slaved on an average of less than an hour a day and received salaries from four to five times as great as his. Young Mack, being among other things an ardent student of economic theories, decided it was all wrong. He had an idea that he could entertain an audience as well as some of the actors who played his theatre, and future happenings have shown him to be right. Consequently he began to practice a few dance numbers in his leisure moments. His voice didn't matter much; it really never does in dance numbers.

Mack arranged a fifteen-minute act, which included snappy remarks, topical parodies and a few dancing steps. With the aid of a friend in the Keith booking offices in Boston he secured a date in Salem, Mass., for a three-day tryout, for which he received $25.

He continued in the varieties, and two years later he was playing over the Keith and Orpheum circuits. Five years ago he replaced Harry Fox in "Oh, Look," when the piece went on tour. Whereupon Arthur Hammerstein signed him for the principal rôle in "Joan of Arkansas," known as "Always You" when it played at the Central Theatre here. This marked his New York début.

His next engagement was at the Globe Theatre in "The Girl from Home," Charles Dillingham's musical version of "The Dictator." Then followed "Peggy" and "Go Easy, Mabel," at the Longacre Theatre, with Ethel Levey and Estelle Winwood. June, 1922, found him playing opposite Charles Ruggles in a farce called "Who's Who."

Later that same year came "The Gingham Girl," then "My Girl," and a short run in "The Four Flusher." All of which may be classed as having paved the way for his present rôle in "Square Crooks."

IN HONOR OF MR. HERBERT

Vaudeville's latest extra-mural activity concerns itself with a celebration in honor of the late Victor Herbert, which will occur during the week of May 24, the anniversary of his death. All the Keith-Albee, Proctor and Moss houses will join in the event, which is being arranged by J. J. Murdock and Mark A. Luescher, director general of the Hippodrome. The celebration will take the form of Herbert musical numbers and tabloid presentations of his former successes. . . . Tom Lewis, comedian of the "Follies," is going to England and Ireland for summer music hall engagements. . . . Irving Fisher, another "Follies" tourist of late, will probably enter the Keith-Albee houses with a singing act.

Kenneth MacKenna and Helen Hayes as They Will Appear in the Revival of Barrie's "What Every Woman Knows," Opening at the Bijou on Tuesday Night.

CONCERNING THE VERNAL HABIT OF PLAY-REVIVING

THIS started out to be a long article proving that the current season has been the greatest for revivals in the recent history of the theatre, but a hurried glance at the files checked such a notion before it had got beyond the stage of a pleasant prospect. This, undoubtedly, has been one of the outstanding revival seasons of several years, but so was the last one, and even the one before that can show a fairly imposing list of productions that have come back.

But tabulation is not the least pleasant of the indoor sports, and it has become part of the social life of many dramatic offices, supplanting such pastimes as croquet, mah jong, knitting, craps and, in some instances, tatting. And when one was bent on tabulating the revivals, after a night, say, at "The Two Orphans" or "Pinafore," the mere lack of a fundamental premise was not to stand in the way.

The past seven days saw the two plays just mentioned being brought to town for engagements in a borough of New York that has seen many changes for better and worse since last they graced its stages. Impending before the deluge of Summer musical shows with their arrant youth making even a promising youngster such as "Glory Hallelujah" seem like a seasoned veteran, are "The Bells," "What Every Woman Knows," "Iolanthe" and the Players' Club revival of "Henry IV, Part 1," which will be seen for a weekly visit in the Spring, in accordance with the annual custom of the Players.

At the outset it may as well be stated that this will attempt to be no comprehensive list of the revivals, one by one, each set forth completely and accurately as to players, original date of production and so forth. There are far too many persons in such obscure art centres as Kalamazoo, Mich., or Lima, Ohio, who make a pleasant pastime of keeping track of New York revivals, and when the compiler of statistics makes the fatal omission of saying that, for instance, "Love for Love" opened at the Provincetown instead of the Cherry Lane Theatre, their passion for calling attention to inaccuracy becomes a blazing fetich.

A theatrical season being, as it is, regarded as starting in July and ending in June, from July, 1925, until the present date of writing, there have been about twenty-six revivals of importance. This includes a look up the road at those productions which are more or less definitely announced for the remainder of the season.

The Theatre Guild got in the vanguard of the new season's plays with its Shaw revivals, starting off with "Arms and the Man," and following that with the double bill of "Androcles and the Lion" and "The Man of Destiny." There were two productions of "The School for Scandal," Mrs. Insull's, which hung on determinedly through the sheer weight of money, and George Tyler's touring company, which was here for but one night in its peregrinations over the country. Two "Hamlets" there were also, the roving "Hamlet in Modern Clothes" and the more conventional version offered by Walter Hampden and Ethel Barrymore.

The revival fever, incidentally, seems to bite old and young in the theatre alike. Such grizzled and hardened managers as George C. Tyler, William A. Brady and the Messrs. Shubert are imbued with the same spirit of resuscitation that strikes the newest producing group to undertake the tenancy of the small and drafty Greenwich Village art theatres.

A recent, and in some cases greatly deplored aspect of the revival vogue, is the tendency to bring old plays to the light of day simply to burlesque them, and add even a few more rheumatic creaks to their joints than they would be likely to possess if played seriously. That started—although there will doubtless be some one in Red Bank, N. J., to arise and say it didn't—with the presentation of "Fashion" at the Provincetown Theatre, when that depiction of life in approximately one-twentieth of our city's population's grandfather's New York was done with tongue in cheek and a portentous wink that boded no respect. "East Lynne," of long and honorable service, is the latest of the standard dramas of yesteryear to be held up for disrespectful scrutiny by members of the younger generation.

Classifying them roughly—perhaps as roughly as possible—there are three divisions into which the majority of the revivals fall. There are those which are perennially popular, undimmed by time and untouched by the ravages of age. The Gilbert and Sullivan operettas are among the chief representatives of this class. Then there are the plays or musical pieces that are brought back in what seems to be an experimental mood on the part of the managers. That is to say the producer's assumed belief in the success of a production seems to be augmented in some measure by the desire to see what life is left in the old piece once it gets out into the air and by the further inclination to witness the oldest of acting that pleased our forefathers reacting upon the mixed assemblage which constitutes the modern theatre audience. These are, of course, revivals that are "played straight" and more often than not have in their casts old favorites. Of these "The Two Orphans" is nothing if not an outstanding example. So is Hampden's "Cyrano de Bergerac," and so promises to be the Players' show.

The third class and the minority one is made up of the favorites of yesteryear that are burlesqued and travestied. Their success is largely concerned with the respect and veneration in which they are held and the cleverness with which they are presented.

Revivals, like every other portion of the world of the stage, move in cycles, and lately it has been Ibsen's inning. Next year it may be Charles Hoyt's or Theodore Kremer's. And the year after that the earlier melodramas of Owen Davis may even be brought back for public inspection.

Just what plays have won enough interest on the part of some not entirely disinterested persons, managers, actors or an experimental group, to warrant their being revived form an interesting list.

From June, 1924, to June, 1925, the following were of chief importance in those brought back: "The Fatal Wedding," "She Stoops to Conquer," "Sweeney Todd," "The Guardsman," "The Second Mrs. Tanqueray," "Peter Pan," "The Way of the World," "Patience," "Cyrano de Bergerac," "Candida," "Othello," "The Wild Duck," "The Little Minister," "Pierrot the Prodigal," "A Bit o' Love," "Love for Love," "The Servant in the House," "The Mikado," "Caesar and Cleopatra," "Princess Ida," "Rosmersholm," "The Critic," "Man or Devil," "Trelawney of the Wells," "Engaged" and "Charley's Aunt."

From last July until the present writing, which also considers those planned for the next few weeks of the present season, the revivals include "Arms and the Man," "Love for Love," "The School for Scandal" (both Mrs. Insull's and George Tyler's productions), "Androcles and the Lion," "Magda," "The Man of Destiny," two "Hamlets" (one in modern dress and one in the conventional manner), "The Tale of the Wolf," "Little Eyolf," "The Jest," "Cyrano de Bergerac" again, "East Lynne," "The Taming of the Shrew," "Hedda Gabler," "John Gabriel Borkman," "Ghosts," "The Unchastened Woman," "The Two Orphans," "Pinafore," "The Bells," "What Every Woman Knows," "Iolanthe" and "Henry IV, Part 1," the last two of which are still in the prospect stage.

Besides recalling memories of other times, the revivals of today may indicate the theatrical tendencies of tomorrow. Such a list as the above may, therefore, be any number of things to any number of people.

VAUDEVILLE GOSSIP

JOSEPH SANTLEY and Ivy Sawyer will be the coming week's headliners at the Palace. They have forsaken the more speculative field of night club work in favor of variety bookings, and have prepared for the occasion what is ambitiously announced as their "fifth annual two-a-day production." It is called "Thus and So," thereby distinguishing it from their sixth annual two-a-day production which is tentatively known as "This and That." The "Thus and So" offering, it also develops, will contain several of their past numbers from the "Music Box Revue."

Over on Sixth Avenue the Hippodrome has arranged a seven days' celebration in honor of its twenty-first birthday, which happy event takes place tomorrow. The house was opened on April 12, 1905, by Thompson and Dundy with "A Yankee Circus on Mars" as the inaugural attraction. . . . The celebratory program will include Sam Bernard and Louis Mann in their condensed version of "Friendly Enemies," Alice Gentle in a song recital, the Brothers Timberg and a host of others. The Benda Masque Fantasy, danced chiefly by Margaret Severn, will be held over.

Anna Case, who was forced to cancel her recent engagement at the Hippodrome because of illness, will return there soon to fill her scheduled appearances.

CHEF HURLBUT

NEXT Fall, let it be here recorded, a successful playwright will enter the restaurant business. And, in accordance with contemporary journalistic standards, that is very likely to be news, for the rewards of successful playwriting are among the few to compare favorably with the takings of restaurant owners—even the owners of coffee pots—which, nevertheless, shall not be considered in this discussion.

The playwright referred to is William Hurlbut, identified with the New York stage for the last sixteen years, off and on, and currently known to fame as the author of "Bride of the Lamb," which seems to be stirring up major ructions in the vicinity of Seventh Avenue and Fourth Street. For in this play Mr. Hurlbut has achieved the goal of most every one writing for the stage, and now he is quite content to give up his vocation in favor of an avocation which, from a temporary experience, promises to run a close second in the matter of profits.

The goal of his recent attainment is the self-satisfaction that comes to every one who writes a piece simply for the sheer desire of doing so, without thought of popular taste or prospective success, who panders in no way to the whims of his public, and who then finds that the work, presented just as he had wanted it presented, is attracting critical and popular favor of a most bountiful sort.

This is, Mr. Hurlbut confides with considerable pride, just what happened in the case of "Bride of the Lamb," the history of whose production may now be set down for posterity.

Mr. Hurlbut started to write the play last Fall, from an idea which had occurred to him as a result of a murder committed in Illinois just before the more spectacular Leopold-Loeb case crowded it off the front pages. In a small town, similar in most respects to the one from which Mr. Hurlbut had come to New York, a minister killed his wife and one of his parishioners murdered her husband, both of them considering this a more respectable expedient than divorce. From this happening Mr. Hurlbut evolved the idea of "Bride of the Lamb" and, when he started to write it, he decided that he would endeavor to create the sort of piece he wanted to do, and hang the movie rights! As soon as it was finished to his satisfaction, he sent it to Robert Milton, and the next morning he received an offer from the producer. Milton decided that the best thing to do was to try to interest the firm of O'Neill, Musgrowan & Jones in the production. A reading of the script accomplished this, and the rehearsals further showed that the piece was one of those miracles that keep the playwrights and producers believing in Santa Claus, no matter what their contract relations are—a play, in substance, that needed not so much as a single change in rehearsal. That at all events, is Mr. Hurlbut's story. In the room in which he made these statements there was no Gideon Bible and no one was present to compel him to take oath.

Having thus made the hole-in-one for all playwrights, Mr. Hurlbut is of the opinion that such luck should hold good in what he really desires to do, namely, operate a restaurant. While he was engrossed upon "Bride of the Lamb" he experimented with the undertaking by starting an eating place in West Forty-eighth Street which was markedly popular. It should be stated here that Mr. Hurlbut's real liking for a restaurant is the opportunity it affords him to cook. He has no desire to wash the dishes or peel potatoes.

This Summer he plans to combine cooking and writing at Lake Placid, where he will open a tea room called "The Playwrights." When the Summer is over "The Playwrights" will be moved bodily to New York, a place already having been obtained for it in the Fifties.

If there is anything in the theory of heredity, William Hurlbut comes by this desire to cook much more naturally than he comes by his ability to write plays. Born in Belvedere, Ill., in 1883, he is the scion of conventional Middle Western parents who would have considered themselves actually insulting you if they had dared to eat less than six courses, with pie as a chaser, before you at breakfast. There were no leanings toward the drama in any of the Hurlbut forebears, and the only one of them who had had any direct life in art was his mother's father who had indulged, more or less openly, in the art of portrait painting. And whether or not the reader believes in heredity, Mrs. Hurlbut evidently did, for she decided then and there that her boy was to become a painter. To this end he studied at several art schools in the Middle West, specially in St. Louis, and became an illustrator for magazines, with no thought of doing anything else. At that time it is recorded that his ambitions were not culinary, not even to the extent of frying an egg.

Eventually he followed the conventional road for all artists and drifted to New York, studied at the Art Students' League and drew for Life, Harpers and Cosmopolitan, principally in imitation of Howard Chandler Christy.

Contacts with the theatre, even of the most casual sort, fascinated him, and yielding to the Kipling influence which was then as prevalent as were imitators of Howard Chandler Christy, he based a play on the poem "One by One," which was never accepted. This may have been because, according to his own and the press agent's confession, it was written in the best Pinerotic style.

Be that as it may, Mr. Hurlbut managed to become familiar enough with the ways of the theatre to do a play for Olga Nethersole, which was produced in 1911. A few months previous to that David Belasco had presented "The Fighting Hope" as a vehicle for Blanche Bates, and the steak-and-onion complex was becoming strong within him.

The next two years are covered tersely and perhaps fairly in a random biographical note which states that "In the meantime he kept on writing and destroying plays." How many he wrote and destroyed he himself does not know. But in 1913 he hit upon the locale of the Illinois small town in which he was born and brought forth "The Strange Woman," which Elsie Ferguson graced at the Lyceum and Gaiety Theatres. Another hiatus, presumably filled with plays written and destroyed, and then "Romance and Arabella" which starred Laura Hope Crews and was even more notable for the fact that Alfred Lunt's first big hit was in the character part.

Then followed a London success, "Trimmed in Scarlet" which Violet Vanbrugh did for two years there, thus giving the playwright ample time for researches into the proper way to grill mutton chops and prepare the other gastronomic delights that they order much better over there. Maxine Elliott later brought "Trimmed in Scarlet" to New York but it was not conspicuously successful.

"Lilies of the Field" resulted in his greatest New York success, previous to "Bride of the Lamb." Its attendant financial rewards permitted him further culinary research into the dishes of the Italians, Armenians, Spaniards and the Greeks, all of which he encountered in places not far from the Klaw Theatre.

Previously this season he was represented in town by a short-lived piece called "Chivalry." And thus to "Bride of the Lamb."

Hurlbut has done all his writing with the exception of a lone scenario in the theatre, but he says he has never written anything which has given him the satisfaction he has obtained from this probing into the recesses of his early memory which were filled with recollections of small town taboos, mostly concerned with sex and religion, taken either separately or in combination, and then forming from these taboos the present play at the Greenwich Village. Compared to it he says that even the creation of a ten-course dinner is, in the words of Lorelei, really nothing.

In conclusion, although it is too obvious to mention, it might be said that in his new restaurant there will be a dish bearing the name of "Bride of the Lamb." Perhaps it will be mint sauce.

LONDON NOTES

Special Cable to THE NEW YORK TIMES.

LONDON, April 8.

THE sole opening of the week was "Big Business," an American importation. It had a good reception.

["Big Business," so far as is known, has not been produced in New York. It is the work of William Devereux, an English actor, who is well known over here. Oscar Asche and Marie Lohr have the leading rôles.—Ed.]

Elsie Janis will soon be seen in London in "Pumice of 1926." . . . The American musical comedy, "Tip-Toes," has been secured for London by William Gaunt, one of the Shuberts' English partners. "The Co-optimists," however, are definitely booked for His Majesty's Theatre this Autumn, a circumstance which lends further weight to the view here that the Shuberts' intensive London campaign is over.

Noel Coward, who recently arrived home from New York, is writing a new play for the American stage. He does not think that the play can be done here—first, because it would not pass the censor and, secondly, because the press would also disapprove of it.

Apropos of censorship, control of the activities of the Sunday night producing organizations in London is under discussion between the censor and the Home Secretary. Apart from the impropriety of many of the plays performed, managers hold that no one should be allowed to make money out of theatrical enterprises on a day when they are debarred by law from opening their theatres.

'Successes' Turned Down By Managers

By GEORGE ARLISS.

WE are perpetually hearing that the latest phenomenal Broadway success was hawked around for years and declined by nearly every New York manager; of course, the author of that play will naturally regard all managers except the one who produced it as a parcel of idiots—every author feels like that toward the person who declines his play. But the onlooker who knows the game is aware that the men who declined it are probably much better judges than the manager who actually produced it. Its success was what is known as a fluke. It is the audience that is acting strangely. The audience has no right to like it, but it does. And the experienced manager often becomes bewildered, and feels like rushing back to his office, standing in the midst of these bunches of plays which have been thrown by the authors like bouquets at his feet—all varieties, from the wild exotic to the simple domestic—and making his selection by that process of elimination which we associate with the lines "she loves me, she loves me not."

I do not wish to create the impression that I believe everything connected with dramatic representation to be a matter of chance. Obviously those people who live by and for the theatre have learned something of the requirements of the public, although they may constantly be receiving rude shocks. It is, for instance, generally admitted that no play can be a success which does not act upon the emotions. It must seem obvious to the ordinary theatregoer that it is the duty of the actor and the dramatist to be true to nature. But, if we are going to examine the stage at all intimately, we should stop to consider just how far this reality, or realism, may be carried.

There is a certain public, especially in New York, which decides that anything different is bound to be better. It is for the most part unthinking and unintelligent — I mean in things appertaining to the theatre; but it serves a good purpose, inasmuch as it is a sufficiently large and noisy public to call attention to and create discussion of the plays which it supports. And, therefore, plays that are different are not immediately condemned to death because they do not conform to accepted principles, but are given some chance to live their own life and to become leaders.

This public is terribly up-to-date; very "New Art." It looks with scorn upon all the old stuff, or, at any rate, with a feeling of superiority; much as a youth getting on in his teens may regard his living grandmother as a dead one and his father as a back number — and himself as the real thing. I heard one of this up-to-date set say recently: "Thank God we are getting away from all that Henry Arthur Jones and Pinero stuff." Those are the people I mean. And they have made and are making such a clatter that even some of the good authors have become uneasy and have decided that they ought to try to write something different—something fresh and away from the old lines.

An audience in the theatre should be carried away by the play; it should not be unduly puzzled or otherwise distracted by tricks or fads of author or actor or scene-painter. In my opinion, it is the duty of the author to construct his scenes so that they are vividly remembered until the curtain is down; and it is the business of the scenic artist to build his so that they are forgotten as soon as the curtain is up.

REFLECTIONS AND NEWS OF THE SCREEN WORLD

Last Week's Productions

'Blind Goddess" Has Merit of Sustained Suspense

By MORDAUNT HALL.

WHATEVER may be the shortcomings in the picturization of Arthur Train's novel "The Blind Goddess," it should be admitted that the director and the scenarist have accomplished that unusual feat in film productions—sustaining the suspense up to the closing chapter. A great failing with most photodramas is that after seeing less than a third of the story one is able to visualize exactly that which is going to happen. Authors have often killed off their heroes and heroines, but only once in a blue moon is such a thing done in pictures. Moreover, in films the heroine and the hero in the end must invariably not only be happy but remarkably successful. As Robert Nichols, the Oxford poet, quoted in one of his articles in Hollywood, "the girl has got to get the boy, the dough and the car." In "The Blind Goddess" they do not snuff out the hero's life, but they do murder off the girl's father, a most sympathetic character. This homicide comes as quite a shock to the audience, as it was only natural to assume that "Big Bill" Devens would be virtually the hero of the story and a character who would share the last sequence with the happy young couple.

This picture creates a certain wonder the first time the erring wife returns and tries to see her former husband, "Big Bill." Although he is willing to help his wife, then Mrs. Clayton, he insists that she shall have nothing to do with her daughter. The girl, Moira, does not recognize her mother, as she was a baby when the unfortunate chapter in her mother's life occurred. "Big Bill," a kindly, self-made man, who is proud of his humble origin, has another reason for keeping mother and daughter apart. He has taught the girl to look upon her mother as a sweet, good woman, who died when Moira was an infant. He does not wish to have the girl disillusioned regarding her mother.

After Mrs. Clayton calls at her husband's office and her daughter passes without recognizing her or being recognized, "Big Bill," who, incidentally, is not an exaggerated type, sends out a note to the effect that he will never change his mind, and he encloses some money in the envelope. The mother sends back the note and the bills and leaves the building. So far as one gathers from the actions of "Big Bill" his former wife's visit made little impression on him, which may be excused as incidents are quickly piled up in this yarn. And they are interestingly pictured. "Big Bill's" daughter is devoted to her father, but she falls in love with Hugh Dillon, an altruistic young lawyer. "Big Bill" is an influence in politics and a telephone message to the District Attorney results in Dillon being appointed one of the prosecutor's assistants.

The self-made father has amassed so much gold that he entrusts his intricate business dealings to his lawyer, Kelling. "Big Bill" loathes the idea of reading through legal verbiage and he therefore signs anything set before him rather than undergo what he considers torture.

The Pistol.

Devens's failure to forgive his wife and his carelessness in business deals are his sins. His former wife finally comes to his spacious and well-furnished home. She threatens to shoot herself and "Big Bill" snatches the pistol from her. He flings the weapon on his desk and eventually sends Mrs. Clayton out of the place. Not long afterward Kelling comes in unannounced. He is distraught, for the Grand Jury has indicted "Big Bill," himself and others in the traction group. When "Big Bill" insists that the law shall take its course even if he has to go to jail himself, Kelling sees red. Observing the revolver on the desk he picks it up and puts a bullet through "Big Bill."

Here the producer takes advantage of his audience by switching to a contrasting scene. Mrs. Clayton is arrested, cross-questioned until she asks to see Dillon alone. To him she confides that Moira, the girl he intends to marry, is her daughter. Dillon subsequently believes in Mrs. Clayton's innocence and therefore resigns from the District Attorney's office to become her lawyer.

The producer carries on the suspense virtually to the bitter end. Moira is estranged from Dillon because of his stand in the matter. He is not permitted to tell her that the elderly woman he is defending is her mother, and the trial continues until the jury goes out to deliberate. Moira then forgives Dillon, and they go to the late "Big Bill's" home. They tinker with the dictaphone in which they had on one record declared their love for each other and "Big Bill" had given them his blessing. They hear their own words, then the dead man's utterance, and just as they are about to stop the mechanism of the dictaphone they hear "Big Bill's" voice again. In just a few words he declares that Kelling shot him. Quick as a flash Moira and Dillon hurry off to the court with the dictaphone. They run up the aisle just as the foreman of the jury is standing ready to deliver the verdict.

Ernest Torrence is excellent as "Big Bill." There is no exaggeration about his mannerisms or his clothes. He is just an authentic portrait of a self-made individual who through a touch here and an action there gives one the impression of a man enjoying a feather bed after sleeping on the hard boards. A nice note is struck in the affection between the father and daughter. Louise Dresser is genuinely impressive as the wayward mother. Esther Ralston is a beautiful, fair young woman, and, although she is charming in the initial scenes, it looks as if she had been up and down Fifth Avenue a dozen times in order to buy the most becoming mourning hat and gown. She also has a scintilla of a smile when one expects to see a tear.

Exceeding the Fun Limit

Harold Lloyd's comedy "For Heaven's Sake" was on trial before a jury of thousands last week at the Rialto, and it is safe to say that the majority of men, women and children enjoyed it. Of its story it cannot boast, but it has a wealth of original gags, some of which are sure to pry loose a laugh or two from the most crotchety, rheumatic person who ever went to a movie. But it seems a pity that Mr. Lloyd does not concentrate on vehicles like "Girl Shy," for he proves, even in this last feverish film, that he is quite a good actor. There is, in a way, some of "Safety Last" in this present production, for you see hairbreadth escapes in speeding automobiles and a thug, who has enjoyed something stronger than orange juice, trying to balance himself on the rail of a fast-going automobile bus. Mr. Lloyd spends some time trying to eat a powder puff and then suffering himself to tackle a sponge in lieu of a delicious chocolate cake.

Kiki and Adolphe

Norma Talmadge's performance in "Kiki" appears to have been so well appreciated that this picture has been held over at the Capitol for a second week. It is quite an entertaining feature despite the impossible character and the improbable situations. Perhaps it would have been much more effective if Kiki's gyrations had been curbed a trifle and she had not been asked to repeat some of the absurd antics. Miss Talmadge is undeniably clever and for that reason it seems surprising that several of the sequences were not considerably shortened. George K. Arthur, who burst into fame in England and later had to make a living by running a grocery store in Hollywood instead of acting, is most amusing in the rôle of the valet, Adolphe. Mr. Arthur will be remembered as the boy in "The Salvation Hunters," a performance which proved that he was an efficient actor. Virtually all the Parisian atmosphere of this story is destroyed by smart subtitles in American vernacular. The little waif is supposed to say "Oh Gawd!" and in angry moments Kiki seems to have spent her days between Fourteenth Street and the Bowery.

"The Flaming Frontier" came to the Colony at midnight a week ago. It is a picture with scenes that will stir the youthful imagination, but the story is much too obvious. You know just what is going to happen to the weak young man and you feel reasonably certain that the fast riding hero will come into his own before the lights are turned on in the theatre. Hoot Gibson, who rides like Buffalo Bill, is splendid while he is on horseback. It is another matter, however, when they put him into a very tight West Point uniform, for one knows he is uneasy and it almost makes you squirm in your seat wondering how he is ever going to get the tunic unbuttoned. Dustin Farnum was in one of his lax moods while impersonating General Custer. He made the General far too friendly with his troops and an old soak appears to be on most intimate terms with Custer.

The "flaming" scenes in this film are by no means impressive. The fires, through the hand-painted work, appear to be red, but dead. There are, however, some fine shots of hundreds of redskins, some excellent desert scenes and glimpses into the valleys of the wide open country.

In this picture there is a conventional villain, a treacherous devil, who, if he had worn a topper instead of a wide-brimmed soft hat, could have been conceded a place in a play like "The Lights o' London." He carefully twirled his black mustache, looked to right and left, narrowed his bright, dark eyes, and then, after a puff on his strong cigar, he went on playing solitaire when he well knew that men were fighting and dying because of his plotting.

Noah Young, Jobyna Ralston and Harold Lloyd in "For Heaven's Sake."
On Top—Scene From Cecil B. De Mille's Photodrama "The Volga Boatman."

De Mille's "Volga Boatman"

CECIL B. DE MILLE'S new picture, "The Volga Boatman," opens at the Times Square Theatre on Tuesday evening. The picture was inspired by the famous Russian song, and the presentation will be in charge of Dr. Hugo Riesenfeld, who has arranged a special music score. In the cast are William Boyd, Elinor Fair, Victor Varconi, Julia Faye, Theodore Kosloff and Robert Edeson. Mr. De Mille believes this to be his greatest achievement in picture making. He arrived here last week from California and will be present at the première of his production. In "The Volga Boatman" Mr. De Mille says that he is nonpartisan, and that an effort is made to tell the story of two human beings, one a peasant boatman, the other a high-born Princess. The background is that of the Russian revolution.

A needy clergyman living in a small house on a farm five miles from Anacostia, D. C., where he is trying to regain his health, is said to have won the second prize of $250 offered by Film Booking Offices for the best titles suggested for their picture "On the Stroke of Three." The first prize, $1,000, was won by a man who was recently released from prison. N. L. G. Anderson is the name of the minister of the Gospel who won the second prize. Mr. Anderson formerly had a parish in Trydelphia, W. Va., but when his wife died he moved with his two sons to the farm. His suggestion for a title was "Through Dust to Destiny." He received his prize money on the stage of the Logan, a small picture theatre in Anacostia. The winning title was "On the Stroke of Three," which is only nine hours from Victor Seastrom's production, "On the Stroke of Midnight."

Harold Lloyd's "For Heaven's Sake" is to continue at the Rialto.

Douglas MacLean's comedy, "That's My Baby," is the principal attraction at the Rivoli.

"Red Dice," with Rod La Rocque, based on a story by Octavus Roy Cohen, is the film feature at the Broadway.

John Barrymore, in "The Sea Beast," has been held over at the Mark Strand. This film also is the attraction at the Brooklyn Strand.

Paramount's Program

SEVENTY-FIVE pictures are to be released from August, 1926, to August, 1927, by Famous Players-Lasky Corporation. The new policy of this concern is to assign its important directors to making pictures for special theatres. These directors include David W. Griffith, Herbert Brenon, James Cruze, Erich von Stroheim and Frank Lloyd.

James Cruze is making "Old Ironsides," a historical spectacle of the early American navy. Mr. Griffith's production is "Sorrows of Satan." Victor Fleming is busy on "The Rough Riders." Wallace Beery is to appear in a picture to be called "The Greatest Show on Earth," the story of P. T. Barnum and his circus.

Mr. von Stroheim is working on "The Wedding March," a story of Viennese life before, during and after the war. Herbert Brenon's contribution is the film translation of Percival C. Wren's novel "Beau Geste," with Ronald Colman, Neil Hamilton, Alice Joyce, Ralph Forbes, Noah Beery and Mary Brian.

Two German productions, "Variety," with Lya de Putti and Emil Jannings, and "Metropolis," a fantastic melodrama of life in a great city a hundred years hence, are to be released soon.

Harold Lloyd is to supply two comedies and Eddie Cantor is to make his screen bow in "Kid Boots." "Louie the 14th," the musical comedy of that name, is to be picturized with Ford Sterling in the leading rôle. Mr. Sterling also is to play the principal part in the film version of the play "The Show Off."

Wallace Beery and Raymond Hatton are to appear in "We're in the Navy Now," and also "Casey at the Bat." To W. C. Fields falls the lot of appearing in "So's Your Old Man" and "The Wild Man From Borneo."

After he has finished "The Wedding March," von Stroheim is to make a production with Pola Negri. It is called "Hotel Imperial" and is a World War spy story written by the Hungarian playwright Lajos Biro.

Florence Vidor's stellar début will be in "Love, the Magician," a special film story written by Ernest Vajda. Another of Mr. Vajda's efforts, "The Cat's Pajamas," also will be released in the new group.

Bebe Daniels is to be seen in "The College Flirt" and "Stranded in Paris."

Two of the most important works scheduled for the future by Paramount are the film translation of Theodore Dreiser's "An American Tragedy," which is to be directed by David W. Griffith after he completes "The Sorrows of Satan," and "R. U. R.," Karel Capek's imaginative melodrama, which will be produced by James Cruze.

Raymond Griffith will offer four comedies, one of which is "Get Off the Earth," a fantastic film in which the silk-hat star will pay a visit to Mars.

Douglas MacLean is scheduled to make two comedies, the first of which, "Ladies First," will show MacLean's adventures as chaperon for a group of young women in the land of the sheiks.

Adolphe Menjou's plans after completion of his rôle as Satan in "The Sorrows of Satan" call for a trip to London with Malcolm St. Clair to screen Michael Arlen's "The Ace of Cads." After that Menjou will star in "The Head Waiter."

One of the interesting events of the shadow season will be the initial appearance of Emil Jannings in an American-made film. It will be called "The Thief of Dreams," and Betty Bronson and Ricardo Cortez will be featured with Mr. Jannings.

Rex Beach's "Padlocked" now is being made by Allan Dwan.

Pola Negri is to star in "Confession"; two Zane Grey stories, "Man of the Forest" and "Forlorn River," are scheduled for screening; also what is hailed as an exceptional adventure movie by the two travelers who made "Grass." The new one is called "Hazards of the Jungle" and was made in Indo-China.

This Week's Photoplays

RIVOLI—"That's My Baby," with Douglas MacLean, Margaret Morris, Claude Gillingwater, Eugenie Forde, Richard Tucker, Fred Kelsey, Harry Earles and William Orlamonde; directed by William Beaudine.

CAPITOL—"Kiki," with Norma Talmadge, Ronald Colman, Gertrude Astor, Marc MacDermott, George K. Arthur, William Orlamonde, Erwin Connelly, Frankie Darro, Mack Swain and others; adapted from David Belasco's stage production; directed by Clarence Brown.

MARK STRAND—"The Sea Beast," with John Barrymore, Dolores Costello, George O'Hara, Mike Donlin, Sam Baker and James Barrows; adapted from Herman Melville's whaling story "Moby Dick"; directed by Millard Webb.

RIALTO—"For Heaven Sake," with Harold Lloyd, Jobyna Ralston, Noah Young, James Mason, Paul Wiegel and others; directed by Sam Taylor.

WARNERS'—"The Night Cry," with Rin-Tin-Tin, the police dog; John Harron, June Marlowe, Gayne Whitman, Heinie Conklin, Don Alvarado, Mary Louise Miller and others; adapted from a story by Philip Klein and Edward Meagher; directed by Herman Raymaker.

BROADWAY—"Red Dice," with Rod La Rocque and Marguerite de La Motte.

TIMES SQUARE—Opening Tuesday night, Cecil B. de Mille's picture "The Volga Boatman."

APOLLO—"Stella Dallas," with Belle Bennett, Alice Joyce, Lois Moran, Jean Hersholt, Ronald Colman, Douglas Fairbanks Jr., Vera Lewis, Beatrix Prior and others; adapted from Olive Higgins Prouty's novel of the same name; directed by Henry King; special presentation arranged by S. L. Rothafel.

ASTOR—"The Big Parade," with John Gilbert, Renee Adoree, Hobart Bosworth, Claire MacDowell, Claire Adams, Robert Ober, Tom O'Brien, Karl Dane and Rosita Marstini; adapted from a story by Laurence Stallings; directed by King Vidor.

SELWYN—"The Black Pirate," with Douglas Fairbanks, Billie Dove, Tempe Piggott, Donald Crisp, Sam de Grasse, Anders Randolf, Charles Stevens, John Wallace, Fred Becker, Charles Belcher and E. J. Ratcliffe; adapted from a story by Elton Thomas; directed by Albert Parker.

COLONY—"The Flaming Frontier," with Hoot Gibson, Anne Cornwall, Dustin Farnum, Ward Crane, Kathleen Key, Eddie Gribbon, Harry Todd, Harold Goodwin, George Fawcett, Noble Johnson and Charles K. French; written and directed by Edward Sedgwick.

CRITERION — "Mare Nostrum," with Alice Terry, Antonio Moreno, Mlle. Kithnou, Michael Brantford, Rosita Ramirez, Frederick Mariotti, Mme. Paquerette, Fernand Mailly, Andre von Engelman and others; adapted from Blasco Ibanez's novel; directed by Rex Ingram.

EMBASSY—"La Boheme," with Lillian Gish, John Gilbert, Renee Adoree, Roy D'Arcy, Edward Everett Horton, Valentia Zimina and others; adopted from the romance by Mme. Fred de Gresac; suggested by Henry Murger's "Life in the Latin Quarter"; directed by King Vidor.

GEORGE M. COHAN—"Ben-Hur," with Ramon Novarro, Francis X. Bushman, May McAvoy, Claire MacDowell, Kathleen Key and others; adapted from General Lew Wallace's drama; directed by Fred Niblo; special music score by David Mendoza and William Axt.

CAMEO—"Cyrano de Bergerac," with Pierre Magnier, Linda Moglia, Angelo Ferrari and others; adapted from Edmond Rostand's play; directed by Augusto Genina.

LOEW'S LEXINGTON—Today and tomorrow, "The Untamed Lady," with Gloria Swanson; Tuesday and Wednesday, "The Reckless Lady," with Belle Bennett; Thursday and Friday, "Sea Horses," with Jack Holt; Saturday, "The Sap," with Jack Pickford.

LOEW'S NEW YORK—Today, "Bride of the Storm," with Dolores Costello; tomorrow, "The Untamed Lady," with Gloria Swanson; Tuesday, "White Mice" and "Forbidden Waters"; Wednesday, "Memory Lane," with Conrad Nagel; daily change of program.

LOEW'S STATE—Today, "The Untamed Lady," with Gloria Swanson; balance of the week, "The Sap," with Jack Pickford.

OLYMPIA—Today through to Tuesday, "Too Much Money" and "The Fighting Edge"; Wednesday through to Saturday, "The Vanishing American" and "The Great Love."

PLAZA—Today and tomorrow, "The Skyrocket," with Owen Moore; Tuesday and Wednesday, "The Vanishing American," with Richard Dix; Thursday and Friday, "The Dixie Merchant," with Madge Bellamy; Saturday, "The Cowboy and the Countess," with Buck Jones.

SHERIDAN—Today through to Wednesday, "Let's Get Married," with Richard Dix; Thursday through to Saturday, "Dancing Mothers," with Conway Tearle.

BROOKLYN STRAND—"The Sea Beast," with John Barrymore and Dolores Costello.

Picturing the Dawn

ONE day last week David W. Griffith was occupied with a most interesting scene in the picturization of Marie Corelli's novel "The Sorrows of Satan." It was a simple scene; the setting consisted of a drab-looking room, with a coffee pot on the hob of the fireplace and the inevitable nottingham lace curtains on the little window in the back.

Mr. Griffith wanted to picture effectively, and yet as quickly as it was feasible the coming of a new day. Carol Dempster sat with her head in her arms at the cheap-looking table. There was something evidently concealed by a newspaper, for under it one caught a glimpse of a spoon and a dish. The room was a bluish dark. There was a meal evidently consumed. Griffith was also the acting, and then Mr. Griffith gave the word to his photographer to take the scene.

On three different strong lights before the set and on the two behind the window in the rear were nine layers of gauze. Mr. Griffith had timed how long it would take to lift each layer and he counted the seconds himself as he sat in his camp chair. His signal to the men who were to lift the layers of gauze was a slight raising of his left hand, and to himself he counted the layers so that he knew when the action by Miss Dempster ought to commence.

The Griffith hand went up slowly, and there was a little more light in the room as the first layer of gauze was lifted. A second or so passed and another increase of light took place gradually, and so on until the sun seemed to be streaming through the cheap nottingham lace curtains.

Miss Dempster slowly raised her head. She, in character, had been in the same chair all night waiting for the young man she loved to come in. On the table before her when the newspaper fell to the floor was the dinner she had prepared for her sweetheart. It was the dull, gray dawn of deep disappointment, the time when the supposed dream becomes a dreaded reality. The young man had not come! It was no nightmare, but an awful fact.

There were three other pictures being produced in the Paramount studio at Astoria that afternoon, but none of them was so stirring as this simple, pathetic scene.

"Cyrano de Bergerac" in Color

THE screen version of "Cyrano de Bergerac" is the International Film Arts Guild's offering at the Cameo this week. This picture, which is in natural colors, was presented last Summer at the Colony. Pierre Magnier, a well-known French actor, officiates in the title rôle. The Guild announces that special arrangements are being made whereby students and teachers may attend the Cameo presentations at reduced rates.

An all-negro photoplay is to be made at the De Mille studio in Culver City, Cal. Bertram Millhauser, production editor, is to assume charge of making this picture, the story of which is to be a simple one of how the negro lives and acts in everyday life.

Dimitri Buchowetzki is to direct the first production in which Emil Jannings will act in this country. Mr. Jannings will arrive in the early Autumn. The picture is to be known as "The Thief of Dreams," a romantic comedy drama based on Richard Connell's story, "A Friend of Napoleon."

Ralph Ince has just completed the third filming of Jack London's story "The Sea Wolf." Mr. Ince impersonated the leading rôle and also directed the picture, in which he was assisted by Mrs. Jack London.

Michael Courtice, an Austrian director, has been engaged by the Warner Brothers. Courtice directed a production called "Moon of Israel," which is to be seen in this country next October.

Harry Langdon has decided to call his next comedy "The Yes Man."

Johnnie Walker, who played the leading rôle in "Over the Hill," has been selected by James Cruze to act the part of Stephen Decatur in his production "Old Ironsides," the story of which was written by Laurence Stallings, author of "The Big Parade," and co-author of the play "What Price Glory." More than sixty old schooners now are in California waters being remodeled into old-time men-of-war, and the fighting frigate, Constitution (better known as Old Ironsides) is being reproduced in its actual measurements. Certain streets of the City of Tripoli have also been reproduced in Hollywood. Those in the cast include Wallace Beery, Esther Ralston, George Bancroft and Charles Farrell.

Cheerful Shadows

Executive of Producing Company Tells of Pictures to Come

HOWARD DEITZ, one of the executives of Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer, who returned recently from California, last week in an interview gave an account of some of the studio activities that had come to his attention. He was particularly impressed by the fact that the Culver City studio had created a record in production for a single period, for there were no fewer than eighteen Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer pictures in course of production while he was on the West Coast, and it is possible that this week, through the clever dovetailing in outdoor and indoor work, there will be twenty-two photoplays in production.

"Possibly the first thing that strikes the eye of the visitor in entering the Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer studio is a board on which are the names of thirty directors," said Mr. Deitz. "These directors will do their share of the work in turning out at least fifty-two productions during the next fiscal year. Then one is impressed by the enthusiasm and the discipline of the organization, which is run by Louis B. Mayer and his assistants, Irving Thalberg and Harry Rapf. They have at their fingers' tips the ideas of many novels they have waded through or the treatments they have had written of scores of literary efforts. Originality is a great thing in motion picture making, and Mr. Mayer and his assistants not only insist on it in the story but in the sequences and in the individual scenes. Conventional methods are being discarded wherever it is thought that the ideas have become shopworn. A fresh viewpoint seemed to me to have been inspired by enthusiasm and also the marked success with which so many of our productions have met. There is 'The Big Parade,' 'Ben-Hur,' 'The Merry Widow,' 'La Bohème' and 'The Unholy Three.' These productions have done much to inspire a sureness of touch and to dissipate the idea that picture makers have to produce conventional stories along conventional lines. Mr. Mayer and Mr. Thalberg always encourage original twists in the scripts and in the direction.

Some New Productions.

"King Vidor, who now has two pictures on Broadway, is at present working on the picturization of Sabatini's 'Bardelys the Magnificent.' A few of the pictures engaging the attention of the directors and the scenarists are 'Brown of Harvard,' 'Tote,' 'In Praise of James Carabine,' 'There You Are,' 'Love's Blindness,' an Elinor Glyn story 'The Boy Friend,' the new name for the film version of the play; 'The Book of Charm,' which is being directed by Monta Bell; 'Paris,' which is being made by Edmund Goulding; 'The Road to Mandalay,' written by Tod Browning and Herman Mankiewicz, and 'Bellamy the Magnificent,' the title of which will be changed.

"An unusually interesting production is the film conception of Jules Verne's story 'The Mysterious Island,' which is being directed by Maurice Tourneur. This picture is to be made wholly in Technicolor, and underwater scenes will be pictured by Ernest Williamson. It is intended to have in this fantastic film about 100 men in diving suits under the surface of the sea. Some of them are supposed to have been dropped out of a balloon.

"Victor Seastrom, the Swedish director who produced 'He Who Gets Slapped,' is directing Lillian Gish in the picturization of Hawthorne's novel 'The Scarlet Letter.'

"'Tell it to the Marines' is a production being produced in cooperation with the War Department. The story was written by Richard Thayer. It will be directed by George Hill, and in the cast will be Lon Chaney, Charlie Ray, Claire Windsor and others.

A Robert W. Service Story.

"Clarence Brown is to put forth an epic of the Alaskan gold rush. It is entitled 'The Trail of '98,' and is based on Robert W. Service's novel. Pauline Starke, Karl Dane and Tully Marshall are to play feature rôles in this film. Of course there are a number of other pictures either under way or to be started shortly.

"The studio executive staff has been increased, and virtually unlimited authority is given to each departmental head in his particular sphere. All the executives eat luncheon together and at this time of the day discussions arise regarding the progress of the work entrusted to them."

The Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer directors include such names as King Vidor, Rex Ingram, Fred Niblo, Tod Browning, John S. Robertson, John Stahl, Victor Seastrom, Reginald Barker, Christy Cabanne, Benjamin Christianson, Marcel de Sano, Edmund Goulding, William Nigh, Monta Bell, Robert Z. Leonard, Maurice Tourneur and H. D'Abbadie D'Arrast.

HOKUM ELEVATED.

"Lord Hokum" has been decided upon as the title for Edward Everett Horton's next comedy feature for Associated Exhibitors. In this production Mr. Horton appears as the valet for a dissolute and irascible English nobleman, who through force of circumstances, while in America, is forced to masquerade as his master.

A last-minute title change has been decided upon by Marion Fairfax for her picture, "The Desert Healer." The new name is "Old Loves and New." The story was adapted from one by E. M. Hull, and the background for the most part is Algiers.

LOOKING BACK ON CITY'S WEALTH OF MUSIC

Programs of an Orchestra Season Qualities of Works of Modern Men

By OLIN DOWNES.

WITH the concerts this week of the Boston and Philadelphia symphony orchestras, and the special concert for which players of the Philharmonic have been engaged, the orchestral season in New York comes to an end. It has been a season, as was remarked last week in these columns, of brilliant performances and interesting musical personalities among the conductors, but one that was not overrich in the quality of the programs and the matter they offered the public.

For this conductors are not wholly to be blamed. Unquestionably most of the music now being produced is of so experimental a character that it is almost worthless and like shifting sand in comparison with the beauty and power of great compositions. On the other hand, a public should know what living composers are doing, and many composers have appeared since the day of Wagner who should have had a larger representation on programs that have dealt principally with classics, and a few novelties, apparently selected less with an attempt to discriminate than to put on a program "first time."

Mr. Mengelberg with the Philharmonic pursued his round of warhorses and works of the standard repertory, generally distrusting the unknown. Mr. Furtwaengler devoted himself almost entirely to well-known and thoroughly played German classics, and Mr. Klemperer with the New York Symphony did the same. Did these gentlemen believe that audiences in this country were unfamiliar with Mozart's "Jupiter" symphony or Beethoven's Seventh, or did they entertain the pleasing delusion that they were going to perform the symphonies with an eloquence unequaled by any of their colleagues? Mr. Mengelberg continues to cherish the conviction that Mahler of the Second symphony is not understood in New York, and needs to be, while Mr. Furtwaengler and Mr. Klemperer have the same earnest ideas regarding the symphonic works of Bruckner. We are among those who find much to admire in these latter works, but they are far from perfect in form or sustained in inspiration, and certainly they do not represent new and untried fields of musical expression. That Bruckner composes in the shadow of Wagner cannot be denied, and that his psychology is not problematic but very simple, naïve and noble seems fairly apparent. It is not a mysterious or incomprehensible matter. The music of Mahler is much less original in point of invention than that of Bruckner, in spite of its swollen and grandiose character and the sincerity of spirit back of the dots on the music paper. These works are interesting and in some instances stirring representations of a certain period in German music, but they are not new, they are not esoteric or incomprehensible; they may be and are, we believe, understood and valued for what they contain and are properly relegated to the position of by-products of the Wagnerian epoch and the time immediately following it in Germany.

Mr. Klemperer, greatly daring, introduced to his audiences the Concerto Grosso by Krenek. This piece was the exception in his programs, the classics being the rule. There was also the "Pulcinella" suite of Stravinsky and the same composer's suite from "Petrushka," but these last works were not new here, and the impression of the Krenek composition was unfavorable, to put it mildly. It was not felt that in producing this score Mr. Klemperer had made a discovery for his audiences.

Nor was the prelude to Respighi's opera "Belfagor" a discovery of importance. It was Mr. Damrosch who produced the most notable of the novelties given by the New York Symphony Society—Mr. Loeffler's symphonic poem "Memories of My Childhood," a work simpler in its idiom than other recent scores of Mr. Loeffler's, one which harked back to a period before he composed at all, but felt with a freshness that he has not forgotten. Other new works were Howard Hanson's "Lux Aeterna," Arnold Bax's "Tintagel," which was not important or nearly as individual as the same composer's E flat symphony introduced by Mr. Sokoloff and the Cleveland Orchestra, and Hindemith's dissonant but superficial piano concerto.

The New York Symphony followed an unusual and laudable policy in commissioning two American composers, Deems Taylor and George Gershwin, to write music for it. Neither of the works submitted proved of lasting importance. Mr. Taylor's "Jurgen" showed a far greater command of orchestral resource than Mr. Gershwin's concerto in F, although in this composition Mr. Gershwin made a marked advance in the structural sense over his previous "Rhapsody in Blue," which brought him to the attention of Mr. Damrosch and the New York Symphony. It seemed in each case that the composers were attempting to write in forms that were too large for them and in which they followed European models not suitable as vehicles for their talents. A new work has been ordered by the Symphony Society of Jean Sibelius for performance next Winter. Its title, we are informed, is "Tasiola—the Forest." Rights have also been secured to the first performance of Honegger's music to "Phedre" after the drama of d'Annunzio.

The programs given by Mr. Dohnanyi of the former State Symphony Orchestra, were distinguished by a rather provincial character of German and Austrian derivation. The great value of the Hungarian composer's services to the players who have now disbanded lay in his persistence as a trainer and his idealism as a leader. The novelties that he produced were inconsiderable and do not call for discussion. Had the State Symphony Orchestra been able to complete its season under Mr. Casella, there would have been many important programs, for Mr. Casella is a musician of exceptional breadth of taste and enthusiasm for what is interesting, regardless of its origin or period.

Modern Italian composers came considerably to the fore owing to the visits of Mr. Toscanini and of Mr. Respighi and Mr. Casella as composers and soloists. Mr. Toscanini's programs in their general character were more varied than those of the conductors who preceded and followed him with the Philharmonic. They were more eclectic, better balanced, more representative of orchestral literature as a whole, although new works by the conductor's countrymen were stressed. Mr. Casella's suite from his ballet "La Giara," and his "Partita" for piano and orchestra, given under Mr. Mengelberg, proved of unusual interest. The score of the ballet is racy and vivid in instrumentation. De Sabata's "Gethsemane," which Mr. Toscanini produced, was disappointing. Tomassini's "Tuscan Landscapes" was no better, if as good. Mr. Respighi's piano concerto proved diffuse and rather inconsequential. His "Pini di Roma" gave Mr. Toscanini occasion for effects of exquisite tonal beauty and sensational brilliancy, but the suite is considerably below "The Fountains of Rome" in musical value. Mr. Furtwaengler performed as a novelty the second suite of old dances and airs for the flute, transcribed by Respighi for orchestra, which had some of the charm and fragrance of the first suite that Mr. Toscanini introduced in this country in an earlier season; but the material was thinner. Martucci's "Notturno and Noveletta" made a charming, if unpretentious, pair of pieces. Other novelties were Roger-Ducasse's "Sarabande," which is very much Debussy; Rontgen's "Old Dutch Dances," two worthless excerpts from Richard Strauss's Intermezzo; Tansman's "Danse de la Sorcière," and the very Straussian and equally worthless "Visions" of Hermann Hans Wetzler. Thirteen novelties in all were produced by the Philharmonic.

Of the visiting orchestras the most prolific in the production of scores unfamiliar here was the Boston Symphony, led by the indefatigable Mr. Koussevitzky. His choice ranged wide. It included the very interesting "Chinese Legend" of Henry Eichheim; the "Symphonic Piece" of Henry Gilbert, the work of a composer who in certain scores has gone further toward the achievement of music genuinely American than any one else that this country has produced; the "Music for the Theatre" of Aaron Copland—these works by native composers; the "Concerto Grosso" for string orchestra with piano obbligato of Ernest Bloch; the Hindemith concerto for orchestra; Jacques Ibert's "Escales"; Prokofieff's Third concerto; the "Fragment From the Apocalypse," symphonic picture by Lidow; the suite from Rimsky-Korsakoff's "Tsar Sultan"; Germaine Tailleferre's "Jeux de plein air," and old works by Vivaldi and Gallard in orchestral versions and arrangements. Mr. Copland's "Music for the Theatre" was received with marked disfavor in this city, although a second performance of it modified somewhat the unfavorable opinions that had been created. Mr. Eichheim achieved considerable color in pages of his Chinese Legend, which, however, was not of sustained quality. We prefer the Henry Gilbert of other scores than the "Symphonic Piece" performed here this season. The Bloch concerto was on the whole the best written and the most effective of the new works, even though it lacks some of the power and color of his Hebraic music. Music by Russian composers was more conspicuous for tone-color than for inventive originality. The piece of Miss Tailleferre's was not striking. Some of Mr. Koussevitzky's novelties were worthless as music, though perhaps of significance as examples of the trend of the times. Few of them would have justified a second performance. This was accorded to the music of Copland and the concerto of Prokofieff. It was a laudable proceeding, which other conductors could well follow. If a novelty is worth something, a second hearing should promptly be given, and in many cases it would seem well to give unfamiliar music the benefit of the doubt.

The Philadelphia Orchestra gave such a repetition in a work that was almost a novelty, the Fifth symphony of Sibelius, and the result more than justified the proceeding. It was reserved for Mr. Stokowski to present, with Mme. Povla Frijsch, Charles Martin Loeffler's setting of the St. Francis "Canticle to the Sun," and in so doing to give one of the most important new works of the year. And Mr. Stokowski has one final bolt to shoot next Tuesday evening, in the fearsome "Ameriques" of Edgar Varese. It is said that in this score Mr. Varese has done his utmost in the direction of dissonance, sonority and generally drastic effect. This will be the final Philadelphian novelty of the season. One other new work that intrigued the fancy comes to mind, the Dance Suite of Bela Bartok, introduced here by Fritz Reiner with the Cincinnati Symphony Orchestra—a work full of unusual colors and moods. It may be added that in conducting the last two concerts of the season by the Philharmonic, Mr. Reiner showed a gift for program-making that was especially grateful under the circumstances. Mr. Sokoloff produced, in addition to Bax's E flat symphony, a work with strong and dramatic pages, Georges Enesco's music to "Oedipus." It is the visiting conductors who come to New York who have shown proportionately more curiosity and energy in producing new works than the leaders of the resident orchestras.

George Zaslawsky, Russian Conductor With the Philharmonic.

Listeners Have Their Say

To the Editor of The New York Times:

I wish to add to Mr. Olin Downes's article in the issue of March 28 of THE NEW YORK TIMES concerning the system of guest conducting, a very important point resulting from the system of engaging guest conductors for New York orchestras.

That many people go to the concert to see something is an old fact. To this class of music lovers a guest conductor may be of great attraction and therefore of financial help to the symphony societies.

Consider the performance of the prelude to "Tristan and Isolde" under three different conductors: what percentage of the auditors can differentiate with closed eyes between a Toscanini, a Furtwaengler and a Sokoloff interpretation?

For the connoisseur it is a rare experience to hear Sokoloff's interpretation of the Romantics, or to listen to Mozart under a Toscanini or Brahms under a Furtwaengler. Unfortunately we are all specialists, and every conductor has his special gift for the classic, romantic or modern school. He should try to construct his program as near as possible to his wishes in order to give to the audience his best interpretations.

Concerning the technical advantage of this guest conductor system, my opinion is that it has greater value to an orchestral body than the permanent conductor system, and is like the benefit which an artist pupil accrues who receives his training from different masters.

An orchestra is an instrument upon which the conductor plays; the more versatile it becomes the easier it is for him to impart his ideas of a composition to the audience.

RAYMOND KOECHLIN.

FOR THE "MODERNS."

To the Editor of The New York Times:

All these weary weeks I have been waiting for some one to offer an argument other than the one, repeated ad nauseam, that our contemporaries do not write music to compare with Beethoven, and for some one else to find some other reply than the one that genius has never been recognized in its own generation. Is there no one to point out that the value of contemporary production is beside the question; that it is one duty, among others, of an intelligent conductor to keep his audience informed of present tendencies in musical writing, and that this is a service for which an intelligent audience owes him thanks, no matter what it may think of these tendencies? True, he has to deal with people of various types of unintelligence—e. g., people who think that because they feel strongly they are thinking correctly and may impose the convictions and limitations of taste about which they feel so strongly on others. These people, instead of thanking him, write letters of protest, and not, mind you, on the infrequent occasions when he does his duty by playing Hindemith and Honegger, but when he plays Stravinsky's "Sacre," which is already a classic, and which, like Scriabine and Ravel, it is his duty to play as part of the standard literature. B. H. HAGGIN.

A COMPOSER-CONDUCTOR.

Felix Weingartner directed his own Fifth symphony with the London Symphony Orchestra at Queen's Hall, March 22. The work has been heard in Greece and Scotland, but not in London. The critic of The London Post said:

"His own symphony was a sidelight on M. Weingartner's virtues as a conductor. It showed him to be one of the most innocent of musicians. A mind so childlike in its creations must surely be guiltless of vice when it turns to interpretation, and M. Weingartner, as all can see, is singularly free from the common vices of conductors. Some of the themes and uses of his symphony are incredibly naïve. He leaps fifty years backward across the stream of modernism, and without shaping his ideas to a consciously archaic speech gives us little dulcet tunes and harmonies à la mode de Gounod or the student Sullivan.

"For his last movement, with perfect faith, he writes a fugue. No music comes of it, but it certainly brings him far nearer to our own times. The subject is bold and chromatic, and it was curious to note how its contrapuntal needs gave M. Weingartner's harmonic idiom an intensity of which no one would suspect the composer of the first three movements. It remains to be said that the fugue developed into a piece of brilliant orchestral writing and that the symphony in no way diminished our regard for M. Weingartner. There was nothing in it that could hurt."

Call of Festivals Oversea

WHEN the London opera season begins at Covent Garden on May 10, there will be no sharp divisions between the German, French and Italian repertory. The performances in the languages will be alternate. The Daily Telegraph remarks that the London Opera Syndicate's endeavor is not merely the hobby of wealthy people but a sincere effort to establish international opera permanently in the English metropolis. "Continuity is the key; whoever may be directors of the syndicate, they will strive to make opera indigenous." The subscription for the season is already far in advance of last year. "Figaro," directed by Bruno Walter, will open the series. Vincenzo Belleza will conduct "Falstaff," "Otello," "Mefistofele," "Barbiere," "Gianni Schicchi," "Jewels of the Madonna," "L'Heure Espagnole" and Massenet's "Manon." A complete cycle of Wagner's "Der Ring des Nibelungen" will be given, without cuts, May 11, 14, 17 and 19. There will be no other cycle of "The Ring," but a separate performance of "Die Walküre" will be given, with Mme. Jeritza as Sieglinde.

The following is a list of the artists who have been engaged to appear during the season:

Katherine Arkandy, May Blyth, May Busby, Noel Eadie, Fanny Heldy, Maria Jeritza, Gertrude Kappel, Lotte Lehmann, Frida Leider, Nellie Melba, Delia Reinhardt, Bianca Scacciati, Elisabeth Schumann.

Marion Beeley, Jane Bourguignon, Casazza, Enid Cruickshank, Maria Olczewska, Luisa Willer.

Fernand Ansseau, Luigi Cilia, Hans Clemens, Octave Dua, Charles Hackett, Barrington Hooper, Parry Jones, Fritz Krauss, Rudolf Laubenthal, Laurits Melchior, Francesco Merli, Angelo Minghetti, Albert Reiss, Edmond Warnery.

Norman Allin, William Anderson, Ernesto Badini, Philip Bertram, Feodor Challapin, Frederic Collier, Edouard Cotreuil, Eduard Habich, Otto Helgers, Herbert Janssen, Marcel Journet, Franklyn Kelsey, Victor Madin, Alfred Maguenat, Pompilio Malatesta, Richard Mayr, William Michael, Dennis Noble, Michele Sampieri, Emil Schipper, Mariano Stabile.

Première Danseuse—Penelope Spencer.

The conductors are Vincenzo Bellezza, Robert Heger and Bruno Walter; the stage directors, Giovacchino Forzano and Charles Moor; the musical directors, Percy Pitt (by courtesy of the B. B. C.) and Adrian Boult.

The Baden-Baden Festival under the direction of Artur Bodanzky will begin on May 25 with two performances of "Cosi fan tutte" and "Barber of Seville"—concluding with a concert of Brahms with Arthur Schnabel as soloist.

The Metropolitan artists who will participate in the above performances are Mmes. Easton, Bori, Kandt, Howard; Messrs. de Luca, Didur, Meader, Ananian, Chamlee and Bender. Mme. Norena, coloratura from La Scala, will sing the leading rôle in the "Barber."

The Munich Festivals begin on Aug. 1 and close on Sept. 5.

The Salzburg Festival takes place Aug. 6 to 29. The Fourth Festival of the International Society for Contemporary Music at Zurich will be ehld between June 18 and 23.

For the benefit of American music lovers and visitors to the European music festivals, headquarters have now been established for the Munich, Baden-Baden, Salzburg and Zurich festivals, where full particulars as to dates may be obtained and tickets may be reserved in advance. Jules Daiber has been appointed the American representative, with headquarters at Room 920, Steinway Hall, New York.

Mrs. F. S. Coolidge is sponsoring seven concerts of modern music which will be given in Europe in May; May 8-9 in Rome, works by Ravel, Pizzetti, Alfano, Jacobi, Jarecki and D. S. Smith; May 11 in Venice, works by G. Migot, Pizzetti, Malipiero; May 15 in Milan, works by Loeffler, Goossens and Pizzetti; May 21-22 in Brussels, works by D. S. Smith, Ravel, Bloch, Weiner, Migot, Goossens and Malipiero; May 29, Oxford, works by Loeffler, Alfano and Pizzetti. Among the works included in the programs will be Loeffler's "Canticle of St. Francis," Malipiero's new work, "Ricercari," for eleven instruments; Pizzetti's song cycle with quartet; Ravel's "Chansons Madécasses," for voice, 'cello, flute and piano, and Alfano's sonata for piano and cello. The performers will be Casella, Kindler, Fleury (flute), the Brussels Pro Arte Quartet, Miss Thursfield, the Venetian Quartet and others. Hans Kindler will conduct the works of Loeffler, Jacobi and Malipiero.

Singing Towers and Northern Songs Among Themes in New Publications

"Singing Towers" Old and New—Scandinavian Songs—Philadelphia Orchestra Record.

By RICHARD ALDRICH.

IT is more than a new edition that William Gorham Rice has made in his "Carillon Music and Singing Towers of the Old World and the New." (Dodd, Mead & Co.) His first book on the carillons of Belgium and Holland was published in 1914, just as some of the Belgian carillons were falling a sacrifice to the war. In this new book Mr. Rice gives much that he gave in his original study of the subject, but he has had a good deal to add. For one thing, several large and important carillons have been put up in this country, largely no doubt through the influence of Mr. Rice's enthusiastic accounts of the Old World bells and their charm.

Among the new chapters is one detailing the loss and damage to carillons from the war. They include those of the Cloth House at Ypres, of Louvain, of Arras and smaller ones; in all ten in Belgium and fourteen in French Flanders. But in many of them the towers are to be rebuilt and new bells will be put into them. Belgian carillons, indeed, by reason of the devotion of the carilloneurs and municipalities, are probably in better playing order than ever before.

Charming extracts are given from poems inspired by the "singing towers," many of them written during the war. The subject of music actually played on the bells is discussed. A noble function of the instrument, in Colonel Rice's opinion, is the playing of folksongs; the carilloneur who would achieve distinction must have this constantly in mind. But the carilloneur cannot forever be playing folksongs. His score has been extended in the face of manifold limitations of various kinds. There is available, first, a considerable and growing collection of original carillon compositions. Notable among them are the works of Van den Gheyn. A composer for the bells must consider technical suitability. "Even so great a musician as Sir Edward Elgar is slightly unfortunate in the piece he composed specially for the carillon. Because of the apparent neglect of certain technical problems the work as played on the carillon does not reveal its full beauty as music." Besides folksongs the carilloneurs have arrangements of preludes, sonatas, fantasias and a miscellaneous collection of movements in many styles composed originally for other instruments: dances, arias from operas, classical and modern songs, popular ballads. There have been chorales written to be sung in the open, with bells accompanying. The great carilloneurs make improvisations.

Mr. Rice discusses the American carillons that have been erected in recent years, largely through the influence of his book, and characterizes the New York carillon in Park Avenue as "in many of its features incomparable" and in many respects far in advance of its renowned prototype in Mechlin. This, and the carillons in Cohasset, Mass., and Morristown, N. J., are the most complete in the United States. Rapt by the contemplation of these and other fine carillons projected, Mr. Rice asks if carilloneurs in this country may not, "by the freshness of different backgrounds and different musical traditions, bring carillon music to an unconceived altitude of achievements?"

The Oliver Ditson Company's fine series called "The Musician's Library," now occupying more than a five-foot shelf, has been increased by the first of two volumes devoted to Scandinavian songs. The composers included, twenty-one in number, go in this volume from Alfrén to Kjerulf. Grieg is, of course, most numerously represented with ten songs, some of the best known and some much less familiar ones, which will be studied with interest. Some of the better-known composers whose songs are here given are Alfrén, Backer-Gröndahl, Gade, Järnefelt (who is a Finn by birth, though he now lives in Sweden), and Halfdan Kjerulf. Some of the best-known men have written charming and characteristic songs, which will be welcomed as additions to the available literature.

This volume is under the competent editorship of Reinald Werrenrath, himself a Dane by inheritance though American born and well known as one of the most excellent American baritones. In his preface he remarks upon the prevailing ignorance here of the recent Scandinavian song writers, all the more difficult to understand in view of the not infrequent performance of their instrumental works. Yet, as he maintains, "the most representative compositions from the North have been songs." His difficulty has been one of selection from the wealth of material that he found when he began to look. He has chosen for his two volumes—the second is to follow—a hundred out of more than 4,000 songs examined. The result is one that ought to be of much value and interest to singers and to help turn them from what Mr. Werrenrath calls their "contented plodding over well-worn paths."

In this, as in other volumes of the series, there are excellent portraits of the chief composers represented and brief sketches of their careers. The texts are all given, apparently, in the original tongues—Swedish, Norwegian, Danish and Finnish—and in English translations. The typography, paper and binding are all of the high excellence that has been maintained in this collection from the beginning.

"Twenty-five Years of the Philadelphia Orchestra, 1900-1925," is the self-explanatory title of a valuable record compiled by Miss Frances Anne Wister, who has been one of the most active workers on behalf of that remarkable organization. The book is full of interesting and useful information. The introductory chapter sketches the course of orchestral music in Philadelphia since 1757, when a "concert of music" was performed in the Assembly Room in Lodge Alley under the direction of John Palma, to begin exactly at 6 o'clock.

The beginning of the present organization was made in 1869 under Fritz Scheel, and the first concert was given on Nov. 16, 1900. There were, as there always are, some troublous times. There were even enemies and unpleasant comment. It was gradually overcome and the concerts became steadily more successful. Scheel died in 1907 and was succeeded by Carl Pohlig from Stuttgart. He resigned, being of "a difficult disposition," as Miss Wister says, in 1912, and Leopold Stokowski, the present incumbent, succeeded under circumstances that are not related in detail, for which it would probably be necessary to apply to Cincinnati, from which city he came to Philadelphia. What he has done with the orchestra and the fame he has given it throughout the world are known to all.

Chapters are given to the raising of the "seven-year endowment fund" in 1916 and the million-dollar endowment fund in 1919. Another chapter gives a list of some noteworthy first performances in recent years. In numerous appendixes there is other information, lists of directors, officers and committees, soloists and others, summaries of concerts played in Philadelphia and out of it—from which it appears that the New York series was begun in 1918-19 with five concerts, increased to eight in 1920 and to ten in 1921—and various other information. No doubt it will be more valued in Philadelphia as it stands, but there was an opportunity of doing a great service and making a great record, which was passed over by giving a complete list of all the programs. It has been done for the New York Philharmonic Society, and would have been highly valuable here. But, as it is, the book is an important contribution to American musical history.

A compact little book on "Musical Instruments," by Edgar Stillman Kelley is added to the "Study Course in Music Understanding," published by the Oliver Ditson Company. It gives much information about orchestral instruments, their origin and history and their present use, and is illustrated by many pictures and musical quotations. Mr. Kelley indulges in a good deal that is hypothetical and fanciful and there are some inaccuracies that are especially undesirable in a book of this sort. There is also considerable dwelling on minor matters which, though more or less picturesque, are out of proportion with the scale of the book. Mr. Kelley is especially interested in Chinese instruments, and his exposition of the pien king, the deedah, the chêng, the yong kim, the sam yin, the yee yin (or ur heen), the voe kam, the wong seo and the yu are likely to bewilder the seeker after elementary information, especially since none of them has any real connection with European instruments and only a chance resemblance to one or another of them. Mr. Kelley writes entertainingly and readably and his book will contribute, no doubt, to the better understanding of the forms and functions of the various instruments by which music is made. A valuable feature of the book is the list of references for further information at the end of each chapter. Some will also find the series of "questions for review" an aid in fixing the facts in the memory.

It is doubtful if any of the "How To" books ever tell the whole story, and there is probably something more than Mr. Buzzi Peccia has told in his little book entitled "How to Succeed in Singing" (Theo. Presser Company). There is, however, much good sense and valuable advice in the book. One of the best things the author does is to warn the pupil away from anatomical contemplation of the vocal organs, the technical conception of the tone. The vocal teacher who knows the mechanism of the vocal organs is not necessarily the best of vocal masters, any more than the piano tuner who knows all about the mechanism of the instrument is the best piano teacher. Nevertheless, Mr. Buzzi Peccia thinks it wise to give a graphic and technical demonstration for certain people. There are a very few pages of vocal exercises at the end. The rest of the book is given up to general suggestions: How artists study; répertoire; light opera singing; concert programs; opportunities, good and bad; stage life; going abroad; artistic business are some of the more general matters on which the author discourses widely and sometimes amusingly.

"Pierre Key's Music Year Book" for 1925-6 contains much useful information. There is a long list of musical societies and organizations in the United States; a list of musicians heard here early and recent; an account of the orchestras in the eleven American cities that have them; a list of local managers; then a long advertising section, frankly so called, devoted to different artists and organizations. Among the special essays that come in the beginning may be mentioned Mr. Key's on "Music in Retrospect and Prospect"; Ernest Newman's on "Music in England," Henri Prunière's on "Music in France," Adolf Weissmann's "Music Situation in Central Europe" and W. J. Henderson's "Some Truths About Singing." The idea of the book has novelty and merit, and it is well carried out.

Gala Music Events Afield

THE programs for the three-day festival of chamber music at Ojai Valley, Cal., April 16, 17, 18, are as follows: On the afternoon of April 16 the London String Quartet, assisted by Myra Hess, will play the Beethoven string quartet, Op. 59; the Frank Bridge string quartets, "Sally in Our Alley" and "Cherry Ripe," and the César Franck piano and string quintet in F minor.

Anne Thursfield, the English singer, will give a song recital of classic and extremely modern songs with Elias Hecht, the San Francisco Chamber Music Society and Irene Jacobi at the piano on Saturday morning. In the afternoon Hans Kindler, violoncellist, Myra Hess and Harold Samuel, pianists, will play Beethoven, Bach and Brahms sonatas.

The Barrère Little Symphony will give a program Sunday afternoon of works by Griffes, Hindemith, Haydn, Gluck, Rameau and Bach. The prize-winning quartet by Albert Huybrechts of Brussels will be played by the San Francisco Chamber Music Society in the evening, and Arthur Farwell's "Hoka" quartet, which ranked second, will also be heard.

The Springfield Festival, which takes place May 14 and 15, will open with a concert performance of "Faust," with Mary Lewis as Marguerite and Leon Rothier as Mephistopheles. The Boston Festival Orchestra and a chorus of 1,000 school children will provide the program at the matinee on the 15th and Marion Talley will be the singer at the evening concert. The Music Festival Chorus of 350 voices and the Boston orchestra, conducted by Emil Mollenhauer, will furnish the musical background for the artists at both concerts.

Ralph Lyford's opera, "Castle Agrazant," will be given its first performance in Cincinnati the last week of April, with the composer at the conductor's desk. The National Federation of Music, which is holding its Spring meeting in that city will attend in a body. The cast will include Frederic Lamont, Olga Ferral and Howard Preston.

The Federation of Music has now a corps of 21,000 workers. During the last twelve years the club has increased its audience from 76,000 persons to 1,500,000.

The Washington Opera Company will present "The Secret of Suzanne" and "Pagliacci" in a double bill at its last performance, April 15. The season, which was the most successful ever presented by that organization, included "Tosca," "Romeo and Juliet," "Samson and Delilah" and "Lohengrin."

The Philadelphia Civic Opera Company finished its third and most successful season with a performance of Wagner's "Tannhäuser." The season's répertoire included "Aida," "Jewels of the Madonna," "Faust" (in English), "Cavalleria Rusticana" and "Pagliacci," "La Navarraise" and "Gianni Schicchi"—the latter sung for the first time in English in America — "Carmen," "Rigoletto," "Samson and Delilah," "Tosca" and "Tannhäuser" (in English). Among the singers the following appeared with the company this season: Mmes. Elsa Alsen, Julia Claussen, Bianca Saroya, Marie Kurenko, Helen Stanley, Irene Williams; Messrs. Paul Althouse, Norbert Adler, Dimitri Onofrei, Henri Scott, Alfredo Gandolfi, Horatio Connell, Edoardo Ferrari-Fontana and Mischa Leon. Alexander Puglia was the stage director and Alexander Smallens directed all the performances. A drive for an endowment fund of $500,000 has been started and Mrs. Herman V. Hilprecht contributed the first $5,000.

The final concert of the Omaha Symphony Orchestra this season, Sandor Harmati conducting, was attended by an estimated audience of 5,000 persons. The soloist was Frances Nash, pianist.

A music festival will take place at Madison Square Garden May 23, to raise a million-dollar endowment fund for the first Jewish college to be established in America and which is now being built as part of the Yeshiva of America between 186th and 188th Streets on Amsterdam Avenue. A program of Jewish music, both ancient and modern, will be given by well-known artists. Adolph Lewisohn is Chairman of the Program Committee, while Gustavus Rogers is Chairman of the festival.

The People's Chorus of New York, L. Camilieri conductor, will celebrate its tenth anniversary with a concert at Carnegie Hall on Tuesday evening, April 27. All the five units, numbering some 500 voices, will take part. Mrs. John Henry Hammond will give Angela Morgan's "When the People Sing," to be followed by Mr. Camilieri's "If Any Little Word of Ours."

Mario Montana, young American soprano with Italian opera experience, will sing at the Westchester Music Festival, which will be held at Valhalla May 20, 21 and 22.

OPERA AND CONCERT EVENTS OF WEEK

Programs of the Week

NEW YORK'S long season of opera is ending with the present week, overlapping at this time the various symphony orchestra and chamber music series already closed. The Metropolitan's twenty-four weeks will reach the high mark of forty-eight different productions. To these Mr. Gatti-Casazza has added one other, a Brooklyn "Samson," while tonight's special concert performance of Verdi's "Requiem" puts the record actually at half a hundred, the exact figure contemplated before indispositions of artists made impossible the late abandoned "Cosi Fan Tutte" and "Rosenkavalier."

Following are operas and casts for the closing week:

Tales of Hoffmann, special Monday matinee—Mmes. Talley, Lewis, Bori, Howard and Wakefield; Messrs. Tokatyan, Didur, Danise, Rothier, D'Angelo, Picco, Reschiglian, Wolfe, Ananian and Gustafson. Conductor, Hasselmans.

Don Quichotte, Monday evening—Mmes. Easton, Egenor and Anthony; Messrs. Chaliapin, De Luca, Meader, Bada, D'Angelo, Reschiglian, Gabor, Ananian and Wolfe. Conductor, Hasselmans.

La Boheme, special Wednesday matinee—Mmes. Bori and Hunter; Messrs. Gigli, Scotti, Rothier, Altglass, Didur, Malatesta, Ananian and Reschiglian. Conductor, Papi.

Faust, Wednesday evening—Mmes. Mario, Anthony and Howard; Messrs. Lauri-Volpi, Danise, Chaliapin and Wolfe. Conductor, Hasselmans.

Goetterdaemmerung, Thursday evening—Mmes. Larsen-Todsen, Mueller, Branzell, Telva, Alcock, Roeseler, Kandt and Wells; Messrs. Laubenthal, Schorr, Bohnen, Schutzendorf, Altglass and Gabor. Conductor, Bodanzky.

Don Quichotte, Friday evening—Miss Telva as Dulcinea, Messrs. Chaliapin, De Luca and others as before.

Andrea Chenier and Petrushka, Saturday matinee—the former sung by Mmes. Easton, Bourskaya, Dalossy and Flexer; Messrs. Gigli, Danise, Didur, Malatesta, Ananian, D'Angelo, Meder, Bada, Picco and Reschiglian; the latter danced by the Misses Rudolph and Friedenthal, Messrs. Bolm, Bonfiglio and Bartik. Mr. Serafin will conduct both.

La Gioconda (close of the season), next Saturday night—Mmes. Larsen-Todsen, Branzell and Telva; Messrs. Lauri-Volpi, Basiola, Mardones, Paltrinieri, Reschiglian, Gabor and Ananian. Conductor, Giulio Setti.

Verdi's Requiem Mass will be given at tonight's "opera concert" with Mmes. Easton and Branzell, Messrs. Gigli and Mardones. Mr. Serafin will conduct the performance, which is a benefit for the Physicians' Home endowment fund.
